Fans welcome 'Cats back home

By David Svoboda
Sports Writer

It seemed rather fitting, really, that Whitney Houston's "Didn't We Almost Have It All" was blaring from an onlooking student's radio as the bus transporting the K-State basketball team pulled up in front of Ahearn Field House at 3:05 this morning.

Those in the crowd of approximately 300 that remained assembled on Ahearn's north side were there to greet their conquering heroes, a Wildcat team that lost to the University of Kansas Sunday afternoon in the NCAA's Midwest Regional Finals.

And as the bus pulled up and the fans moved toward the vehicle in all but a sea of humanity, Houston's words seemed appropriate.

Following a season that saw the team finish 25-9 and leave a trail of teams shaking their heads following upset losses, the most improbable of K-State seasons in recent memory was finally over. It was over one step short of the Final Four, one step short of K-State's first trip to "the big dance" since 1964.

But, despite any disappointment they might have felt earlier in the day, the fans weren't about to pass up a chance to let their team know how they felt one final time.

Those of the estimated 450 people who were in attendance at 1 a.m. who were still in attendance after a delay of more than two hours were very, very vocal.

And K-State Coach Lon Kruger, who addressed the crowd only briefly after leading his team into the locker room to unload its gear, wanted to make sure the crowd knew their support was appreciated.

"We wanted to do it for you very badly today, and we're sorry we didn't get it done," he said. "We told our players at the beginning of the year that when we talk about a year at season's end, we want to be able to feel good and feel satisfied that we've reached our goals.

"I'm awfully proud of this group. They're good ambassadors for you, and you deserve that."

With that, Kruger led his troops back on to the bus for the ride back "home" to Edwards Hall.

Those in attendance seemed satisfied with their brief glimpse at the team that had only hours earlier seen its season come to an abrupt end at the hands of their biggest arch-rivals.

The Wildcat supporters came out early for the welcome back reception. A group of four women from Clovia was the first on the scene, arriving at 11:45 p.m. with a banner that proclaimed "Purple Power — Go Cats — Clovia 87-88!" The banner, said Suzy Klinker, freshman in business administration, was made for the Midnight Madness scrimmage that opened the season last Oct. 15.

The crowd was upbeat considering the defeat. There were several anti-KU signs dotting the crowd, and the group grew a bit restless at about 1:30 a.m. when word began to pass through the crowd that the team's flight had been delayed.

When Troy Lubbers, student body president, addressed the crowd and said the team would not be arriving until between 2:30 and 2:45 a.m., many of those who had given a part of their evening to support their team decided to call it a night.

The arrival of local restaurateur John Falsetto with a trunk load of pizzas stemmed the tide somewhat, but only just over half of the initial crowd decided to hold on until the end.

Those who did were satisfied.

"We love you," one person shouted from the back of the throng. "You're still our champs," another chimed in. "Wait 'till next year," said another.

Next year, indeed. "This year" was finally over, but not before the love affair between the Wildcat players and fans played out its final act for 1987-88.

The team didn't have it all in regard to a national championship, but as far as the fans were concerned, it didn't really matter.

Bramlage Coliseum basketball seating subject of study

Editor's Note: This is the first part of a five-part series on Student Senate's Ticket Sales Task Force, its mission and the problems it is encountering.

By Jeffrey J. Bielser
News Editor

During the 1988-89 basketball season, an additional 2,280 K-State basketball fans will be able to see their teams in action in the new $17 million Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

The coliseum, expected to open in July, will seat 13,500 fans. Where those fans will sit is the subject of a current study by the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force authorized by Student Senate.

According to a bill Senate passed in November, the task force was formed because of problems encountered about the enforcement of the policy for selling basketball tickets by the Basketball Ticket Sales Committee.

"Several studies done in the past years have concluded that the solution to many of the problems would be to have a policy which remains constant from year to year," the bill states. "A policy which remains constant will allow students equal access to policy information."

A lack of consistency is one of the problems students who want to buy season tickets are currently facing, said David Whetstone, task force chairman and sophomore in preveterinary medicine.

The basketball ticket committee was created to enforce ticket sales policies, but instead started making policies. This caused the guidelines for ticket sales to vary from year to year, he said.

After tickets were sold for the 1987-88 season, questions arose about the number of tickets that one person, or one tent, could buy and about priority ticket sales to ICAT (I Contributed A Twenty) members.

"I suspect there will be some changes," Whetstone said. However, he said, he is unaware of what those changes will be.

"Once (the problems from last fall are) resolved, everyone will be happy," he said.

The task force members, who began meeting in February, have been studying other universities' ticket sales policies and are currently working on recommendations, Whetstone said.

"We've looked at several other policies, including a lottery and a first-come, first-served policy, which is essentially what we have now," he said at Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

"I don't think a lottery is in the best interest of the students, but we're still looking at possibilities," Whetstone said.

The committee will make its final recommendation to Student Senate April 24, an extension from the original deadline of March 24 set by the bill.

The alternative ticket sales policies not included in the recommendation will be contained in the group's report for the senators along with other information the group gathered, Whetstone said.

The bill that organized the task force required an equal representation of groups on the committee.

"The most important factor for selecting the student members shall be living group representation," the bill said. It also allows for one non-voting ex officio member from the athletic department.

The panel consists of four members from residence halls, four members from Greek houses, and three members who live off campus.

"I thought at first there would be some conflict between the living groups," Whetstone said. However, he said, that has not occurred.

The 11-member panel is formulating its policy based partly on the number of seats the athletic department has designated for stu-

Personalized tags found; Fort Riley men arrested

By Janet Swanson
Campus Editor

Two Fort Riley soldiers were arrested and charged with larceny Friday when military police found about 19 stolen personalized license tags in their possession.

All the tags had been stolen from vehicles parked on and around campus, according to K-State Police.

However, only eight reports of stolen personalized license plates had been reported to the campus police during the weekend.

Capt. Tony Kowalczik, Fort Riley assistant public affairs officer, said that military police found the missing tags.

"The case is still under investigation," he said.

Of the cases reported to campus police, six of the vehicles with plates that were stolen were parked on campus, one off campus and one vehicle's plate was stolen at an unknown location.

"The last time something like this happened we had 20 stolen in one day. It was traced to a fraternity from another state that was here visiting another chapter," said Rick Howard, campus police sergeant.

That incident occured at the end of the fall semester, and most of the tags were recovered, Howard said.

"It would seem that this is something similar," he said.

Two plates, SYNTAX and SCOOBY, were stolen from vehicles parked in lot A-28S. SOUTHPA, LILBRAT and an unreleased tag were stolen from vehicles parked in B-3. 2THEMAX was stolen from a vehicle parked in D-2, and I-PURRR was stolen at an unknown location. An unreleased tag was stolen from Denison Avenue by the Natatorium.

Campus police, Howard said, try to constantly watch vehicles that are parked in campus lots.

"We have 109 parking areas on campus. We're always out and about," he said.

Ron Lichtenham, dispatcher for the Riley County Police Department, said he was unaware of any similar thefts being reported to Riley County.

However, Lichtenham said if one tag is stolen from a vehicle, the owner must also remove the second tag.

"The name will have to be entered into the NCIC (National Crime Information Computer) system as stolen, so the second tag would have to be removed. Otherwise, the driver could be pulled over for driving on a stolen tag," he said.

Jackson wins Michigan race

By The Associated Press

A jubilant Jesse Jackson, fresh from a knockout victory in Michigan's primary-style caucuses, vowed Sunday his Democratic presidential campaign would continue to "win and grow." Michael Dukakis, meanwhile, acknowledged he had suffered a setback, but told supporters: "The sweetest honey is made only slowly."

Rep. Richard Gephardt, whose third-place finish in Michigan may have dealt a fatal blow to his Democratic bid, spent Sunday with his family deciding what his next move would be. If the Missouri congressman wants to seek re-election to his House seat, he must file by Tuesday afternoon.

Gephardt scheduled a Washington news conference today to announce his plans. Aides, speaking on condition of anonymity, had already said a loss in Michigan would finish his campaign.

Jackson asserted that his Michigan showing had put new punch into an already-powerful campaign.

"It was the message of the soul and authenticity of Jesse Jackson versus money and technology — and the people prevailed," Jackson told supporters at an airport news conference in New York's Westchester County. "It's a campaign of hope ... that will continue to win and grow."

But Dukakis said it was too soon to say how the Democratic race is shaking out.

"Anyone that thinks that this race is over or even that it's narrowed down to a two-person or a three-person race doesn't understand the unpredictability of American politics," said Dukakis, who had hoped to seal an image of "inevitablity" with a Michigan win. "There are no front-runners."

Jackson ran well across Michigan, but racked up enormous majorities in Detroit. In one of the city's congressional districts, Jackson's victory margin was better than 12-1. Overall, he outpolled Dukakis by a nearly 2-1 margin.

The civil rights activist quickly turned to the next battleground, heading for Connecticut, which holds its primary on Tuesday.

With returns from 94 percent of the voting sites in Michigan, Jackson had 107,689 or 55 percent to 55,337 or 28 percent for Dukakis. Gephardt had 24,995 or 13 percent. Sen. Paul Simon had 4,069 or 2 percent, and Sen. Albert Gore Jr. had 3,818 or 2 percent.

When Jackson got word of his Michigan victory, he was already campaigning in Wisconsin, which holds its primary on April 5. A statewide poll published in Sunday's Milwaukee Sentinel suggested Jackson and Dukakis were in a dead heat in the state.

Little American Royal draws large crowd

Showmanship honors earned by students

A fashion show for livestock.

Well, not really. But for the students participating in the Little American Royal Saturday, the appearance and behavior of the University-owned animals meant everything.

Held in conjunction with Open House, the Little American Royal celebrated its 60th anniversary in Weber Arena with a crowd of about 500 attending.

Approximately 130 students showed their choice of five different species of animals — beef cattle, dairy cattle, horse, swine or sheep — and were judged on how well the animals were "fitted" and prepared for the show. The conformation of the animals was not a factor during judging.

Participants spent time since Feb. 28, when they were first allowed access to the animal, preparing for the competition.

Dave Nichols, associate professor of animal science and industry and faculty adviser to one of the clubs sponsoring the event, said the Little American Royal had the most student participants of any event at Open House.

"It's very good to see this much activity," Nichols said. "(The students) have put a lot of time in at K-State."

Sponsored jointly by the Block and Bridle Club and the Dairy Science Club, the Little American Royal is organized and run completely by the students in these clubs. According to Nichols, the students work year-round planning the event, which is open to all K-State students.

"We'll have a wrap-up session next week to discuss what we did wrong this year and what could possibly be done to make it better next year," he said.

Annette Hoover, junior in pre-veterinary medicine who showed an animal in the beef category, has participated in the Little American Royal for all three of her years at K-State.

"You do whatever you can to make them look nice," Hoover said. "We got them (the animals) two weeks before spring break and ... have to teach them everything from scratch."

Other than having had a halter on them once, most of the animals in the beef category were unfamiliar with the atmosphere of a show ring, Hoover said.

Bergner, who has shown horses for 4-H, said she liked the opportunity that is offered by the Little American Royal to show again in college.

Mary Rogers, freshman in general agriculture who was showing in the dairy category, had only shown animals the previous two years, and was encouraged by a strong finish last year. Rogers is a full-time employee in the dairy unit at K-State.

"I watched other students and learned how to do a lot of it (preparation and showing) that way," Rogers said.

In the beef cattle category the Reserve Champion award went to Tom Krauss, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, and the Grand Champion award went to George Lorette, junior in animal sciences and industry.

In the dairy cattle category, Sheryl Funk, freshman in animal sciences and industry, captured Reserve Champion and Ron Rumford, sophomore in agricultural economics, was awarded Grand Champion.

In the sheep category, Shannon Seely, freshman in animal sciences and industry, and Matt Nichols, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, won Reserve Champion and Grand Champion, respectively.

Greg Doud and Clay Dalquest, junior in animal sciences and industry, won Reserve Champion and Grand Champion, respectively, in the swine category.

Sommer Weelsberg, freshman in bakery science and milling, and Bobbie Ward, freshman in home economics education, took the Reserve and Grand Champion awards in the horse category.

The Herdsman Award — judged on the basis of help to others and on individual effort — was given to Roger Hummel, junior in animal sciences and industry, in the beef cattle category; Lainie Miller, freshman in general, in the sheep category; Tim Parks, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, in the swine category; Mary Rogers, freshman in animal science and industry, in the dairy cattle category; and Ward in the

And what a fantastic year it was for the 'Cats

Thanks, guys, for a great season.

Even though K-State's hopes for a Final Four berth were dashed Sunday at the hands of archrival University of Kansas, the 'Cats gave the University much to be proud of over the past several months.

They were one of three teams all season (so far) to beat the University of Oklahoma Sooners. They sent Ahearn Field House out in style with a special win over the University of Missouri.

They oh-so-sweetly ended KU's 55-game home winning streak. What a game!

They set the streets of Aggieville alive and gave an indeterminate number of 'Cats fans hoarse voices Friday night with their decisive victory over heavily favored Purdue in the Midwest Region Semi-finals.

And they brought an immeasurable amount of recognition to themselves and the University in general. Everyone associated with K-State should be proud of coach Lon Kruger and his guys in purple today.

Oh, and one more thing: Tear 'em up, 'Hawks. Show the Final Four and the nation what Kansas basketball teams are made of.

Speed limit on U.S. 24 should be reduced soon

A freak accident occurred last week three miles east of Manhattan on U.S. 24.

The good news is that the two passengers escaped serious injury when the car in which they were riding reportedly swerved to avoid another vehicle, crashed and landed on its top.

The bad news is that although it was a freak accident, none of those living in the vicinity were surprised that it happened. Several residents living along the stretch of U.S. 24 between Manhattan and Wamego say they have been involved either in accidents or near-accidents in the area. Others call it an obstacle course.

Homes in the area are strung out on both sides of the highway. Yet the speed limit is posted at 55 mph. And, while the limit is 55, residents living in the area say few drivers pay attention to it.

It's time for some sort of action to be taken. People should not be driving "wide open" in residential areas. The posted 55 mph limit must be reduced, and drivers who aren't obeying the limit should be fined.

The two women involved in last week's accident were lucky. If changes aren't instituted, the next victims may not be around to complain about it.

Jackson's weekend win proves he's no fluke

It's time for the Democrats to contemplate some decisions.

In the wake of Jesse Jackson's decisive victory Saturday in the Michigan caucuses, what many Democrats believed would never happen has: Jackson is for real.

Until this point in the campaign, Jackson has been regarded as a respectable candidate whose campaign has no serious political aspirations other than emphasizing some of his issues, including strengthening social programs, reducing the national deficit and helping farmers.

Unfortunately, someone early in the campaign coined the term "unelectable" and applied it to Jackson. And it became popular opinion that Jackson was "unelectable" primarily because of the color of his skin, although most tried to mask that rationale by saying that Jackson's limited political experience made him unelectable.

Regardless, voters haven't listened. Jackson has clearly showed that he is electable, and an impressive number of people have said they will support him.

If nothing else, Jackson has certainly made the race more interesting. Not to mention disappoint those who conveniently expected him to fade into oblivion.

OK, confess: How many of you have ever witooned or dathered?

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

Sniglets are words that should be in the dictionary but are not. Here are a few schmiglets, which are words that should be sniglets but are not:

Dather — A mature person dathers by saying, "I don't want to criticize, but ... " or "I don't want to preach, but ... " and then goes right on to criticize or preach.

Latpop — Latpops are the kernels of popcorn that pop after you have emptied the popcorn into a bowl.

Nolemme — Relatives nolemme by arguing about paying each other back, all the while trying to force money into the other's closed hand or pocket.

Defoke — A defoke is the default joke. If someone says, "It's hot as hell," the defoke is: "Oh? Have you been there?"

Vanalan — To vanalan is to go nuts on the air guitar while the local band's actual guitarist plays numbly like a statue.

Rhy — To rhy is to hint that you could say something important, but then not say it, as in: "I was actually in the house once and ... well, I better not say."

Omniomni — An omniomni being is everything of everything — omniscient, omnipotent, omnivorous, omnibus. God is omniomni.

Oldil — To oldil is to pay with your oldest, most worn bill in the belief that the new, crisp bill you held back is worth slightly more.

Preeg — A professor preegs by answering a simple question with a review of the entire semester, all the time looking straight at you and forcing you to nod and say "uh-huh."

Lyron — A lyron is a real life chicken-and-egg problem, such as having an expired drivers license but having to drive to the examiner's to get it renewed.

Witoon — Students witoon when they get stressed out and talk about how great "Mighty Mouse" and other kids' cartoons were.

Disex — To disex is to not reveal a person's sex, as when saying: "My friend and I went shopping and they bought jeans."

Vamoose — Vamoose is the perfumed sawdust stored in Folger's coffee cans that is used to absorb vomit in grade schools.

Ediocy — Ediocy is turning on the TV, discovering the electricity is out, and deciding to iron your shirts until it comes back on.

Rasmirk — Rasmirks are looks which try to scare open a tennis court by saying: "I'm tough, I'm wearing John McEnroe tennis shoes, and I took tennis lessons."

McDepart — To McDepart is to not let the customer get in the last word, as in, "Thank you." "You're welcome." "Come again." "I will." "Have a nice day." "You too." "Don't let the bedbugs bite."

Centrophy — Centrophy is the tendency for conversations or columns to find their way to the subject of least effort, usually music or high school stories or Spam.

Fock — Fock words sound dirty but are not. Examples are gesticulation, uvula and wire.

Mismusicate — You mismusicate when you prove how cool you are by singing along with a song but come in on the guitar solo an entire verse too early.

Remusicate — To remusicate is to get stuck on a song you hate and purposely sing loudly a song you like to get unstuck.

Bowd — Bowd is the ability to flip rapidly through a book but still catch any dirty words it has.

Phlimphlamlet — Any brochure passed out as you leave Ahearn Field House after paying fees is a phlimphlamlet.

Warg — To warg is to nod in agreement to a comment which you did not really hear in the first place.

Soapamics — Soapamics is the science that studies why a bar of soap dropped in the shower always lands on its corner.

Igota — An igota asks, "What did you get on the test?" just so he or she can say, "Really? I got an A."

Totoled — People who insist on making "Wizard of Oz" jokes should be totoled.

Smass — A smass answers the question of "What's your major?" with "Spelling" or "Penmanship."

Pedilence — Pedilence is the awkward silence while the professor waits for the class to begin the discussion but no one will talk for fear of looking like the teacher's pet.

Telephony — A telephony is a telephone ringing on the TV which tricks you into getting up to answer your real phone.

Jope — Joping is seeing how someone's name would sound if they got it changed through marriage.

Toilisaver — The little piece of metal on public restroom toilet paper holders that keeps you from taking as much as you want is a toilisaver.

Honduran invasion

Editor,

Why isn't the Honduran air force bombing Nicaraguan Contra forces who have crossed the Honduran border? They have done so to Sandinista forces which allegedly crossed the Honduran-Nicaraguan border, as well as Sandinista forces inside Nicaraguan territory, according to some news sources.

The U.S. Government has made the accusation that up to 2,000 Sandinista troops crossed over into Honduran territory while fighting the Contras on March 16. More precisely, the Sandinistas "invaded" Honduras, in the words of U.S. Government spokespersons. Hence, the mass media has parroted the Reagan Administration terminology — just read almost any newspaper's account of the situation; and therein will be the word "invasion" unabashedly stamped as the official assessment.

If indeed the Sandinistas did carry out this "invasion" of Honduran space, what was their purpose? To lay waste this democratic bastion (President Reagan's opinion, not mine) of a country militarily fortified by not only its own 15,000 to 20,000 troops and the most powerful air force in Central America, but also by thousands of U.S. troops stationed there with both transport and attack helicopters at their disposal? By all means, decide for yourself.

I say the real invasion of Honduras came seven years ago when Contra forces, aided by the CIA, crossed over from Nicaragua to set up training camps and supply depots safely out of reach of the Sandinista army. In doing so, the Contras forcibly displaced (a polite term for "kicked out") thousands of peasant farmers who resided near the Honduran-Nicaraguan border. The vast majority of these peasants ended up, and have spent the last several years in, refugee camps under generally squalid conditions. Then only hope for regaining their land and their former way of life is for the Contras to move completely out of Honduras, permanently — whether that means President Reagan's "freedom fighters" actually braving the war with the Sandinistas they supposedly believe in so strongly, scuttling off to shelter in Miami, or surrendering to the Sandinistas and rejoining Nicaraguan society under the government's amnesty program which has been in effct for the past few years.

Before taking this Reagan-generated terminology of "invasion" as gospel, tune in your powers of common sense and consider who is at war with whom in the Nicaraguan conflict, where this Nicaraguan conflict should be being fought, and most importantly, who is suffering the consequences of it having been fought from across the "chicken line" of the Honduran border.

'Cats' NCAA balloon bursts

KU ends K-State's Final Four hopes; 'Cats fall, 71-58

From Staff and Wire Reports

PONTIAC, Mich. — Kansas dashed K-State's hopes of traveling down the I-70 road to Kansas City and the Final Four by winning convincingly, 71-58, Sunday in the finals of the NCAA Tournament's Midwest Regional.

Danny Manning carried Kansas all season long, but Kansas' role players carried Manning into the Final Four again. Manning, a senior and two-time All-American, scored 20 points, while junior Scooter Barry added a career-high 15 points and defensive specialist Milt Newton scored 18, grabbed nine rebounds and had seven assists in the Midwest Regional championship game.

"When I looked around the locker-room, (I realized) an awful lot of kids gave us an opportunity to go to Kansas City," Kansas coach Larry Brown said.

"Kansas was obviously the better team today," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "We played a pretty good ballgame for 35 minutes, and they played well and shot well and one of their kids stepped up every time they needed him."

So ends the Cinderella season for the Wildcats, 25-9. This win tally ties the 1987-88 Wildcat edition for the most wins in a season with the 1950-51 team (25-4) and the 1958-59 team (25-2.)

"This is a great group of kids," Kruger said. "I told Larry Brown that whoever won, a great group of kids was going to Kansas City. (K-State's players) are totally unselfish and have great habits. No one can appreciate them more than me.

"I was disappointed for our players, but I'm proud of them. They had a great season — one of the best ever at K-State. It was unfortunate that we were a loser (Sunday). No one feels worse than we do."

Kansas, 25-11 and the sixth seed in the region, will meet Duke, 28-6 and the champion of the East Regional, in Saturday's semifinals in Kansas City. The last time Kansas went to the Final Four it lost to Duke 71-76 in the semifinals in 1986.

"I think the team gutted it out and everybody did the best they could because they knew we lost some great players," Brown said. "I think they did it for the seniors."

The Jayhawks were able to overcome K-State's 3-2 zone which made it extremely tough for them to get the ball into Manning's hands. They were also aided by K-State's poor second half shooting. The Wildcats were accurate on just 32.4 percent of their second half shots, compared to 55.6 percent first half shooting. KU, meanwhile, shot 61.5 percent in the second half.

"They do a great job of packing it in, and my teammates stepped up and hit shots that opened things up," said Manning, who was named the most valuable player in the regional.

Joining him on the all-tournament team were KU's Newton and Kevin Pritchard and K-State's Richmond and Will Scott.

K-State led by two at halftime and extended the lead to 36-29 with 18:10 to play before the Jayhawks mounted their charge behind their two seniors, Manning and Chris Piper. Each made two field goals in a 14-6 run that got Kansas the lead for good at 43-42 with 13:51 to play.

"(Losing the lead) was more a matter of Kansas playing good defense and having players step in and make the good shots. We weren't able to counter like Kansas did when we pulled ahead (earlier in the half)."

Keith Harris stole the ball from Richmond near halfcourt and went the rest of the way for a dunk. Lincoln Minor followed that play with another steal, but his layup was blocked.

"Those steals gave us confidence defensively," Brown said. "Even though we only got one hoop they might have slowed them down offensively."

K-State couldn't manage to regroup, and the Jayhawks took their first double-figure lead on a layup by Barry, son of NBA Hall of Famer Rick Barry, with 2:08 to play.

"Coach said take the open shot because they had been sagging back on Danny," Barry said. "It was there, and I happened to pick this day to make it."

Will Scott led the Wildcats with 18 points. Richmond, guarded for most of the game by Newton, finished with 11 to match his season low which came against the Jayhawks earlier in the season.

"(Newton's) a good defensive player," Richmond said. "Everything I shot he tried to get a hand on. He did a good job on me."

Neither team managed more than a three-point lead in the first half until K-State took a 25-20 lead with 5:33 left on a drive by Buster Glover.

The Wildcats took a five-point lead on two other occasions, the last at 29-24 with 47 seconds left on a long jumper by Scott.

Barry made the halftime score 29-27 when he nailed a 3-pointer with three seconds left in the half.

"I thought Scooter's shot at the end of the half was one of the keys," Brown said. "We also worked the clock down. It was tremendous play, and it left us down just two."

Manning, who had 10 points in the first half, was unable to get the ball as K-State packed in a 3-2 zone. Of his five field goals, only one came on a direct assist from a teammate, and that was an alley-oop play with Jeff Gueldner.

On the other end of the court, Kansas was doing a fine job of keeping the ball out of Richmond's hands. Scott had the Wildcats' first four field goals and three of those were 3-pointers.

Richmond's first field goal was a 3-pointer with 7:23 left in the half and he finished the first half with just four points.

"They were running someone at me just like they did the other games," said Richmond. "They double-teamed me every time and made me give it up."

This was the fourth meeting of the schools, and K-State won two of the first three, including the game that snapped Kansas' 55-game home-court winning streak.

Kansas won at K-State and the Wildcats prevailed in the Big Eight tournament semifinals.

"I'm disappointed, but we knew it had to end sometime," said K-State center Ron Meyer. "It's really hard because the team grew as a family. Hopefully, the team will grow from this, and the seniors will go on to brighter things. Kansas played a great game today."

K-State 73, Purdue 70

The Wildcats' weekend started much better than it ended, as they upset the Midwest's top seeded Purdue Boilermakers, 73-70, Friday night to advance to the Midwest Region finals.

"My hat's off to Kansas State," said Purdue coach and K-State alumnus Gene Keady. "The kids did a great job and the coaching staff has turned what could have been a bad season into a great one.

"Even though we had a great season, K-State peaked and played better than we did tonight. It just wasn't to be."

The 'Cats erased a nine-point halftime deficit with a 12-1 run early in the second half, and went on another tear with a 12-3 run when the game was tied, 54-54, to take the momentum away from the Boilermakers, who finished the season 29-4.

"When K-State went on a 12-1 run, I saw doubt in my players' eyes," Keady said. "They didn't know Kansas State and its coaching staff like I did."

Purdue pulled to within two points, 69-67, with 1:29 left in the game on a 3-pointer by Everett Stephens. But the Wildcats made four of six free throws down the stretch, as the Boilermakers could only muster another 3-pointer by Stephens while committing two turnovers, one with no pressure from K-State's defense.

"It was a great college game," Kruger said. "Regardless of the outcome, I saw some good plays being made and some good decisions being made as well. I'm proud of our players. They maintained their poise after being down 10-0 against one of the best teams in the country."

Early on, it appeared the Wildcats were in for a trouncing similar to the one they received Dec. 20, 1987, courtesy of the Boilermakers, when they lost, 101-72.

"We wanted to put them away," Keady said. "We wanted to get 15 points up."

Friday, Purdue started the game with a 10-0 streak as Stephens hit two 3-pointers. Kruger was forced to call a timeout just 2:01 into the game, and the Wildcats responded by scoring the next five points.

"When it was 10-0, we regrouped," Richmond said. "Everyone got together and said we had to fight. We came back later in the game and knew right then we could play with them."

K-State got within one point twice in the first half, the second time, 24-23, with 9:30 left on a drive by Fred McCoy. Purdue opened the lead to 10 points again, 42-32, on a dunk by Todd Mitchell with 1:36 left. After a baseline drive by Richmond and one free throw by Purdue's Troy Lewis, K-State went into the locker-room trailing by nine points, 43-34, at the half.

A different Wildcat team emerged from the intermission — one which had confidence and was hungry for a win.

"(The Wildcats) are very competitive and we allowed their players to get their heads up," Keady said of K-State's second half surge. "We let them back into the game in the first five minutes of the second half."

"(K-State) got the momentum and confidence up and they started shooting well," Stephens said. "It hurt us. The beginning of the second half is probably where we lost the game."

Richmond led K-State with 27 points. Scott collected 17 points and was the only other Wildcat to score in double figures. Stephens led Purdue with 20 points, while Lewis netted 19.

'Cats' magic runs dry in un-fairytale-like finale

Commentary

DAVID SVOBODA

Sports Columnist

When you "dance with the girl that brung ya" every dance of the night, that girl is bound to get tired eventually.

That's what happened Sunday afternoon when the clock struck midnight for the K-State basketball team and ended the Wildcats' Cinderella season.

Forget for the moment, if you can, that the loss that ended K-State's Final Four dream came at the hands of the Wildcats' arch-rivals, the University of Kansas.

The team K-State lost to Sunday, when all is said and done, is fairly insignificant in the overall scheme of things. Sure, the KU win means we're going to have to suffer through a year or two (or 22) of listening to Jayhawk fans brag about how they kept us out of Kansas City, but the fact that we were even in a position to get there in the first place is all the more remarkable.

A team with no starter that stood over 6-9, a team with only two starters that averaged in double figures in scoring, a team that was picked by many to finish no better than fifth in the Big Eight Conference had no business being in the final eight in the first place, did it?

It most assuredly did!

The Wildcats, a team of overachievers led by a cool coach in Lon Kruger and a phenomenal star in Mitch Richmond, finally ran out of miracles Sunday, and a most remarkable season was over.

The emotional well that the Wildcats had gone to time and time again during this topsy-turvy season finally ran dry Sunday, and Richmond, who had been super-human all season long, was fresh out of late-game heroics.

A post-season that included wins over La Salle, DePaul and Purdue is something that K-Staters everywhere should be proud of. For a team that finished ranked No. 20 in the country in both wire service polls, the Wildcats certainly did a more than adequate job of turning some heads during all of this "March Madness."

Where the 'Cats will end up in the final poll, released after the Final Four, is uncertain. Maybe those big, bad Jayhawks will finish above K-State in the rankings, even though the Wildcats were 2-2 against Danny Manning and Company on the season.

Maybe the national press and coaches won't give the Wildcats the respect they deserve for having defeated seven of the 64 teams in the NCAA tourney. Maybe the press won't give the Wildcats the respect they deserve for having knocked off two teams — Oklahoma and Purdue — that were at the time ranked No. 3 in the nation.

Here's guessing that K-State will likely be ranked somewhere around 13th in the final polls, despite earning a trip to the final eight.

That seems only fitting for a team that seemingly had as much bad luck as good during this crazy season.

The Wildcats had counted on Richmond all season long to take them to the promised land, and when he finally ran out of gas Sunday, there was just no one left to pick up the slack. Friday night's emotional win over Purdue was the final miracle the men in purple could muster.

That they were able to muster any miracles at all is a miracle itself.

This is a team that at one time was 5-3 and looking more like an entry in the National Invitational Tournament (NIT) than a club destined for NCAA tourney greatness.

This is a team that was handed a 29-point thrashing by Purdue early in the year, only to hand those same Boilermakers a stunning, 73-70 defeat Friday night.

This is a team that deserved to be right where it was Sunday afternoon — in the national spotlight.

The season is now over, but several key things were accomplished.

■ K-State is now most assuredly back in the national spotlight in college basketball. Thanks, Lon, Mitch, Charles, Will and Co. for helping us get back to where we belong.

■ Richmond and Kruger got the recognition they deserved for outstanding perfomances all year long. Although Richmond was referred as "Milt" several different times during the tourney, no one's denying — regardless of his name — that he had one heck of a tourney.

And as for Kruger, his name is being mentioned as a possible candidate for the head coaching job at Texas. When other programs think that highly of your program, you know you've done something good.

And, by the way, it would be a real shame if Lon left. Stay put, my friend. You've given us all a coach to be proud of and look up to.

■ The Big Eight is finally being recognized as the tough basketball conference that it really is. Take that, Big East and Big Ten!

■ And, finally, school spirit is on the upswing at a University that needed something — anything — to cheer about athletically. Anyone who was in Aggieville Friday night knows what I'm talking about. It's not too often that you run around in the streets giving high fives to people and hugging total strangers.

Though the pill is a bitter one to swallow now, 58 other teams that had been in the tourney at the start were sitting at home watching as the Wildcats took the court Sunday in Pontiac, Mich., and made us all proud to be K-Staters.

And when all is said and done, the good feelings we shared collectively Friday night should help ease the pain we're feeling now.

The dance is over for yet another year, but it was one hell of a great time. Let's remember it that way.

Realistic approach key to 1988 spring drills

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

About 85 K-State football players are hoping the third time is the charm as they begin 1988 spring workouts today.

Coach Stan Parrish, who begins his third year at the helm of the Wildcat football program, is expected to greet about 85 athletes this afternoon, 33 of whom are returning lettermen (14 offense, 16 defense, 3 specialists) from last fall. Eleven starters from a year ago — five on offense and six on defense — also return.

The 'Cats will be looking to rebound from last year's 0-10-1 campaign, which included a 0-6-1 mark in the Big Eight Conference, with hope, not hipe.

"This spring we're not going to do what we did a year ago and try to get everyone's expectations sky-high. We're going to try to be realistic," Parrish said. "We have a lot of young players that we need to look at this spring and try to get the 22 best lined up at the end. We've lost very few players and hopefully we have matured a little bit."

One of the focuses of spring practice which will undergo some changes is the offense, with the biggest battle going on at the quarterback position.

"We have to maintain improvment offensively," Parrish said. "I feel that we made some (improvment) last year. I think you will see us throw the ball more. I think we need to take chances to win.

"We have a real battle with four scholarship quarterbacks. The job is wide open. We will be in a lot of scrimmage situations where they will get a chance to show what they can do," he said.

On the other side of the line, Parrish is looking to improve in a number of ways while working with a very young squad.

"We have placed the greatest emphasis on defense since I've been here," Parrish said. "Our goal is to increase our practice intensity and to become a more aggressive, more physical group. Once again, we have a bunch of new bodies to look at. Obviously we have to improve our kicking game. We had some chances to win some ballgames with the kicking game and we didn't get it done."

The 'Cats will practice through April 25 and will be going back to the basics to prepare the number of young players on the team for next fall.

"We're going to be very, very young so we are going to need to spend a lot of time on fundamentals — both offense and defense," Parrish said. "We have a lot of outstanding young players. We need to find out what these individuals can do.

"We have fifteen days of practice in pads to get some things done. We're not playing a spring game because we need the time on fundamentals. We need the time with our young players and to improve as a team."

On national letter-of-intent signing day Feb. 10, K-State signed 27 high school athletes who will join the Wildcat program in the fall.

"This is a big group of kids coming in. It's also a group that, academically, is very talented. I think it will give us exactly what we're wanting," Parrish said. "We have to go out and recruit another class next year just like this one. It will help us retain players and keep our numbers set."

The 'Cats' 1988 schedule includes non-conference home games with Iowa and Louisiana Tech and non-league road games include Tulsa and Tulane. In the Big Eight, K-State will entertain Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma State and Iowa State and travel to Oklahoma, Kansas and Colorado.

"We think that is the only way to get better is to play the tough schedule. When we play teams like Austin Peay, who we lost to last year, we have a heck of a lot to loose," Parrish said. "Our schedule will rank along with the more solid ones in the nation next year."

With the success and support in the basketball program at K-State, Parrish is hopeful that the support in the football program will follow into next fall.

"We'll ask (the fans) to be with us. We obviously, like every team, we need their support," Parrish said. "The atmosphere that the fans can create is important to a program. I know we will not have a full house out here until we win a few games, but we're going to attempt to do that. We want the fans, particularly the students, to give us an environment to play football in. I think there are a lot of godd young players in our program and nobody is more dissapointed in last season than we were, but the good thing about it is that it is over."

Leading the list of returning offensive starters are tackles Russ Stange and Will McCain, guard Eric Zabelin, center Chad Faulkner and quarterback Gary Swim.

Returning defensive starters include tackle Jim Oehm, noseguard Bobby Lawrence, linebacker Lorne Whittle and backs Erick Harper, Tyreese Herds and Marcus Miller.

Marshall helps KU's emotional attitude

By The Associated Press

PONTIAC, Mich. — Archie Marshall, a limping symbol of Kansas' rocky season, didn't play a minute Sunday, but got the first snip in the net-cutting celebration and an emotional hug from Coach Larry Brown.

Marshall, a senior forward sidelined with a serious knee injury, was on the bench in street clothes for the Jayhawks' 71-58 victory over K-State in the Midwest Regional final.

"I wasn't expecting to do it," Marshall said. "My teammates wanted me to cut the net down."

Milt Newton, his good friend and the man who took his place in the starting lineup, had 18 points, nine rebounds, seven assists and played outstanding defense against Kansas State's best player, Mitch Richmond.

The 6-foot-6½ inch Marshall had battled back from a right knee injury that sidelined him all last season and averaged 10.5 points and 5 rebounds per game before being injured.

With him, an NCAA tournament bid for Kansas was a good possibility.

In the 11th game, it happened again. After jumping for a rebound against St. John's, he screamed. This time it was his left knee. His season was over. Brown wept as Marshall was helped off the court.

"That's the most emotionally drained I've ever been," Brown said Sunday.

His emotions were intense again after Sunday's victory.

"I don't think there are many that have experienced the feeling that I feel right now," Brown said.

"We were 12-9 and thinking maybe we could host a game in the NIT," he added. "I wanted to find Archie (after the game). That's the biggest thing."

After Marshall was hurt, Brown said, he told Danny Manning he would have to assume more responsibility. On his wristbands, Manning wears the number 23, Marshall's uniform number.

"Archie is my best friend on the team," Newton said. "He was a real big inspiration to me individually. When he was in the hospital I went to see him and he said to me, 'Milt, they're going to need somebody to step forward. You've got to be the man.'"

"Milt's the man. You've got to love him. He's come through whenever he's needed," said Marshall, wearing a heavy brace on his left knee but looking ahead to the Final Four. "Twice in one career. It's a wonderful feeling.

Arizona blasts Tar Heels, 70-52

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Tom Tolbert scored 18 of his 21 points in the second half and converted two critical three-point plays as No. 2 Arizona defeated No. 7 North Carolina 70-52 Sunday for a berth in the NCAA Final Four.

The victory in the West Regional championship game, Arizona's 15th straight, put the Wildcats, 35-2, in the national semifinals against No. 4 Oklahoma at Kansas City next Saturday.

It will be Arizona's first trip to the Final Four but the second for Coach Lute Olson, who took Iowa in 1980. Olson, now one victory short of 300 for his 20-year career, becomes the eighth coach to guide two different teams to the Final Four.

All-American forward Sean Elliott led Arizona with 24 points and teamed with frontcourt mates Tolbert and Anthony Cook in a collapsing 2-3 zone defense to shackle North Carolina All-American forward J.R. Reid.

Reid, a 6-foot-9, 256-pounder who was averaging 18.3 points a game, made only one of four shots in the first half and finished with 10 points. Scott Williams led the Tar Heels with 13.

Arizona, which failed for the first time in the tournament to win by at least 20 points, becomes the first Pacific-10 Conference team in the Final Four since UCLA in 1980 and the first other than UCLA since Oregon State went in 1963.

North Carolina, which was looking for its 10th trip to the Final Four and eighth under Coach Dean Smith, finished 27-7 after its third regional championship loss in four years.

Tolbert threw in an over-the-shoulder shot while being fouled by Reid and sank the free throw to give Arizona a 43-42 lead with 14:09 left.

Reid rebounded his own missed shot and dropped in a basket to put North Carolina ahead 44-43 with 13:37 to play, but Arizona came back with eight straight points to go ahead for good.

Steve Kerr, who finished with 14 points, hit a 3-pointer to ignite the spurt with 13:23 remaining. Tolbert scored on a lean-in shot while being fouled by Williams and sank the free throw to make it 49-44, then made a reverse layup on a bounce pass from Elliott for a 51-44 lead with 9:58 to go.

Arizona went on to outscore the Tar Heels 19-6 to open a 64-50 lead with 1:58 left on two free throws by Elliott. The Wildcats held North Carolina to one field goal during that run.

Arizona trailed 28-26 at halftime, only the second time the Wildcats have been behind at intermission all year, but Elliott and McMillan hit consecutive 3-pointers in the first 2:01 of the second half to revive their sluggish team.

McMillan's 3-pointer gave Arizona a 32-30 lead, and he drove in for a dunk after a steal by Kerr to make it 34-30 with 17:39 left.

North Carolina then regrouped behind Ranzino Smith's outside shooting. The 6-1 guard, the only Tar Heel senior, hit 3-point shots to start and end a 10-4 run that put North Carolina ahead 42-40 with 14:30 to go. But Tolbert responded with his first three-point play to start the momentum turning Arizona's way.

The 18-point loss was the worst for North Carolina in the tournament since it was beaten 104-84 by Drake in the 1969 Final Four consolation game.

The Wildcats, meanwhile, had romped by Cornell, Seton Hall and Iowa by margins of 40, 29 and 20 points in their earlier games. For the season, Arizona has beaten its opponents by an average margin of 22 points.

Elliott was voted the outstanding player of the regional.

Jayhawk fans go crazy after win

By The Associated Press

Ten minutes after Kansas beat K-State Sunday in the biggest game of their 82-year rivalry, hundreds of happy Jayhawk fans were falling in line for precious tickets to the Final Four.

"We want Duke! We want Duke," they chanted outside the Allen Fieldhouse ticket office in Lawrence, Kan.

First in line were about a dozen people who watched the NCAA Midwest Regional finals with battery-powered televisions outside the ticket office door.

"This," said one, "is a dream come true."

An estimated 200 people had gathered at the ticket office within minutes of the 71-58 conquest of the Wildcats. City streets in Lawrence, practically deserted for two hours during this game-of-games in the history of Sunflower State basketball, were suddenly alive with honking horns and happy, banner-waving people.

"We deserved to beat them," yelled Jimmy Greenfield, a KU student from High Park,. Ill. "Danny Manning's going out with a bang, not a whimper, and this town's gone crazy."

Manning, the Jayhawks' two-time all-American, surprised no one with his 20 points. But Scooter Barry, a little-used reserve, surprised everyone with his 15.

"This just couldn't be any better," said Joe Horvat, a Kansas student from St. Louis. "We're in the Final Four — it's in Kansas City — and we get to get our revenge against Duke."

The crowd at Tanner's, a popular sports bar in the Kansas City area built around a Kansas-Kansas State motif, was "wall-to-wall" with people during the game.

"Everybody is either wearing KU blue or K-State purple, everybody in the place," said co-owner Tim Conrad. Waitresses weaved through the crowd offering to color their drinks purple or blue.

Wildcats finish 2-1 on Illinois road trip

From Wire Reports

K-State's baseball team concluded play in the Springfield Collegiate Baseball Classic Saturday morning by defeating Western Illinois 10-7.

K-State concluded the tournament with a 2-1 record after splitting two games Friday. The Wildcats came from behind to win Friday's opener against Bradley, 11-9, and dropped the second contest to Illinois, 8-7.

Bill Schafer (5-0) got the win against Bradley, while Zack Kimbell (2-2) picked up the loss in the Illinois contest. Junior Jeff Peterson came out of the bullpen Saturday to throw four and two-thirds innings of hitless ball in earning his third win of the season without a loss.

Offensively Saturday, the 'Cats got six extra base hits from three players. Jim Donohue, Scott Spangenberg and Mike Rosenboom all contributed a homer and a double to the K-State cause Saturday.

The Wildcats fell behind 4-0 and 7-5 in the contest. K-State did not take the lead for good until the eighth inning when Rosenboom and Donohue hit their home runs one batter apart.

The Wildcats are now 18-5 with two non-conference games remaining before making the trip to Stillwater, Okla., next weekend to take on the top-ranked Cowboys in their Big Eight-opening series.

K-Stater captures pageant title

The second time's the charm.

Second time? Well, that's what Kerry Tarrant, who was crowned Miss Manhattan — K-State 1988 at the scholarship pageant Saturday, is inclined to believe. Tarrant, a sophomore in radio and television, will compete for the second time in the state pageant at Pratt this summer.

"I would like to be Miss Kansas this year," she said.

Tarrant won the local contest two years ago and went on to place in the top ten at the state competition. A rule which keeps women from holding the title for two consecutive years kept her out of the local pageant last year.

Tarrant said she is confident that she has a shot at the state title, which is a step on the road to becoming Miss America.

"It's hard work at Pratt, but I know more of what to expect this year," she said.

Tarrant was chosen as a semi-finalist in the local pageant at the end of January. Six weeks of practice and hard work followed the selection, she said, adding that she put in 35 hours a week preparing for Saturday's local pageant. The majority of the time was spent playing the piano and brushing up on current political issues, she said.

Participants are judged in four areas: a private interview session, swimsuit, talent and evening gown competitions. The talent competition consists of 50 percent of the final score and each of the remaining competitions accounts for 16⅔ percent. Tarrant won the talent competition with her piano selection "We Shall Behold Him."

Tarrant netted a $1,000 scholarship upon being crowned Miss Manhattan. The first runner-up and the recipient of a $400 scholarship was Katrina Custer, a sophomore in musical theatre. Second runner-up and winner of a $200 scholarship was Ericka Foley, junior in mechanical engineering. Katrina West, senior in animal sciences, was named third runner-up and received a $150 scholarship. Fourth runner-up and recipient of a $100 scholarship was Kim Manes, a freshman at Manhattan Christian College.

Usually there is not enough money to give scholarships to the remaining seven finalists, said pageant director Nancy O'Kane, adding that their budget is comprised mostly of profits from ticket sales.

Scholarship is important to the pageant board, O'Kane said. The Miss America program awards more than $5 million annually in scholarship monies. Recipients have one calendar year to use the money, and they must turn in a receipt for proof they have used it for school, she said.

The importance of the talent competiton and scholarship are two differences between the Miss America and the Miss USA pageants, O'Kane said. Entry fees are required in the Miss USA program, she said, adding that the lack of an entry fee in the Miss America program means women do not have to get a business to sponsor them. The Miss USA pageant also requires participants to wear a uniform swimsuit.

Finalists in the Miss America program have no requirements as to what they may choose to wear in any of the competitions. Participants can alter their physical appearance, O'Kane said, adding that if one does choose to wear a padded bra in one competition, they "better do it in all three to maintain continuity."

The main reason for the swimsuit competition is to judge "poise, appearance, grace and overall physical fitness," O'Kane said.

While some pageant supporters said that wearing a swimsuit on stage is not exactly fun, they did agree that it was conducted in a democratic way.

"It shows the poise and confidence of a woman," O'Kane said. "If she can pull it off in a swimsuit, she can pull it off in an interview."

Third-runner up Ericka Foley said that although she was not thrilled with the idea of wearing a swimsuit, she was encouraged that participants choose their own suit to better flatter their figure.

Foley, who was participating in the pageant for her third time, said being involved in the program has increased her self-confidence and her competitiveness.

"It's just like anything else you train for, such as a sport," she said. "You train for it and you're ready."

SPRING INTERSESSION

May 16-June 3, 1988
Registration: April 25-27, 1988
Farrell Library Basement

INTERSESSION AT KSU— Spring

The three weeks between spring semester and summer semester are a special time at KSU — the weather is great, parking is easy, the frenzy of graduation is over, and life on campus is extremely pleasant. The spaciousness of the campus is a perfect setting for highly concentrated classes.

Intersession classes usually meet for three hours a day, providing time to focus on a subject in depth. In a survey of Winter Intersession students, 75 percent felt that the most attractive features of Intersession were the chance to concentrate on one course at a time and the opportunity to earn extra credits to accelerate their programs. Both students and faculty have found Intersession to be a rewarding experience.

Spring '88 Intersession offers 53 credit courses — of 1, 2, or 3 credits each — from a wide variety of departments and colleges within KSU. Tuition and registration procedures are explained below. Questions about specific course content or requirements should be addressed directly to instructors. If this publication doesn't answer all your questions, please call the Division of Continuing Education at 532-5566 (toll-free in Kansas, 1-800-432-8222). See you in class!

REGISTRATION

Intersession is open to KSU students and to the public. Prior enrollment at KSU is not necessary and registration is a simple one-step process.

Intersession registration will take place in the BASEMENT OF FARRELL LIBRARY; registration dates are April 25-27 and the registration staff will be available from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. those three days. Additional registration will be accepted from 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday at 317 Umberger Hall from April 28 through the first day of class. Tuition is due at the time of enrollment. (Some lab and materials fees are also due at this time. See schedule.) The decision as to which courses will "go" will be based on the number of registrations recorded by 4:00 p.m. on April 27. The go/drop list will be posted near the Information Desk in the K-State Union on Monday, May 2; go/drop information will also be available from the Continuing Education Registration office (317 Umberger, 532-5566).

Students unable to enroll in person April 25-27 may phone or mail in their registration. These registrations will be processed (in the order in which they are received) ONLY if spaces remain in the class as of 4:00 p.m. on April 25. Students may request a friend to enroll for them to maximize their chances of getting into their first-choice class.

Students are asked to check with their advisers to ensure that the Intersession class will meet degree requirements.

Students must show written evidence of payment of any financial delinquency to the university in order to register for Intersession.

BE PROMPT!!

Although registrations in most "go" classes will be accepted until the first day of class, students are encouraged to register during the April 25-27 registration period at Farrell Library. The "go/drop" decision is based on enrollments collected during that period. Delays in student registration could result in courses being cancelled; students interested in Intersession courses should register April 25-27 to be sure their preferred classes have a good chance of going as scheduled.

LATE ENROLLMENTS

A $10.00 late fee will be charged for enrollments after the second class meeting ends, but before one-third of the class meetings have elapsed. A late fee of $25 will be charged for late enrollments after one-third of the class meetings have elapsed but before two-thirds of the class meetings have elapsed. NO ENROLLMENTS WILL BE ACCEPTED AFTER TWO-THIRDS OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED.

COSTS

Tuition is $43 per undergraduate (UG) credit hour and $62 per graduate (G) credit hour and is due at the time of enrollment; tuition is the same for Kansas residents and for non-residents. Some classes will require lab fees, materials fees, or other costs, and these are indicated in the course listing. The lab and materials fees will be collected at registration. Lab and materials fees collected by Continuing Education are non-refundable after the go/drop decision has been posted (May 2), except for courses which have been cancelled. Travel arrangements, for courses requiring them, must be made with the instructors as early as possible.

CREDIT

The maximum credit allowed is four (4) hours per student. Anyone wishing to enroll in more than four credit hours must have written approval from his or her academic dean at the time of registration. STUDENTS WISHING TO SIGN UP FOR COURSES ON AN A-PASS-FAIL BASIS MUST DO SO AT THE TIME OF REGISTRATION, OR BEFORE ONE-THIRD OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED.

RETAKES

Undergraduate students may retake an Intersession course in order to improve the grade. Students must indicate "Retake" on the enrollment form when they register for the course.

AUDIT

Intersession courses may not be audited; all students attending class must pay tuition.

GRADES

Intersession grades will be averaged into the student's KSU G.P.A. Grades will be mailed to students beginning June 20, 1988.

INCOMPLETE POLICY

If an "I" is received during Intersession, and if the student does not make up the "I" during the first semester enrolled in a KSU course after receiving it, a grade may be given by the faculty member without further consultation with the student. If after the end of the first semester, the "I" remains on the record, it will be designated as "IX" for record-keeping purposes and will be computed in the student's GPA, weighted at 0 points per credit (the same number of points earned by a grade of "F"). The designation of "NR" (no grade reported) will be treated in a like manner.

CANCELLED CLASSES

No individual notification about cancelled classes will be made. The "go/drop" notice will be posted in the K-State Union near the Information Desk on May 2. Students may also phone 532-5566 after that date to inquire. Students who enrolled in a cancelled class may either register for another class or obtain a full refund. Students must report to 317 Umberger Hall to officially DROP or ADD.

DROP/ADD PROCEDURE

To drop or add a course, students must submit a drop/add form (or other written notice) to the Registration Office, Division of Continuing Education, 317 Umberger Hall. Students who fail to attend class may receive an "F" unless they formally drop the course. The library will be closed on Memorial Day, May 30.

REFUNDS

All refunds must be made in person or in writing to the Division Registrar, 317 Umberger Hall. A 100% refund will be issued if the request is received before the second class begins, or if the class is cancelled. A 50% refund will be issued if received after the second class begins, but before one-third of the classes have ended. NO refunds will be issued after one-third of the class meetings have ended. Lab or materials fees collected at registration are non-refundable after May 2 except those for cancelled classes.

LIBRARY HOURS

As a special service to Intersession students, Farrell Library will extend its hours of operations. Library hours will be: 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m., Monday through Thursday, 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Friday, May 16-June 3.

BOOKS

Textbooks (required or recommended) have been ordered for some classes and will be available at Varney's Bookstore at the start of Intersession. Information about textbooks is available from the instructor or from Varney's. Classes for which textbooks have been ordered are indicated with the letters TB at the end of the course description in this listing.

HOUSING

Overnight housing on campus is available to Intersession students at a very reasonable rate. Rooms in a K-State residence hall are available at $11 per person per night for a double room. Intersession students interested in arranging to stay in the residence hall should contact Phil Schlee, KSU Housing Office, Pittman Building, 913-532-6453, to request room reservation forms. Advance reservation is required.

QUESTIONS

Contact the Division of Continuing Education, 317 Umberger Hall, Kansas State University, Manhattan, KS 66506, or phone 532-5566, or toll-free in Kansas, 1-800-432-8222.

K-Stater captures pageant title

The second time's the charm.

Second time? Well, that's what Kerry Tarrant, who was crowned Miss Manhattan — K-State 1988 at the scholarship pageant Saturday, is inclined to believe. Tarrant, a sophomore in radio and television, will compete for the second time in the state pageant at Pratt this summer.

K-Stater captures pageant title

The second time's the charm.

Second time? Well, that's what Kerry Tarrant, who was crowned Miss Manhattan — K-State 1988 at the scholarship pageant Saturday, is inclined to believe. Tarrant, a sophomore in radio and television, will compete for the second time in the state pageant at Pratt this summer.

"I would like to be Miss Kansas this year," she said.

Tarrant won the local contest two years ago and went on to place in the top ten at the state competition. A rule which keeps women from holding the title for two consecutive years kept her out of the local pageant last year.

Tarrant said she is confident that she has a shot at the state title, which is a step on the road to becoming Miss America.

"It's hard work at Pratt, but I know more of what to expect this year," she said.

Tarrant was chosen as a semi-finalist in the local pageant at the end of January. Six weeks of practice and hard work followed the selection, she said, adding that she put in 35 hours a week preparing for Saturday's local pageant. The majority of the time was spent playing the piano and brushing up on current political issues, she said.

Participants are judged in four areas: a private interview session, swimsuit, talent and evening gown competitions. The talent competition consists of 50 percent of the final score and each of the remaining competitions accounts for 16⅔ percent. Tarrant won the talent competition with her piano selection "We Shall Behold Him."

Tarrant netted a $1,000 scholarship upon being crowned Miss Manhattan. The first runner-up and the recipient of a $400 scholarship was Katrina Custer, a sophomore in musical theatre. Second runner-up and winner of a $200 scholarship was Ericka Foley, junior in mechanical engineering. Katrina West, senior in animal sciences, was named third runner-up and received a $150 scholarship. Fourth runner-up and recipient of a $100 scholarship was Kim Manes, a freshman at Manhattan Christian College.

Usually there is not enough money to give scholarships to the remaining seven finalists, said pageant director Nancy O'Kane, adding that their budget is comprised mostly of profits from ticket sales.

Scholarship is important to the pageant board, O'Kane said. The Miss America program awards more than $5 million annually in scholarship monies. Recipients have one calendar year to use the money, and they must turn in a receipt for proof they have used it for school, she said.

The importance of the talent competiton and scholarship are two differences between the Miss America and the Miss USA pageants, O'Kane said. Entry fees are required in the Miss USA program, she said, adding that the lack of an entry fee in the Miss America program means women do not have to get a business to sponsor them. The Miss USA pageant also requires participants to wear a uniform swimsuit.

Finalists in the Miss America program have no requirements as to what they may choose to wear in any of the competitions. Participants can alter their physical appearance, O'Kane said, adding that if one does choose to wear a padded bra in one competition, they "better do it in all three to maintain continuity."

The main reason for the swimsuit competition is to judge "poise, appearance, grace and overall physical fitness," O'Kane said.

While some pageant supporters said that wearing a swimsuit on stage is not exactly fun, they did agree that it was conducted in a democratic way.

"It shows the poise and confidence of a woman," O'Kane said. "If she can pull it off in a swimsuit, she can pull it off in an interview."

Third-runner up Ericka Foley said that although she was not thrilled with the idea of wearing a swimsuit, she was encouraged that participants choose their own suit to better flatter their figure.

Foley, who was participating in the pageant for her third time, said being involved in the program has increased her self-confidence and her competitiveness.

"It's just like anything else you train for, such as a sport," she said. "You train for it and you're ready."

The topic is both timely and relevant; from last December's INF Agreement to Reagan's projected trip to Moscow this summer, arms control is at the very heart of superpower relations. Can historical precedents provide insight into the difficulties and possible
Purpose and scope of course: to examine briefly the history of arms control prior to the Twentieth Century (the previous attempts would include the 1766 Austrian-Prussian army reduction accord, the Anglo-French 1787 naval arms limitation agreement, the 1817 Rush-Bagot Convention, and the 1831 French-British-Austrian-Russian agreement on reducing armed forces to peacetime levels), and the reasons for a relative lack of success.
The course will focus largely on Twentieth-Century efforts in the area of arms control; concentration would be on the post-war era, with particular emphasis on U.S.-Soviet relations. The major subjects to be covered are: 1899-1907 Hague Conventions, 1920 Kellog-Briand Pact, 1922 Washington Naval Conference, 1925 Geneva Protocol (outlawing use of gas), 1930 London Naval Conference, 1972 Biological Weapons Convention, 1972-1974 SALT I, 1979 SALT II, and 1987 INF Agreement. TB

The second time's the charm.

Second time? Well, that's what Kerry Tarrant, who was crowned Miss Manhattan — K-State 1988 at the scholarship pageant Saturday, is inclined to believe. Tarrant, a sophomore in radio and television, will compete for the second time in the state pageant at Pratt this summer.

"I would like to be Miss Kansas this year," she said.

Tarrant won the local contest two years ago and went on to place in the top ten at the state competition. A rule which keeps women from holding the title for two consecutive years kept her out of the local pageant last year.

Tarrant said she is confident that she has a shot at the state title, which is a step on the road to becoming Miss America.

"It's hard work at Pratt, but I know more of what to expect this year," she said.

Tarrant was chosen as a semi-finalist in the local pageant at the end of January. Six weeks of practice and hard work followed the selection, she said, adding that she put in 35 hours a week preparing for Saturday's local pageant. The majority of the time was spent playing the piano and brushing up on current political issues, she said.

Participants are judged in four areas: a private interview session, swimsuit, talent and evening gown competitions. The talent competition consists of 50 percent of the final score and each of the remaining competitions accounts for 16⅔ percent. Tarrant won the talent competition with her piano selection "We Shall Behold Him."

Tarrant netted a $1,000 scholarship upon being crowned Miss Manhattan. The first runner-up and the recipient of a $400 scholarship was Katrina Custer, a sophomore in musical theatre. Second runner-up and winner of a $200 scholarship was Ericka Foley, junior in mechanical engineering. Katrina West, senior in animal sciences, was named third runner-up and received a $150 scholarship. Fourth runner-up and recipient of a $100 scholarship was Kim Manes, a freshman at Manhattan Christian College.

Usually there is not enough money to give scholarships to the remaining seven finalists, said pageant director Nancy O'Kane, adding that their budget is comprised mostly of profits from ticket sales.

Contestants await the swimsuit competition, one of the three competitions.

The newly crowned Miss Manhattan — K-State Kerry Lynn Tarrant walks the runway while the audience applauds at Manhattan High School auditorium.

Scholarship is important to the pageant board, O'Kane said. The Miss America program awards more than $5 million annually in scholarship monies. Recipients have one calendar year to use the money, and they must turn in a receipt for proof they have used it for school, she said.

The importance of the talent competiton and scholarship are two differences between the Miss America and the Miss USA pageants, O'Kane said. Entry fees are required in the Miss USA program, she said, adding that the lack of an entry fee in the Miss America program means women do not have to get a business to sponsor them. The Miss USA pageant also requires participants to wear a uniform swimsuit.

Finalists in the Miss America program have no requirements as to what they may choose to wear in any of the competitions. Participants can alter their physical appearance, O'Kane said, adding that if one does choose to wear a padded bra in one competition, they "better do it in all three to maintain continuity."

The main reason for the swimsuit competition is to judge "poise, appearance, grace and overall physical fitness," O'Kane said.

While some pageant supporters said that wearing a swimsuit on stage is not exactly fun, they did agree that it was conducted in a democratic way.

"It shows the poise and confidence of a woman," O'Kane said. "If she can pull it off in a swimsuit, she can pull it off in an interview."

Third-runner up Ericka Foley said that although she was not thrilled with the idea of wearing a swimsuit, she was encouraged that participants choose their own suit to better flatter their figure.

Foley, who was participating in the pageant for her third time, said being involved in the program has increased her self-confidence and her competitiveness.

"It's just like anything else you train for, such as a sport," she said. "You train for it and you're ready."

Pageant participation has decreased in the last 20 years. In the 1960s there were as many as 40 or 50 applicants for the semi-finalist competition, she said, adding that this year there were only 18 applicants.

"This pageant is not for everybody," she said. "Some will always think it's a sexist contest, but no one is coerced into participating."

To qualify for the Miss America program, applicants must be between the ages of 17 and 26 by Labor Day, 1988; a high school graduate by Labor Day, 1988; and must never have been married. They must also sign a list of requirements regarding their moral standards, including testifying to the fact that they have never cohabitated with a male.

Miss Manhattan — K-State 1987 Stephanie Ann Hoop relinquishes her title by crowning Kerry Lynn Tarrant, sophomore in radio and television, as Miss Kansas, Sherri Mayer, hands her a plaque. Twelve women competed for the title Saturday night.

Exhibit features landscaping

An exhibit of landscape architecture, "Design on the Land," is being displayed in the Chang Gallery of Seaton Hall until Thursday.

"More than a dozen outstanding examples of contemporary landscape design in the United States and abroad are illustrated through photographs and drawings," said Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture.

Included in the works are urban waterfronts, corporate offices, city parks, resorts, the National Arboretum and Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington, the Dallas arts district, and the University of Illinois.

The display is sponsored by the College of Architecture and Design. It was organized by Saski Associates, Watertown, Mass.

Student awarded fellowship

The final William H. Hickock Fellowship in creative writing for 1987-88 has been awarded to Lowell Bliss, graduate student in English.

The $500 fellowship is awarded to incoming graduate students on the basis of a manuscript of fiction or poetry submitted to the Department of English.

Gift funds new scholarship

A new scholarship for students in the College of Architecture and Design is being funded through a $10,000 gift to the University.

The scholarship will honor the University's first female graduate of the program, June Millard Hall. It will be awarded to native Kansans based on financial need.

Resource Center gains employees

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

A full-time director for the Women's Resource Center and a psychologist specializing in women's mental health issues for the new University counseling center are about to be hired, thanks to the efforts of the K-State Commission on the Status of Women.

CSW members noted these accomplishments and others in their third annual update on the commission's activities Friday in Union 213 as part of the "Friday Noon: Focus on Women" series.

The search for the WRC director should begin immediately, said Linda Delker, a graduate student and assistant in the FENIX office in Holton Hall. Delker said a programming and advocacy board responsible for improving services for women is also slated for the next fiscal year.

When the mental health unit of Lafene Student Health Center merges with the counseling center in Holton Hall this summer, the future coordinator of clinical services will be required to have knowledge and experience with women's mental health issues, Delker said.

The LaFemme Clinic will be staffed by a full-time director and an additional nurse in the next fiscal year, she said.

The CSW works with University officials to improve working and living conditions for women here, said Sandra Coyner, director of women's studies. Coyner said work is continuing with President Wefald on a policy to promote a non-sexist environment, and the commission is also expecting an expanded version of Wefald's policy on non-sexist communication.

A task force on sexual assault is working actively to develop an education campaign on rape prevention, Coyner said. The CSW supports a proposed change that would allow the University to discipline people who "perpetrate acts of violence," she said.

"This would be something new. It would say if you are raped on campus you have other options than just going to the district courts," Coyner said. "The University wishes to prevent violence from existing in our community and it will take steps to discipline people who violate these rules."

Other areas addressed during the one-hour forum included faculty concerns on salary equity and a lack of female faculty and administrators. Policies are being developed in both these areas, said Peg Wherry of the Division of Continuing Education.

The commission is also preparing correspondence to encourage Gov. Mike Hayden to appoint women to the State Civil Service Review Board. At present, the board is composed entirely of men, said Kim Hartnett of the personnel office.

"This has been a year that we have recognized some progress that we haven't seen in other years, and we are pleased about that," said Barbara Steward, CSW chairperson.

The CSW will continue to pursue unresolved issues in the future, Steward added. The commission will also conduct yearly public updates.

Joel Brinker and selected arborists prune the Louis Vieux Elm, located northeast of Wamego, for the second time of its life Saturday morning. The tree, estimated to be 275 years old, is the champion elm in Kansas and has formerly been national and world champion.

Service prunes state's largest elm

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

Standing alone, an American Elm tree strains to push its massive bulk from the Kansas prairie that spawned the seedling nearly three centuries earlier.

Saturday morning the largest elm tree in Kansas, the Louis Vieux Elm, received the second pruning of its estimated 275- year-long life.

The tree, located in Pottawatomie County northeast of Wamego, was first pruned in 1983 by volunteers who were solicited through the Kansas Arborists Association. This project was organized by Joel Brinker, owner of Brinker Tree Care, and Gary Naughton, professor of forestry.

"Some mistakes were made when the tree was pruned (the first) time," said Mary K. Brinker, Joel's wife. "Many big branches were cut that shouldn't have been."

For this reason, Brinker Tree Care was hired by the state to prune the tree. Certified arborists including her husband and two others pruned the tree, Brinker said.

Reasons for pruning the tree are for cosmetic and safety purposes, Brinker said.

Certain tree care techniques were used to remove the dead wood. All the participants in Saturday's pruning were trained in tree climbing using ropes and "saddles." Since these were used, no mechanized aerial equipment was needed and the tree and surrounding grounds were protected from damage, she said.

A major reason dead wood is cut away is that elm bark beetles, carriers of Dutch Elm Disease and the major threat to American elms, are attracted to dead wood, she said.

Joel Brinker said many trees in the area either have the disease or are very susceptible to it. To to see that this tree is healthy and resistant enough to live all these years means it is a special tree, Joel Brinker said.

"The tree is a survivor," he said.

Many people follow the tree and are interested in it. The Brinkers have been interested in it since they first heard about it in 1979, Mary K. Brinker said.

"Of all the trees I've been taking care of for the past 16 years, I'm most proud of this one," said Joel Brinker, who is also a senior in horticulture at K-State. "It's the most ntluable tree in the State of Kansas."

The tree is owned by the state with state and forestry Extension personnel from K-State responsible for the elm. Crews from Pottawatomie County take care of the grounds, mowing and picking up trash from the area.

The tree was reported to Gary Naughton in 1977 by Ted Cunningham of Wamego. The elm was perilously close to being destroyed because it was in the path of a new road planning to be constructed.

A new unofficial measurement of the circumference of the trunk was made Saturday. The old mark, made in 1979, was 23 feet, 6 inches and the new mark gained nearly two feet, measuring in at 25 feet, 3 inches.

The student section of the coliseum has been allotted 6,000 seats, said Athletic Director Larry Travis. This is almost 1,000 more seats than were available to students in Ahearn Field House.

Of the remaining seats, about 2,900 will be chair-back seats, 1,000 are reserved for faculty and staff members, and the general public has been allotted 3,600.

The majority of the student section will be on the east side of the coliseum, said Charlie Thomas, director of the coliseum. The chair-back seating, reserved for donors, is expected to be on the west side.

The decisions about basketball seating in the coliseum are made by the athletic department, Thomas said.

"(My input) will be from the mechanical side of it and not the decision-making end," Thomas said.

Field measurements for the chair-back seating have been completed, with the actual capacity being about 2,896, or 10 less than the anticipated 2,906, he said.

"Now we're mapping out the bench seating," Thomas said. "We had to build around the chair-back seating."

The chair-back seating area had the capability to expand. However, when the size of the coliseum was scaled down, that capability was removed, he said.

The chair-back seating was sold by the KSU Foundation before any other seats were sold, Thomas said. The Foundation was the first seller, he said, because it raised most of the money for the coliseum's construction.

"All of the seat options are not gone," said Dotti Downey, administrative assistant for the Foundation. About 1,226 options are not sold.

The Foundation began selling the seat options in 1983, she said, and the donors must have 80 percent of their contribution paid by June.

Donations for the section have ranged from $2,500 to more than $100,000, Downey said.

The size of the donation determines the contributor's option.

For example, someone contributing $5,000, which was the majority of donors, would have an option on two seats for 10 years. This continues up to the maximum of 20 seats for 10 years and then a renewable option on 10 seats after five years — all for $100,000.

"Most of the big donors are corporations who want blocks of seats for employees or clients," Downey said.

However, the Foundation would not release a list of the the 12 or 13 big donors. The Foundation, Downey said, protects "very carefully" the identity of its donors.

Downey said she did not expect all of the chair-back seats to be sold before the coliseum opens. And, she said, the remaining seats will probably be turned over to the athletic department to sale.

Mike Jones, athletic department business manager, said the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is expecting an increase in the number of season ticket sales. However, he said, this is not ensured.

"We are working with so many unknowns," he said.

One unknown, Jones said, is whether those people who have had courtside seats for several years will still buy tickets if they are moved to the end zone section.

"Ticket forecasting is a funny thing," Jones said.

However, "there isn't going to be a bad seat in Bramlage," he said.

Right now, the department is projecting that attendance at the coliseum will average 80 percent of capacity, or 10,800 people per game, Jones said. This figure projects a 5 to 7 percent increase in attendance for students, faculty and the general public over the 1987-88 season in Ahearn Field House.

"I think because the team is doing well, and we have a new facility" ticket sales should increase from this year, he said.

For the 1987-88 basketball season, the Wildcat Ticket Office sold season tickets to 4,873 students, 2,680 to the general public and 914 to faculty members.

Tickets for next year's season should go on sale in October.

Tuesday: Due to the cost of Bramlage, the cost of season basketball tickets may increase.

Some of the animals shown in the Little American Royal were later sold in the 11th annual Special "K" Edition Bull Sale.

The Special "K" is unique in that it is arranged by the Livestock Sales Management class in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

Taught by Miles McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry, the class is responsible for managing every aspect of the sale.

"The students do everything except auctioneer," McKee said. "The intent is to learn something about the selling of livestock — in this case, purebred livestock."

The University maintains four breeds of registered beef cattle — Angus, Hereford, Polled Hereford and Simmental.

The class is split into different groups — or committees — which the students indicated interest in. Each committee is responsible for a certain aspect of the sale. Grades are given on a credit/no credit basis.

Gusty winds cause damage to cars

By The Collegian Staff

Wind gusts of up to 58 mph caused wind damage to one residence hall and to at least three cars in the Derby parking lot Sunday.

Rocks blown from the roof of Moore Hall caused an unestimated amount of damage to at least three cars. However, K-State Police are investigating the possibility of at least one car's damage being caused by vandals.

Adam Peterson, staff on duty for Moore and senior in chemical engineering, said the first vehicle damaged was owned by a member of Moore's staff.

"It cracked one of the smaller windows in the car. After that we put up signs warning residents about the problem and did an all-call about the problem," Peterson said.

Emily Weinacker, director of Goodnow Hall, said one window on the hall's sixth floor and one on the fifth floor were damaged by the wind.

"We have funny windows here that crank out," she said. "Things like this happen five or six times a semester. That's why we try to train people to close them (in high winds)."

Set partly in picturesque turn-of-the-century Florence and partly in the gorgeous English countryside, this is a witty and strikingly faithful adaption of the novel by E.M. Forster. Gephardt drops out, Jackson presses onward

By The Associated Press

Jesse Jackson said Monday he expects Democratic leaders to embrace him as the nominee if he wins the most pre-convention delegates because "I would have earned it from the people." Democrat Richard Gephardt ended his candidacy, and Republican ex-candidate Jack Kemp climbed on George Bush's bandwagon.

As Democratic leaders wrestled with the implications of Jackson's overwhelming weekend victory in Michigan, Gephardt left the race for the Democratic presidential nomination at a Capitol Hill news conference.

"It's been said, the opera isn't over until the fat lady sings," Gephardt said. "Last Saturday in Michigan I think I heard her walking to the microphone."

One consequence of Gephardt's withdrawal was to edge Jackson ahead of Dukakis in the AP delegate count by one slim vote.

Most of Gephardt's delegates were shifted into the uncommitted category with his withdrawal. But Missouri party rules mandate that the at-large and public official delegates were redivided among the active candidates, when a contender drops out. That gave Jackson at least six more delegates.

Jackson now has 606.55, Dukakis 605.55, Gore 362.8, Simon 168.5 and uncommitted 515.6, according to the AP count.

Gephardt was pushed to withdraw by a third-place finish in Michigan's caucuses, far short of the "Michigan miracle" he sought to revive a candidacy that blossomed in Iowa's lead-off caucuses but was trampled in the South.

Jackson and Michael Dukakis both campaigned in Connecticut on the eve of its primary.

Congressman lacked local support

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., who announced Monday that he is withdrawing from the Democratic presidential race, never developed a campaign in this region of Kansas.

"He's never had an active presence here," said Riley County Democratic chairwoman Linda Morse. "When we had our caucuses here on March 19, no one in the whole county came in support of Gephardt — out of 264 people present."

Both Democratic representatives of Kansas, Dan Glickman and Jim Slattery, endorsed Gephardt. So, with congressional district caucuses on April 23, they will either have to choose another candidate to endorse or go without committing to a specific candidate, Morse said.

"My guess is I'll go uncommitted if I go," Glickman said.

Glickman reacted to the announcement by saying "I'm very sorry. He's a good guy. But, I understand he'll be running for a House seat, so we'll at least have

Strike, unrest continue
Marchers sprayed in Panama

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Police and soldiers using shotguns, rubber truncheons and tear gas broke up a march Monday by thousands of opponents of Panama's strongman, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, and arrested five of the protest leaders.

Soldiers later surrounded the Marriott Hotel, used as a base by many foreign journalists and as a headquarters by the opposition National Civic Crusade. There were reports that crusade leaders were arrested and cameras and equipment confiscated from reporters, photographers and television crews.

Meanwhile, a general strike that has closed down an estimated 90 percent of Panama's industry and commerce entered its second week.

Ignoring an order to disperse, a crowd of more than 10,000 cheering, singing people marched about half a mile toward the capital's central business district Monday afternoon before being attacked by soldiers.

A water cannon, a tanker truck fitted with a revolving turret atop its cab, sped through the line of march spraying people with a choking mixture of waters and chemicals.

Behind the truck charged police and soldiers firing birdshot and beating people with 18-inch truncheons.

Reporters saw several people hit by shotgun pellets but there was no official account of injuries or arrests.

The fleeing protesters left a trail of shoes, mostly women's pumps unfit for running. Reporters saw at least two people trampled in the rush, including a woman who suffered a compound leg fracture.

Jose Faundes, secretary of the Panamanian Human Rights Commission, identified the five detained protest leaders as Carlos Gonzalez de la Lastra, Alberto Aleman, Roberto Aleman, Roberto Roy and Frank Maurice. He said Gonzalez was arrested when he went to army headquarters to inquire about the other four.

Faundes said the four were leaving the scene of the march in a car when they were stopped by a paramilitary squad.

Before the march began, Lt. Col. Virgilio Mirones of the Panama Defense Forces urged the protesters to disperse.

"We don't want to fight with the Panamanian people," the officer said through a megaphone. "We want to fight the United States."

But the swelling crowd jeered at him, shouting, "Join us, join us" and "Noriega must go."

The United States has called for Noriega's ouster since he was indicted in Florida in February on drug-trafficking charges.

Kite flight

Joe Young, freshman in chemistry, pulls on his kite's string to control it against strong winds Monday afternoon at the rugby practice field, north of the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area. Northerly gusts guided his kite (bottom kite in top photo) near his friend's kite. Monday's blustery weather will continue today, bringing gusty winds, rain and cool temperatures to the Manhattan area.

The government's role in disciplining the marketplace will be discussed by Stanley Cohen during his Lou Douglas Lecture at 7:30 tonight in Union Forum Hall.

"He (Cohen) will help us understand the difference between good and bad government as it affects those functioning in the marketplace: advertisers, buyers and sellers," said Dick Morse, professor of economics.

Cohen, London editor of Focus magazine, will discuss "The Marketplace as the Arbiter of the Public Interest" during the lecture, which is sponsored by the University For Man.

Since 1984, Cohen has worked in London for Focus, a monthly business magazine for marketing executives in the Pan-European market. He is responsible for covering the advertising and marketing news in 17 Western European countries.

During the 40 years Cohen was based in Washington for Crain Communications Inc., publisher of Focus, he wrote on consumerism issues in response to modern marketing practices.

"He's been around Washington since Roosevelt ... looking at Republicans, Democrats, Liberals and Conservatives, interpreting what they've said. In that role, he has made a good many observations," Morse said.

Cohen holds his audience with steady speech, but "captures them with wisdom," Morse said.

The Lou Douglas series was instituted in 1980 to honor Lou Douglas, a professor of political science whose work and efforts in pursuing justice and equality for all people are respected and admired by those of all political persuasions.

The annual lectures have provided perspectives on critical public issues.

Dole nears quitting point in last hurrah of campaign

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bob Dole, stopping short of quitting the presidential race in what looked and sounded like a last hurrah for his campaign workers, said Monday that the Republican Party should "cast off the restrictions of privilege and class."

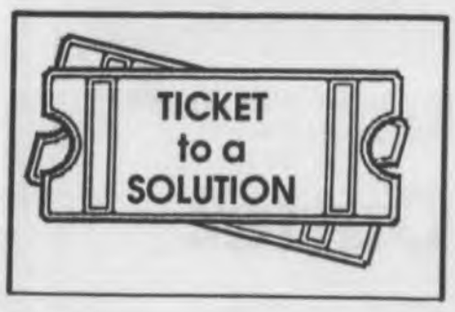
The Kansas senator made no mention of Vice President George Bush, the front-runner for the Republican nomination, and left the ballroom of a downtown hotel without talking to reporters. He posed for individual souvenir pictures with some of his supporters.

"I have stated repeatedly ... if my campaign did nothing else, it would make clear that our party would never practice the politics of exclusion," Dole told 450 campaign workers and volunteers.

For the Republican Party to retain the White House, "we have to convince more women, more young people, Americans of every color and ethnic background, the disadvantaged, the disabled, independents and Democrats not only to vote Republican ... but to become committed party members," he said.

The Democratic Party "has lost its sense of purpose and its sense of direction ... in a mire of special interests," but still only 32 percent of Americans identify themselves as Republicans, he added.

To become a majority party, the GOP must open its doors "to new legions of Hispanic voters, blacks, Asian-Americans and other ethnic groups," as well as blue-collar workers, evangelicals and other conservatives who voted for Ronald Reagan, he said.



"We must cast off the restrictions of privilege and class. We must offer help to those who need it. We must support and defend civil rights," said Dole. "Our leaders should not be timid about discussing issues that affect the homeless and the hungry."

Dole, joined by his wife, Elizabeth, and daughter, Robin, said the purpose of the gathering was to thank his campaign workers and to outline his vision for the future of the GOP.

He joked at the outset that he "stepped on my own story" on Friday when he acknowledged to reporters that his race against Bush appears lost. Dole had told the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, "it's probably a foregone conclusion what's happening on the Republican side."

Mari Maseng, a Dole spokeswoman, said Monday's speech was the last of three Dole planned to make to stress key issues in his campaign: foreign policy, deficit reduction and the future of the GOP.

Season ticket price may rise to prevent budget cuts

Editor's Note: This is the second part of a five-part series on Student Senate's Ticket Sales Task Force, its mission and the problems it is encountering.

By Chad L. Sanborn
Staff Writer

The Fred Bramlage Coliseum may turn out to be a white elephant for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

In hopes of preventing an overextension of the department's budget, the price of men's season basketball tickets has been tentatively raised.

Prices have been raised from $35 to $49 for students, from $75 to $84 for faculty, and from $99 to $133 or $140 for the public. The public tickets sold for $140 will be in the chair-back section.

Despite these increases, the department may have to cut programs within its budget to cover the construction costs if enough season tickets are not sold, said Mike Jones, athletic department administrative assistant.

"To pay off (moving) costs when we move to the coliseum, we may have to make budget cuts in several areas," he said. "Hopefully we increased ticket prices enough so that won't happen."

Jones said he did not know where the cuts might be made if they are needed. In the past, the department has cut administrative costs, but it is too early for such a decision to be made, he said.

However, in light of the basketball team's finish this year, it is unlikely the athletic department will experience poor season-ticket sales for the 1988-89 season. However, Jones said poor season-ticket sales next year could leave the athletic department with almost no funds to pay for moving expenses, administrative costs and utilities.

In addition to these bills, the department has another outstanding debt — its $2 million dollar share of the $17.2 million coliseum costs.

The KSU Foundation is footing $8.2 million of the coliseum's costs through gifts and donations that have been collected. Student fees will cover the remaining $7 million.

The students' contributions had been put into revenue bonds that ran out in July 1987. The students' contributions were the first portion to be issued and guaranteed to be collected. The fees are prohibited from being invested to draw interest, said Les Longberg, Foundation controller.

After using the fees, the Foundation began paying the bonds with gifts, donations and investment earnings. Longberg said the cash flow from these sources should only last until 1989.

"The end can't be too far away," he said.

Nicaraguans plan cease-fire

SAPOA, Nicaragua — Sandinista government and Contra negotiators met for two hours in this border outpost Monday to work out details for a 60-day cease-fire outlined in the peace accord they signed unexpectedly last week.

They are considering the areas where the Contra rebels will gather during the truce, which is to begin April 1 under the accord signed Wednesday night.

Further high-level negotiations aimed at reaching a more permanent truce are tentatively scheduled for April 6 in Managua, the capital.

After about two hours of discussions, the talks were recessed until today. The start was delayed by the late arrival of the Contra negotiators, who entered Sapoa in mid-afternoon in two vans and two cars from the Costa Rican side of the border.

Man kills 5 in Czechoslovakia

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — A 21-year-old man killed five people and then took his own life, leaving a letter confessing to the crimes, a newspaper reported Monday.

The bodies of a woman, her two teen-age daughters, and her 77-year-old mother were found at the home of the man, identified only as Jiri Z., according to the daily newspaper Prace. A 56-year-old man also was found murdered at his own home 25 miles east of Prague.

The murderer committed suicide with a stolen hunting rifle, the newspaper said.

The newspaper said jealousy appeared to be the motive, but gave no other details.

Record price paid for painting

LONDON — One of Amedeo Modigliani's last paintings sold for a record $9 million Monday at an auction of Impressionist and modern art.

The oil painting, which set a record for the Italian artist, portrayed Greek composer Marios Vavoglis and was completed in January 1920, days before Modigliani died in Paris at age 36.

An anonymous buyer purchased the simple painting, called "Portrait of Mario," which had been put on the auction block by an anonymous owner, Christie's said.

It had been estimated to sell for $3.7 million to $4.65 million. The previous record price for a Modigliani was $7.62 million.

U.S. warship to transit canal

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon, breaking its normal silence about ship movements, said Monday the helicopter carrier USS Okinawa would begin a transit of the Panama Canal on Tuesday.

The Defense Department described the movement in a statement as "routine" and something "which has been planned for several months."

The Pentagon said the statement was issued in hopes of avoiding rumors and speculation in Panama about the carrier's presence in the waterway.

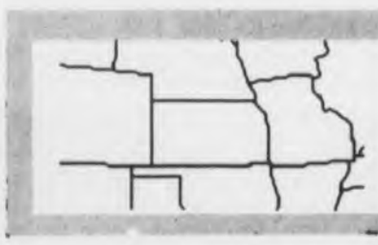
The Reagan administration has been applying economic pressure in hopes of ousting strongman Gen. Manuel A. Noriega, but has made clear it is not taking any military moves against the general.

Newspaper asks Koch to resign

NEW YORK — On Feb. 15, 1986, the Amsterdam News printed a front-page editorial calling upon Mayor Edward I. Koch to resign.

Koch ignored it.

He also ignored the next week's editorial, and the one after that. He has now ignored 110 consecutive editorials on the front page of New York's oldest black newspaper, each broadside demanding that he leave office.



"Mr. Koch is incredible. Every week he gives me something new, something outrageous, something wrong" to write about, says Wilbert A. Tatum, author of the editorials and editor-in-chief of the 40,000-circulation weekly.

While the Amsterdam News generally comes down on the left side of the political spectrum, it is considered the establishment black newspaper, less radical than some others published in the city.

Koch is "mean-spirited and vindictive," Tatum wrote (March 8, 1986). He "postures, preens and pontificates as he poses and pretends to be mayor of all the people of New York City," Tatum declared (Jan. 3, 1987).

Koch plays it cool. "The mayor's not commenting. He's just going to let Tatum have his say," said a Koch spokesman, Larry Simonberg.

Though the common wisdom is that Koch is safely ensconced in City Hall, Tatum is convinced that he is making headway. He says the citywide papers seem to be edging his way; he says he is often accosted by people of all races who say, "Keep it up."

Elders to plan Swaggart's fate

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — A compromise plan may have been on the floor Monday when national elders of the Assemblies of God began two days of discussion of the Jimmy Swaggart case, though the plan did not win the endorsement of the church's board of directors.

Swaggart, a Baton Rouge, La., evangelist with a worldwide following, stepped down from his pulpit Feb. 21 after confessing to unspecified sins. Subsequent reports linked Swaggart to a prostitute.

Officials of the Louisiana District of the Assemblies of God have insisted on a plan for Swaggart's rehabilitation that would bar him from the pulpit for three months, though officials say every other Assemblies minister who has confessed to moral failure has been barred from the pulpit for at least a year.

The 232-member General Presbytery of the Pentecostal church, which will have the final say on Swaggart's rehabilitation, was expected to vote on the matter today.

The Springfield News-Leader reported in a copyright story Monday that a Little Rock, Ark., lawyer and Assemblies member had helped work out a plan that would bar Swaggart from preaching for a year. Attorney Cliff Jackson told the News-Leader that the plan would allow Swaggart to give personal testimony about what he has learned from his sin.

Pittsburg fire kills two boys

PITTSBURG, Kan. — Two brothers were killed when fire swept through their house, authorities said Monday.

The victims were identified as Larry Lamb, 13, and Robert Lamb, 15. They were students at Pittsburg Middle School.

Eight other people in the house were treated for smoke inhalation and released, said Pittsburg Fire Chief William Scott.

The fire was discovered in the two-story frame house at 11:57 p.m. Sunday. No cause of the fire has been determined. The two-story house was severely damaged by the fire, but no damage estimate was avaiable.

Forum debates high school press freedom

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

A Supreme Court decision affecting freedom of expression in high schools was the topic of discussion at a Monday night forum.

"The court's decision is a big reversal from Tinker vs. Des Moines," said Dave Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communication and director of Student Publications Inc.

Tinker vs. Des Moines was based on the wearing of black arm bands by students in protest of the Vietnam War.

The court upheld the students' right to freedom of expression and said that the rights of students and teachers do not end at the schoolhouse gate.

The Hazelwood vs. Kuhlmeier case was based on the withholding of two pages of the Hazelwood, Mo., high school paper the "Spectrum" from publication by the school principal.

The articles objected to by the high school principal dealt with the effects of divorce on teenagers and teenage pregnancy.

A 5-3 decision by the Supreme Court against the students in the Hazelwood case, who had sued alleging violation of their First Amendment rights, installed high school principals as publishers and ultimately relegated faculty advisers to faculty editors, Adams said.

He said perhaps the most controversial aspect of the court's decision is the prohibition of associating the school with any position other than neutrality on topics of political controversy.

Designating the school principal, a hired government official, as the publisher, as is described in Hazelwood, has the effect of creating a government censor, he said.

"I don't think the framers of the Constitution ever envisioned creating government censors," he said.

Cindy Lutz, legal counsel for the Kansas School Board Association, said the school board needs control.

Lutz said a reporter working for a commercial paper is subject to publisher control.

"The rights of others must be considered — what's OK for a senior in high school might not be OK for a freshman," Lutz said.

Journalism classes are a part of the school curriculum and as such, administrators must have a say in the curriculum, she said.

Hazelwood said schools need not tolerate speech that is inconsistent with the schools' mission of teaching.

"I don't think Hazelwood has taken away as much as we thought when we first heard it...," she said.

Lutz said the phrase in the Hazelwood decision relating to maintaining political neutrality is "scary."

"We're all waiting for the day an accurate and responsible, but controversial, article on a school board is published," she said.

Dennis DeLay, principal of Council Grove High School, said that in 20 years of school administration he had never felt it necessary to read, nor had he read, a school paper prior to seeing it in print.

"I think common sense could have been used in the Hazelwood case and kept a lot of lawyers out of work," he said.

"I think the principal at Hazelwood left out two important steps: discussing the articles with the student journalists and the adviser," he said.

June Lyle, student editor of the Manhattan High School paper the "Mentor" and Kansas high school journalism student of the year, said she responded to the Court's decision with shock and anger.

Lyle said the court's decision brought mixed reviews from Manhattan High students.

"Some of the students wanted to get armbands and demonstrate," she said. "Others said, 'Hey, can they do that?'"

"The most scary aspect of the case was the way it was left open, with no fine lines as to what principals can and cannot do," she said.

IRS makes it tougher for taxpayers to delay

Procrastinating taxpayers, beware. The IRS is closing a loophole in laws that allowed U.S. citizens to leave the country on April 15 and thereby gain a two-month extension.

Under the new law, which takes effect immediately, taxpayers must be out of the country for at least two weeks — including April 15 — to receive the extension. In the past, someone who skipped the country for just hours or minutes on the 15th was eligible.

An IRS spokesman said the agency had been considering such a change for about a year, but accelerated its decision after seeing airline advertisements that encouraged people to leave the country to delay their filing deadline.

The wisdom of this new law will not come without some immediate headaches, namely that instructions already distributed indicate that an extension will be granted to taxpayers who are out of the country on any part of the 15th. However, the IRS will use some discretion this year in deciding who qualifies for the extension.

Although the new law doesn't completely prevent a quick way out of filing tax forms on time, it ensures that those people who wander through the loophole will have to go to a lot more inconvenience — and probable financial pain — to do so.

Two peas in a dubious pod

Bush, Frank Burns have lot in common

Commentary

CHRIS KIPPES
Collegian Columnist

Every once in a while, sitcom-saturated western Kansas produces something that is genuinely profound. In a region of the state where cable television is an indispensable part of coping, I found a local editorial that was truly a work of inspiration and insight. The lead editorial in The Hays Daily News of March 10 was titled "The Frank Burns of Politics." And in a Bob Dole area of the world where nobody — Democrat or Republican — likes the man, George Bush was feeling the heat of the editorial gunsight of the Hays Daily News.

The Hays paper had a lot to say about the common characteristics of George and Frank. (What two names or two men could be more generic?)

They both take giggly delight in small successes. Remember when Bush made Dan Rather look bad on national television? He couldn't even wait for the cameras to be turned off before gloating about how he showed up Rather. Never mind that Rather is not running for president of the United States. Bush supposes that if he can make him look bad, he must be a capable man — real presidential material.

They both are "covert gung-ho." Burns had a reverence for the CIA as represented by Col. Flag; Burns was the only one at the 4077th who ever respected the bumbling Flag. Bush ran the CIA and reveres that "American hero" and covert operative Oliver North. I won't go into whether Ollie is a bumbling idiot or not. But he is deluded enough to think that conspiracy is sometimes patriotism.

At the 4077 M*A*S*H unit, Burns was second in command; at the White House, Bush is second in command. Of course, when the big things are discussed, like anything surgical in M*A*S*H or like arms for hostages in the White House, neither is consulted.

And that is the most important similarity. In M*A*S*H, Burns did nothing; and as vice president, Bush has done little. No one expects anything from them.

Yet, the most insightful things pointed out by The Hays Daily News were the distinct differences between Bush and Burns: "First, Bush has no Hot Lips. And, second, the writers of M*A*S*H were smart enough not to allow Frank to take permanent control of the camp."

Now that Dole is clearly out of the Republican race for the nomination, it's looking more and more like the writers of American politics want to write Bush into the script of American history. He has wrapped up the Republican nomination, and the money Bush will save by avoiding an extended battle for the nomination will make it considerably easier to win the general election in November. But it's unbelievable that this second-rate politician, who is nothing short of Mondale-esque in personality, has a chance at all.

Here's the level of creative genius that Bush has shown the American people: Bush flew into New Hampshire, just days after losing to Dole in Iowa, and announced that he would use the campaign slogan "I'm one of you." Although Bush may not have noticed, "I'm one of you" was Dole's message to Iowa. I suppose Bush thought that if it works, you shouldn't fix it. It worked for Dole, and, indeed, it worked for Bush. Of course, "Where's the beef" worked for Mondale, too. So plagiarizing isn't so bad after all, as long as it's obvious.

I suppose that every campaign needs an out-and-out loser so that political cartoonists have material with which to fill space. But this loser named Bush is looking more and more like he might get elected.

Alf Landon couldn't carry Kansas. Obviously, no one took him seriously. Mondale had no chance. No one took him seriously, either. But Bush is beginning to toss possible running mates around. He has honed down his campaign staff to save his money for the big race. And he's making statements like "When you're the front-runner, all you really need to do is keep from making mistakes." In other words, he will open his mouth as little as possible and try not to say anything substantial.

When you are ahead, banality is the key. And Bush has always been good at that.

Of course, Bush has not won the presidency, yet. Not many people take him seriously, yet. The more interesting news at the moment is coming from the Democratic race for the nomination. But Bush is getting dangerously close to the presidency, and to not take him seriously now allows him to get closer and closer.

Reagan relies on misinformation, manipulation in Central America

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

In this day and age of impending nuclear catastrophe, repressive Third World dictators and American-supported racism in such places as Israel and South Africa, what could be more frightening than having an insane amnesiac pulling the strings in the White House? Unmerciful attacks on the obvious frailty of our president's mind may have become slightly tacky or passe, but in view of his most recent craftiness, they have not lost their significance nor their sense of immediacy.

I am referring, more specifically, to the 3,200 airborne troops sent to Honduras March 16 to counter a Nicaraguan "act of aggression."

No matter how hard Ronald Reagan's staunchest defenders may try to justify this recent display of military might, it is obvious the action was merely an embarrassing last-ditch effort to save the Contra cause in the hearts and minds of American voters. Calling the envoy of troops to Honduras essential to national security is the moral and strategic equivalent to sending American troops to put down Palestinian riots in Israel.

The justification for sending 3,200 troops to Honduras is very lame indeed. The official story, as reported by the American media, is that our troops were sent at the "urgent request" of Honduran president Jose Azcona. According to the media, Nicaraguan troops had invaded Honduran territory, and American assistance was called for by Azcona, who feared for the safety of his nation.

What is wrong with this picture? Certainly our president has the right, if not the outright duty to protect the territorial integrity of its valued allies.

Did it not seem strange to anyone that it took nearly an entire day for it to be confirmed that Honduras did officially ask for American assistance? Or what of the fact that it has taken approximately two weeks to determine if Nicaraguan troops had even invaded Honduran territory or not?

But those questions were fairly apparent, questionable in light of the coverage of the event by the American press. What lacked discussion, however, was the following:

■ First of all, taking for granted that Nicaraguan troops did briefly cross into Honduras in pursuit of Contra rebels, why would this threaten Honduras? There are no Honduran troops in the area where the alleged fighting occurred, and the possibility of a clash between the two countries' armies was very slim. In other words, Hondurans were not threatened, the Contras were.

■ Secondly, why were the Contras in Honduras anyway? Certainly the media are not so blind as to ignore that according to the Arias peace plan for Central America, ratified by Honduras, the Contras were to have no bases in that country. And why also did the media fail to report there have been countless other Nicaraguan incursions Honduran territory? Could it have anything to do with the fact that Honduras is extremely embarrassed to be violating the peace treaty, and therefore had to have its proverbial arm twisted to agree to asking for American help in the first place?

■ Lastly, there is the argument that this Sandinista offensive was a surprise attack, taking not only the Contras by surprise, but also Honduras and the United States as well. Azcona had no way of knowing that his borders might be infringed upon, and the entire operation was as threatening as it was unexpected.

But that contention becomes pointless when one recalls that Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega announced this offensive a week before it happened, on International Women's Day, March 8. And, as reported in the March 23 issue of In These Times, he had also previously mentioned many times that his troops would be in "combat readiness" to take advantage of Contra vulnerability in wake of the U.S. cut-off of their aid.

The importance of Reagan's actions was aptly described by Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn. As he observed, every time a vote on Contra aid has lost, the administration has manufactured a crisis to stampede less assertive legislators into agreeing to finance its dirty war in Central America. However, most frightening is that illegal actions by scapegoats such as Lt. Col. Oliver North and cronies are petty compared to the disgusting methods our government uses to manipulate Americans into supporting terrorist groups such as the Contras. What then, we should ask ourselves, was the use of so highly publicizing the Iran-Contra hearings, if they failed to punish the real culprits?

Kansas's soil

Editor,

As a 38-year Kansas resident whose daughter graduated from the University of Kansas in 1980, I was saddened to read the position of the University Daily Kansan on the state soil issue in Friday's Collegian, not so much because it was contrary to mine, but because it expressed an unbelievable ignorance or a decision to use a lot less information than is available. Either position is uncomplimentary to students of KU's School of Journalism, in my view.

Your denunciation, "Telling the rest if the nation what kind of dirt Kansas has will not make a strong statement about the state," suggests your approval of the inaccurate statement now in our state's official publication, "Kansas Facts," which is: "The soils of Kansas are among the best in the world. These soils have come from decomposition of underlying rock formations or have been transported into the region by water, wind or ice."

Biologists and school teachers who support Senate bill 569 recognize our current soil statement's deficiencies and propose the following reasons for adopting a state soil:

■ To acknowledge the unusual natural relationship among prairie plants, animals — including humans — geologic materials and climate that have interacted according to nature's laws to produce long-lasting, unusually fertile prairie soils;

■ To acknowledge that Kansas has more acres of prairie soils than any other state, and is second only to Texas in acres of prime farm land that has made Kansas first in production of wheat, grain sorghum and forage sorghum;

■ To acknowledge and publicize the completion in October 1987 of the state's soil inventory that has been underway for nearly 50 years and is being used to implement the state's use-value land reappraisal;

■ And to select one typical Kansas prairie soil of Kansas's 290 soils to which all others can be compared when teaching earth-science courses.

I agree that adoption of state things can be overdone, but it is not being immodest to tell the nation of the superiority of Kansas soils when they are largely responsible for providing $6 billion annually to the state's economy.

You will be pleased to know that Senate bill 569 never made it out of the Senate's Agricultural Committee.

Craft regulation

Editor,

I am writing this letter to express my heartfelt thanks to a reactionary media and an uninformed Congress. This winning combination has once again gotten together to look out for my personal safety in a most fatherly manner. In response to media prodding to "keep the skies safe," Congress has mandated that all aircraft within 45 miles of an airport with terminal radar approach control service should have to carry an altitude encoding transponder (this allows a traffic controller to precisely determine your height).

Currently, there are maybe two dozen places in the country where this is required. Congress wants to make this into 254 places. It will be virtually impossible to fly east of the Mississippi without expensive radio equipment if this measure is passed.

They also want to require all aircraft which fly higher than 6,000 feet to carry an altitude encoding transponder. The measure is intended to improve airline safety. Airliners typically operate at 20,000-40,000 feet. I must not be as smart as the congressmen who proposed this. I don't see how I could pose a threat to an airliner flying at 20,000 feet when I am at 6,000 feet, but then what do I know?

Congress really pisses me off sometimes. The Federal Aviation Administration is comprised of experts on this stuff who have the power to make appropriate rules for air safety, but Congress steps in time and time again. This legislation makes about as much sense as requiring all cars to carry a device to warn of imminent train collision: For a mere $2,000 per car, sure it would improve safety, but the price is ridiculous.

Would you like to buy one? HELL, NO!! You might think that pilots are all rich and can afford this stuff — NOT TRUE!!! There is a large group of pilots of light aircraft and home-built aircraft who don't have much money. I fly a glider worth less than the transponder I would be forced to put in it. For me in an airplane, it is about as easy to see and avoid an airliner as it is to see and avoid a train.

Airliners only fly low enough to conflict with small aircraft in certain places, like trains only conflict with cars in certain places. Congress, in its infinite wisdom, wants pilots like me to spend $2,000 to buy altitude encoding transponders. This legislation would require aircraft to carry a transponder in order to take off from the municipal airport of the thriving metropolis of Harper, Kan. How many of you have seen a low-flying 737 jet airliner over Harper or Kingman or Newton?

Advertising controversy topic of study

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

Parents say commercials aimed at children are manipulative and undermine the parent-child relationship.

Advertisers say commercials aimed at children are a positive influence because they teach children necessary consumer skills.

University sources say the controversy surrounding these commercials has parents and advertisers drawing battle lines that could someday result in increased regulation of children's programming.

The arguments between consumers and advertisers were highlighted in a recent study conducted by Robert Hite, associate professor of marketing.

Hite sent a list of 22 statements to consumers and manufacturers of children's products nationwide. Respondents had five options for a reply, ranging from "strongly agree" to "strongly disagree." Eighty-eight businesses and 178 consumers responded.

Hite found that consumers had more negative attitudes regarding children's advertising.

Consumers significantly agreed more than businesses with statements that advertisements stifle creativity, promote materialism and encourage poor nutritional habits regarding sugared foods, Hite said.

Businesses agreed more than consumers that there is nothing ethically wrong with advertising to children, and that children's ads are useful because they provide information on new products.

Businesses and consumers did agree that companies should be held liable for deceptive and unfair advertising, and that parents should discuss the purpose of advertising with children, Hite said.

The results of his study weren't surprising, but the research did support the idea that parents and advertisers are sharply divided on the issue of children's commercials.

"It is controversial because you can see the logic on both sides," Hite said. "I chose to do the research because whenever there are two sides to an opinion and they both appear to be logical, I like to try and find out just how people do feel."

The study was recently published in the Journal of Advertising Research. Hite began his research while an assistant professor at Colorado State University. He was assisted by Randy Eck, who is now an instructor of marketing at the University of Northern Colorado.

Hite said one reason he conducted the study was because advertising aimed at children is currently a "hot topic." Groups such as Action for Children's Television have called for a ban or strict limitations on children's advertising.

Hite noted in the study, however, that businesses often respond to such criticism by citing freedom-of-speech rights as well as the indications that today's adults who have been bombarded with thousands of ads throughout their childhoods have suffered no apparent negative effects.

Advertising directed at children is not closely regulated and does have an effect on them, said William Adams, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications.

"It would be insane for advertisers to claim there is no influence," he said. "If advertisers really believed that, they wouldn't be spending millions of dollars to make the commercials."

Few guidelines exist for children's commercials, Adams said. Networks are required by the Federal Communications Commission to make sure an obvious break exists between a program and a commercial. These are often in the form of brief segments announcing, "We'll be right back for more action and adventure."

Advertisers cannot promote a product of a show during the program — for example, advertising G.I. Joe dolls during a G.I. Joe program.

Besides these two areas, commercials are "pretty much open" to advertisers' wishes, Adams said, adding that "networks and individual stations have the right to censor, but they seldom do."

The link between children's programming and products is not a recent development, he said.

"Mickey Mouse watches are as old as Mickey Mouse," Adams said. "There has always been some product tie-in with these types of shows.

"In the old days, you developed the character — like Mickey Mouse or Donald Duck — and then merchandised them," he said. "What is different now is that usually they come up with the product first and then figure out a show to go with it."

The advertising industry is often criticized for its commercial content, but studies have failed to produce proof of any negative impact on consumers, Adams said.

"It's a big problem in media research. There are an awful lot of assumptions and little factual information. Most people can quote a study that will prove their point," Adams said.

Psychologically, ads do influence children "in some important ways, but probably not as much or as badly as some people feel," said Richard Harris, professor of psychology.

Harris, who teaches a course titled "Psychology of Mass Communications," has conducted research on how the mind processes the language of advertising.

Several concerns have been voiced by consumers and activists' groups, Harris said. Young children such as preschoolers often don't understand the difference between a program and a commercial.

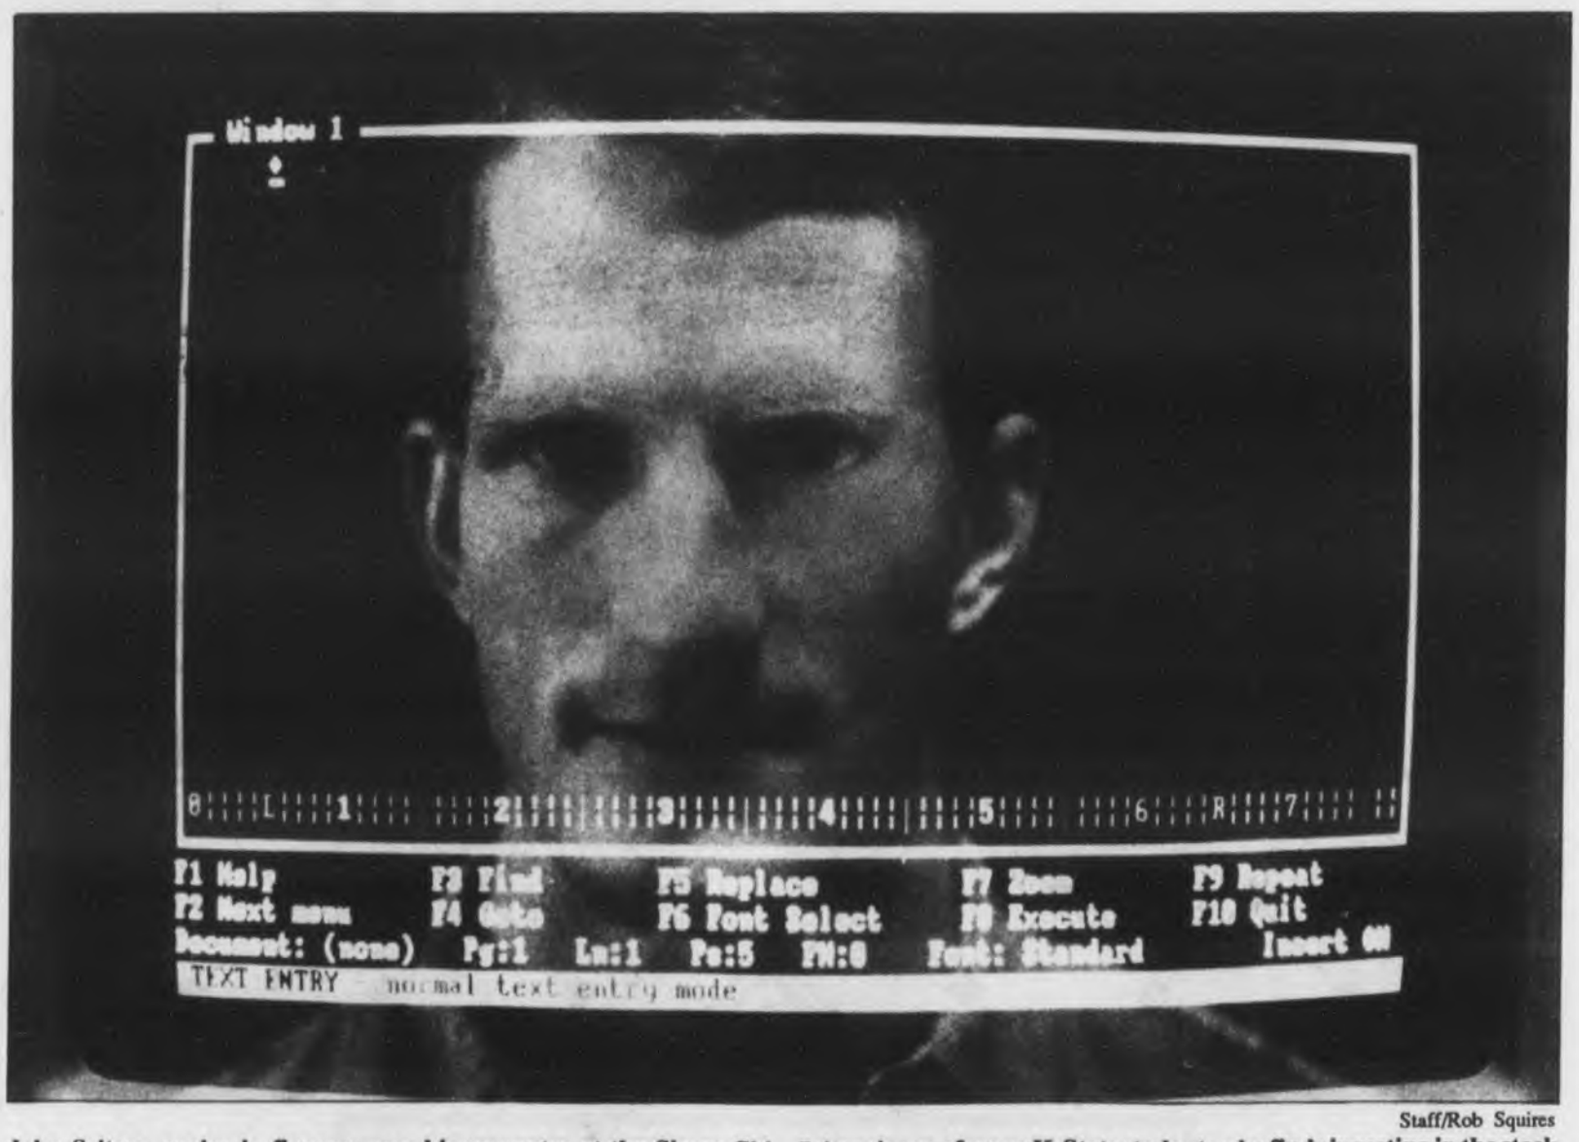
"To them, it is one continuous stream of entertainment," he said. "They don't understand the whole economic base of television — that the purpose of the commercial is to sell them something, and they may accept the message as truth."

As children grow older, however, they become more skeptical of advertisements, Harris said.

Another concern is that advertisements aimed at children center on having a good time.

This gives the appearance that "everyone's major goal in life is to have fun, and the only way to have a good time is by acquiring more and more of these toys and by eating more and more of this food," Harris said.

Parents are also concerned about prime-time commercial messages, he said. Over-the-counter drugs cannot be advertised during children's programming on Saturday mornings and after-school hours, but children watch more television during prime time.



"They can grow up thinking there is a pill or a chemical solution for every problem, and some people have linked this to drug abuse. The research doesn't support this, however, and it's hard to confirm in a study," Harris said.

Whether parents believe advertisements aimed at children are a negative or positive influence, they should be aware of what their children are viewing, he said.

"I don't think that a child watching one set of commercials is going to be horribly scarred and warped for life," Harris said. "Sometimes the critics of television state their arguments so strongly that it couldn't possibly be that bad."

"But I think the concerns are real," he said. "Parents, as much as possible, should watch television with their children.

"By commenting on television, you can help young children know the difference between programming and commercials, and you can teach them critical skills like thinking beyond what is said directly in the ad," Harris said.

Risking money in stock market 'exciting' experience for students

By Jim Vader
Collegian Reporter

Some find the stock market with all its ups and downs an exciting and lucrative place to be.

But with all volatility of the market in the past few months, some may wonder if, as college students, they could or should buy into the stock market.

Some students at K-State have decided to take the risk.

John Seitzer, senior in finance, is one of them.

"I'm obviously not in it for a lot of money, but it is exciting — like gambling," Seitzer said.

"A friend of mine got me interested in the market. I started using his broker, but I'm close to just using a discount broker because I think that I can pick them just as well as anyone," Seitzer said.

"The market is not real stressful unless you need the money. If you're in dire need of money, then your money should be in an interest-bearing account," Seitzer said.

Some investors have found it beneficial to diversify their portfolio — that is, investing in more than one type of stock. That way, even though one stock may lose money, the others may be making money.

"Making the profit is the most exciting thing," said David Schroeder, sophomore in business administration, adding that the dividend check is "extremely nice."

What is especially interesting to Schroeder is knowing that he is part-owner of a company and knowing that he is making money.

In the age of the personal computer, some students such as Seitzer have found it is extremely easy to keep track of all their stock market transactions and which stocks they buy and sell.

Kathleen Oldfather, a non-degree graduate student, teaches Introduction to Investments, a class that is concerned with the principles of investing money. Investing in the stock market is one of the possibilities covered.

"First you need to find out how liquid your money needs to be," Oldfather said. "If it needs to be quick, or liquid money, then you should put it into an interest-bearing account."

An interest-bearing account enables an investor's money to be relatively safe while still earning some type of money.

A money-market fund or a mutual fund is another opportunity for investment, Oldfather said.

With these funds, investors can enjoy a higher rate of return on their money while still being relatively safe. An investor can also write checks off the fund and there is no commission charge. Banks usually have more information on these types of accounts.

A Certificate of Deposit (CD) is another relatively safe place to invest money. Although investors usually get a higher return than a savings account, they must be willing to tie their money up for a longer period of time. A CD is not a source of quick cash, Oldfather said.

And then there's the stock market.

Initially, any potential investor should talk to a broker, or someone who buys and sells stocks for a client investor.

There are two different types of stock brokers. One type works for a firm that has access to financial statements. This type is whom an investor pays for advice about which stocks to buy and sell. These brokers usually charge about 4 percent to 8 percent per transaction.

A discount broker is someone who does not advise and who does not have access to financial statements. They only place orders for the investor. These brokers charge on the average of $40 per transaction.

"I teach them to watch and study different markets before investing," Oldfather said. "I try and teach my students to invest in themselves because that will give the highest returns."

One person, however, does not encourage investment at the present time.

"I would not want to speculate (in the stock market) at this time," said Stephen Harrison, a broker for Edward D Jones & Company.

"If you're getting in the market for the sake of just getting in, then stay out. To make money you need to stay in for a long period of time, say five to ten years," Harrison said.

Tort reform again debated in House

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A group representing doctors and another representing attorneys renewed an old debate Monday, over a proposal to amend the state's constitution to allow the Legislature to put limits on damages awarded in some lawsuits.

The House Judiciary Committee is considering a resolution to amend the constitution to allow the Legislature to revise the civil justice system in hopes of keeping liability insurance rates from increasing.

Jerry Slaughter, a lobbyist for the Kansas Medical Society, acknowleged the proposal is drastic, but he said it was necessary because the state's courts have shown they are unwilling to uphold so-called tort reform legislation.

"I realize that coming before this committee with a constitutional amendment is not a popular option," Slaughter said. "I'm asking that you take a leap of faith."

Thomas Sullivan, of Overland Park, the president of the Kansas Trial Lawyers Association, called the proposal "unnecessary, unfair and offensive." He alluded to Topeka's overcast skies.

"What a perfect day — a miserable day, a Monday yet — to talk about changing our constitution," Sullivan said. "Our founding fathers surely would roll over in their graves."

The committee's chairman, Rep. Robert Wunsch, R-Kingman, said the committee will discuss the resolution Tuesday. It needs to be adopted by two-thirds majorities in both houses, or with 84 of 125 votes in the House and 27 of 40 votes in the Senate, to go on the November general election ballot.

Wunsch said finding the 84 votes in the House would be difficult, but said a "serious effort" would be made if the resolution is endorsed by his committee.

The state Supreme Court heard arguments last week in a case in which a Shawnee County district judge ruled a 1986 law putting limits on damages in medical malpractice cases was unconstitutional because it violated the separation of legislative and judicial powers and limited a person's right to trial by jury.

In addition, the Supreme Court last year struck down a portion of the law, saying it created separate classes of litigants within the judicial system. The Legislature is considering a package of legislation to apply the laws in the medical malpractice law to other types of liability suits.

The medical society is a vocal supporter of such legislation, contending that large damage awards cause insurance companies to increase their rates, which in turn drives professionals, doctors in particular, out of the state.

"We would prefer that this not take a constitutional amendment," Slaughter said. "All we're saying today and this year is, 'Let's give tort reform a chance.'"

Lawyers are opposed to such legislation, and they and other opponents say there is no good evidence of a insurance crisis. They also say the rights of victims to receive adequate compensation for injuries should not be abridged.

"Isn't it rational to treat an infection of the knee with an anti-biotic before cutting off part of the leg?" Sullivan said. "Let's don't perform major surgery before it is necessary."

Procrastinators hurried by IRS

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service said Monday it is closing a loophole that allowed procrastinating taxpayers to slip out of the country briefly on April 15th and gain an automatic two-month extension on filing their income taxes.

The new ruling is effective for tax forms due next month, and requires taxpayers to be out of the country for at least two weeks, including April 15th, to qualify for the automatic extension. In the past, someone who left the country for just hours or minutes on the 15th was eligible.

IRS spokesman Jeff Krasney said the IRS had been considering such a change for about a year, but accelerated its decision after seeing airline advertisements that encouraged people to leave the country to delay their filing deadline. He said the ads also inaccurately suggested the IRS was encouraging such behavior.

"We didn't know if the ads would cause an abundance of individuals to take this (extension)," Krasney said. "... We felt this would be one way to combat those ads."

Under the new ruling, some U.S. territories are considered part of the country and others are not. Travel to Puerto Rico, for example, will not qualify taxpayers for the extension. But a two-week trip to Guam, American Samoa or the Virgin Islands will net procrastinators two more months.

Since the tax forms and instructions already distributed to taxpayers say the extension is available to taxpayers who are out of the country on any part of the 15th, the IRS this year will use some discretion in deciding who qualifies.

K-State insured against accidents

By The Collegian Staff

While few students sue the University, K-State provides limited liability insurance for injuries incurred on campus, said University Attorney Richard Seaton.

The state of Kansas is self-insured. Insurance for the University is provided by the state through the Kansas Tort Claims Act and paid for by the Tort Claims Fund.

The fund is a pool of money from which payments are made for judgments involving money or claims where the probable judgment will result in a monetary payment, said Neil Woerman, chief of staff for Kansas Attorney General Robert Stephan.

By law, a cap has been placed on monetary awards. The state and its employees are liable for negligence for up to $500,000, Seaton said. There is no negligence assumed by the state for amounts above the cap or for certain exceptions.

One of the exceptions primarily concerning the University is that of accidents involving naturally occurring conditions such as snow and ice on the pavement, Seaton said.

Another example is accidents incurred at the park facilities, such as the Quinlan Natural Area.

If an individual is injured in such an area, the exception applies and that individual cannot sue the University.

"On the whole, the University has liability for negligence," he said.

Due to the time element involved, few lawsuits are ever filed by students. University employees bring most of the tort claims.

"Over the past 17 years the vast bulk of them have not been students. They have other things to do, so unless it is a fairly serious injury they wouldn't even bother," Seaton said.

The University usually has 6 to 10 lawsuits pending at any one time, Seaton said. During his tenure at K-State, since 1971, Seaton estimates there have been 30 to 40 liability suits filed.

Senate to consider allocation requests

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate begins meeting today to discuss tentative allocations of student fees for the 1988-89 school year.

At today's meeting, Senate will hear the recommendations of the finance committee on allocations for the Consumer Relations Board, Associated Students of Kansas, ASK at K-State and the Student Governing Association.

Representatives of the various organizations have already made five-minute presentations to Senate explaining their requests.

The Consumer Relations Board requested a budget of $3,930.50 from Senate. The finance committee has recommended the board be given $3,727.30, with the change being in the amount budgeted for printing and advertising.

"That's the first place (the finance committee) will try to cut — printing and advertising," Student Senate Chairman Doug Folk said. "And that's a major part of their budget, so I'm sure (the Consumer Relations Board) will try to amend that up."

ASK at K-State had requested $1,632.60. The finance committee has recommended it receive $1,527.70, with cuts being made in requests in printing and advertising.

SGA requested $35,153.00 and the finance committee is recommeding a budget of $33,293.00. The cuts would take away in a proposed increase in the salaries for the student body president and the student senate chairperson.

Mathematician to discuss universe's possible design

By The Collegian Staff

William Thurston, professor of mathematics at Princeton University, will present the second annual Harry E. Valentine Lecture at 2:30 p.m. today in Cardwell 102.

His lecture, "Three-Dimensional Geometry and Topology," will investigate the possible structure of the universe, using geometric and mathematical theories.

Thurston's research ranges from low-dimensional topology to the theory of foliations and computer graphics. Thurston won the Fields Medal — the mathematical equivalent of the Nobel Prize — in 1983.

The Valentine lecture series was established in 1987 in honor of Harry Valentine, publisher of the Clay Center Dispatch, who was interested in the economic development of Kansas through the basic and applied sciences.

First practice goes smoothly

Intensity major goal of Wildcats

By Tom Perrin
Sports Writer

During K-State's 21 days of spring football practice, Coach Stan Parrish is designating Goal One to be the achievement of an improved work ethic.

The Wildcats, 0-10-1 last year, began spring drills Monday with a two-hour, 25-minute workout at the practice field near Frank Myers Field.

"We can control our effort — busting our rear ends — and that's what we want to do," Parrish said.

"One of our goals is to work hard this spring and I think we made a good start in that direction (Monday)," he added.

"We're not trying to do nearly as many things, particularly on defense. We're just trying to have more intensity with what we're doing. That's our major goal."
—Stan Parrish

Parrish said practices for the 85 players will be the most physically taxing he has run in his three years at K-State. Parrish is requiring the players to do after-practice wind sprints for the first time. By the end of spring practice, Parrish expects the number of players to be "in the 70s."

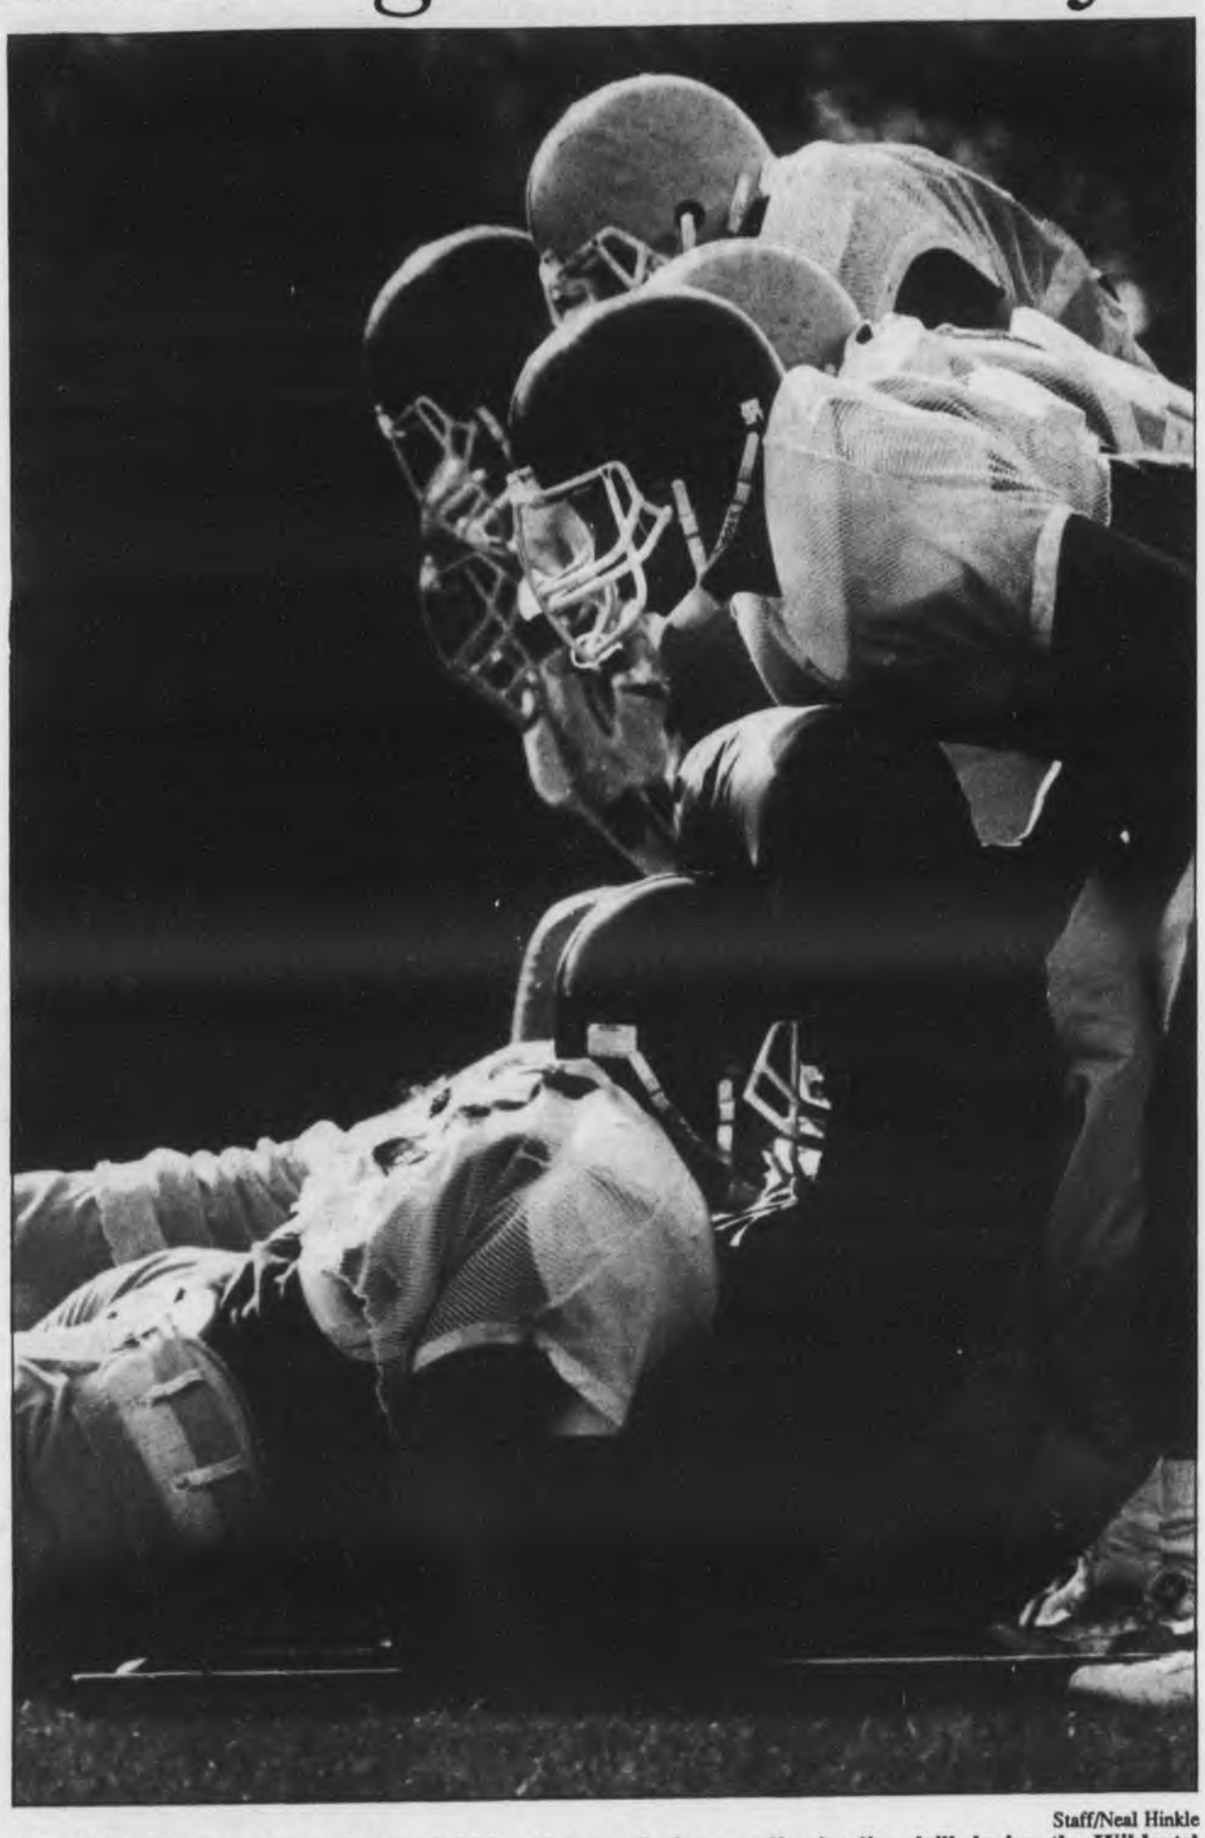
"We're not trying to do nearly as many things, particularly on defense. We're just trying to have more intensity with what we're doing. That's our major goal," Parrish said.

Offensively, Parrish intends to re-emphasize the passing attack he promised he would establish when he was hired in December 1985. The 'Cats used the air attack regularly in the 2-9 1985 season, then shifted the focus last year to the running game and tailback Tony Jordan.

"There's no question, we'll throw more than last year," he said. "Our attack will be a lot more like the first year."

The competition for the starting quarterback position shapes up as being close between returning starter Gary Swim, sophomore Carl Straw and touted redshirt freshman Paul Watson.

"We're letting all have a lot of turns. From there, we'll get into some scrimmage situations and make our evaluations from there," Parrish said.



For the first time in recent years, there won't be a spring game featuring either an alumni-varsity contest or purple-white scrimmage.

"We don't have enough time with only 15 days in pads," Parrish said. "To do the spring game right takes three or four days just to prep up and put in the special teams. We've got too many young guys (who need the practice time and) Sept. 3 is more important than a spring game."

K-State's first game will be at 6 p.m. Sept. 3 at Tulsa University, a team that defeated the Wildcats last year at Manhattan.

Practices will run from 4 p.m. to around 6 p.m. Monday through Friday until April 25, except for two days off on April 4 and April 22. Players were dressed in shoulder pads and shorts Monday and will be dressed in full pads today, when they will have 30 minutes of full contact drills.

Among the individuals reporting for the first day of spring drills were 33 lettermen (14 offense, 16 defense and three specialists) including 11 returning starters (five offense, six defense) from last season.

Hayden says Kansas capital of basketball

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — With Kansas fans scouring the countryside for tickets to this weekend's Final Four and K-Staters licking their wounds, Gov. Mike Hayden proclaimed Monday that the state is the "basketball capital of the nation."

The Sunflower State's chief executive also offered to bet North Carolina Gov. Jim Martin two dozen sirloin strip steaks that Kansas will beat Duke Saturday in the semifinals. Aides said they did not know what Martin was putting up.

Hayden said he based his "basketball capital" claim on the following:

- Kansas' Final Four appearance in the NCAA tournament.
- K-State's advancing to the NCAA final eight before losing to the Jayhawks Sunday.
- Wichita State University's being included in the 64 teams selected to compete in the NCAA tournament.
- Fort Hays State University's advancing to the final eight of the NAIA tournament in Kansas City earlier this month.
- Hutchinson Community College's winning the National Junior College Athletic Association championship earlier this month in Hutchinson.
- The Kansas women's team gaining a berth in the NCAA tournament.
- Washburn University, the 1987 NAIA champion, winning the Central States Intercollegiate Conference title over Fort Hays.

"The Kansas Jayhawks and the Kansas State Wildcats, for the first time in 50 years of the NCAA basketball tournament, competed against one another for entry into the Final Four, bringing pride and honor to our state," Hayden's proclamation said.

"Both Kansas and Kansas State displayed rugged Kansas determination and spirit, struggling and persevering to succeed.

"Previous fictional images of Dorothy, the Wizard of Oz and Toto have now been replaced by heroes like Danny Manning, Mitch Richmond, Lon Kruger and Larry Brown.

"Both Kansas and Kansas State are champions and the state is proud of their achievements."

The proclamation also noted that James Naismith, who invented basketball at Springfield, Mass., later taught for many years at the University of Kansas.

For Jayhawk officials, getting to the Final Four is wonderful, but now comes the tough part.

"We have been alloted 1,625 tickets for the Kemper Arena Final Four," said Richard Konzem, assistant athletic director. "We could sell out the Superdome. It's just unbelievable. Supply is very, very limited. Demand is very, very large."

Several hundred hopeful followers fell into line outside the Allen Fieldhouse ticket office within minutes Sunday of the Jayhawks 71-58 victory over K-State in the Midwest Regional finals in Pontiac, Mich.

Potential locations for Olympics named

By The Associated Press

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — The U.S. Olympic Committee will choose Atlanta or Minneapolis-St. Paul as America's potential bid city for the 1996 Summer Olympics, the USOC announced Monday.

The USOC said representatives for the two areas will make presentations during the committee's annual House of Delegates meeting April 29 in Washington, D.C.

Following the presentations, the USOC executive board will decide whether to submit one of the cities as the U.S. bidder for the 1996 Games. The board could decide not to back either city, but that is considered unlikely.

Atlanta and Minneapolis-St. Paul were chosen over San Francisco and Nashville, Tenn., as the final two U.S. candidates, the USOC said.

"We were fortunate to have four outstanding cities interested in becoming our candidate to host the 1996 Olympic Games," said Jimmy Carnes, co-chairman of the USOC's site selection committee.

"We are grateful to all four of them for the time, energy and enthusiasm that they demonstrated on behalf of amateur sports and the Olympic movement. Our committee felt that the Atlanta and Minneapolis-St. Paul bid proposals were clearly superior."

More than a dozen cities had expressed interest in becoming the U.S. bidder during a 1985 seminar in Colorado Springs. The list was eventually narrowed to Atlanta, Minneapolis-St. Paul, San Francisco and Nashville.

During the past three months, those four cities were visited by members of the site selection committee.

Kruger named coach of year

Lon Kruger, K-State's second-year basketball coach, was named Kodak District 12 Coach of the Year Monday by the National Basketball Coaches Association (NABC).

There are a total of 15 districts in the country, and those 15 winners are then nominated for national coach of the year. The district and national awards are voted on by fellow coaches. The national coach of the year will be named at a breakfast on this Sunday in Kansas City.

Other states included in district 12 are Oklahoma, Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska.

"I'm obviously very appreciative," Kruger said. "This is something that our players and coaching staff can enjoy as a group. Coaching honors are team honors. I imagine anyone who saw our team play this year understands that."

Kruger was also named the Midwest Coach of the Year by Basketball Times in that publication's most recent release.

Golfers finish 10th in Texas

K-State's women's golf team opened its 1988 spring season over the weekend by placing 10th of 11 teams at Denton, Texas, in the Fifth Annual Lady Eagle Invitational.

K-State carded 18-hole rounds of 366-352 for a 718 total. Host North Texas State defended its title in the event with round scores of 308-307 for a 615 total and a 22-stroke victory over runner-up Iowa State.

Individually for K-State, freshman Chris Adams tallied rounds of 85-81 for a 166 total to lead the Wildcats.

Final Four 'dream come true' for Big Eight

From Staff and Wire Reports

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — When the Big Eight Conference said it would be hosting this year's NCAA Final Four, no one dreamed how right that would be.

For years, Big Eight basketball was a joke, even to Big Eight players. Basketball, they ruefully agreed, was just something the conference did between football and spring football.

What's more, they were right. Most of the league's arenas were small, cramped and outdated. Nobody in the Big Eight except Kansas and K-State, for years and years, spent any money on the sport.

It seemed that few nationally recruited players ever sprang from high schools in the Big Eight area, and the ones who did quickly fled to the Big Ten or the Atlantic Coast Conference and the like. Football was the absolute, undisputed king in Middle America where Oklahoma and Nebraska challenged year after year for national championships.

But then, slowly, the winds of change began to blow. Coaches like Larry Brown, Billy Tubbs and Johnny Orr were hired at places like Kansas, Oklahoma and Iowa State. Players like Wayman Tisdale and Danny Manning were coaxed into signing Big Eight letters-of-intent.

New arenas were built at Oklahoma, Missouri, Iowa State, Nebraska, Colorado and now, K-State. Other facilities were upgraded. More money was spent on basketball than ever before.

And with the Final Four back in Kansas City's own Kemper Arena, the so-called football conference has not one but two Final Four teams.

Kansas, with two-time All-American Manning, will contest Duke of the ACC in the first semifinal Saturday and then Oklahoma, once a basketball doormat, will meet

Baseball team deserves equal time

Commentary

BILL LANG
Sports Writer

All right, enough is enough.

All those long faces I've seen walking around campus are enough to make a person sick. Sure, Sunday's loss to the University of Kansas in the NCAA tournament's Midwest Region finals was probably the biggest loss suffered by K-State players, coaches and fans in quite a while. But, hey, we've got another winning team right here on campus, and I bet some people don't even know about it.

If you said the Kansas State baseball team, you're right.

The Wildcats who frequent the diamond have gone virtually unnoticed, while the Wildcats of the court have done everything except get their picture on the cover of Sports Illustrated.

Last season the baseball team, under the tutelage of first-year coach Mike Clark, recorded its first winning season, 28-24, in five years.

The baseball team has gotten off to one of its best starts in a long time with an 18-5 record this spring. But one thing is lacking, and that is fan support. Fan support — it's something the basketball team got, but it's something that the baseball team receives little of.

Here is your chance, as a fan, to make an impact. Maybe, if enough people attended the games and screamed and hollered, the umpire just might sway his decision and send a few calls the 'Cats' way.

But who should the crowd cheer for? Sure, most K-State fans know who Mitch Richmond is, but do they know who David Chadd is?

Chadd is K-State's starting first baseman. He would have received more playing time last season had he not played behind Otto Kaifes.

So far this season, Chadd is hitting a torrid .474 and has an .821 slugging percentage, seven homers, 12 dou-

D.O.A. 'visually pleasing'

Quaid a busy man in career, film

By Gary Leffler
Collegian Reviewer

Dennis Quaid is a busy man. During the past year or so he has given movie-goers many chances to see him in action. He's starred in films such as "The Big Easy," "Innerspace" and "Suspect," to name a few.

Movie Review

His latest work, "D.O.A.," is a remake of a 1949 B movie of the same title. The film is part mystery, part thriller and, on balance, a good piece of work.

The plot line of "D.O.A." is indeed unique. Quaid plays English professor Dexter Cornell, a once-successful novelist who, for an unknown reason, has stopped writing. After an all-night drinking binge, Dexter wakes up with more than his usual hangover.

Upon examination he finds that someone has poisoned him during the past 24 hours with a very lethal but slow-acting toxin.

Instead of spending his last 24 hours in a hospital bed, Dexter opts to search for his murderer. He becomes, in essence, both victim and detective, retracing his steps and hoping to find an answer before he dies.

To complicate matters even more, other people around Dexter begin dying. The police feel Dexter is responsible, thus putting a third label on him: killer. Now, on top of everything else, Dexter must prove himself innocent.

This concept is fascinating to watch in action. The triple threat to Quaid's character keeps the audience spinning around in circles, at times as off balance as Dexter himself.

Visually, "D.O.A." is one of the most pleasing films I have seen this year. The 1940s film noir style dominates the film and gives it a richness and texture as pleasantly complicated as the plot. This is not surprising, since directors Rocky Morton and Anabel Jankel were co-creators of television's "Max Headroom" — undoubtedly the most visual program of the decade.

Consistently throughout the film we are set askew and placed at sharp angles to view the action. Shadows dominate many scenes, and the use of black and white sequences at the beginning and end of the film serve to pay homage to the nearly forgotten film noir style.

Solid performances are turned in by both Quaid and Meg Ryan. Ryan portrays Sydney Fuller, one of Dexter's students. While Ryan is billed as a co-star, she is actually a very prominent supporting character. However, her work is solid, if not dazzling. She has obvious talent and it is a shame she isn't getting meatier roles than an infatuated freshman who listens to Billy Idol cranked at full volume.

The biggest downfall of "D.O.A." is the rather simple answers used occasionally to move the mystery to a conclusion. Every now and then suspects are proved innocent by a piece of trivial information that is somewhat insulting to the audience.

If it is so obvious certain characters are innocent, then why were they considered a suspect at all? This whole routine was a bit sloppy, but not so distracting as to downgrade the overall effectiveness of the film.

Some people may also point to the excessive amount of violence as a weakness. However, to fully recreate the film noir style, the violent, seamy side of life had to be exposed. The violence is never gory in nature, nor is it overdone solely for the sake of putting blood on the screen. It is all part of the atmosphere during a desperate, nervous, heat-drenched Christmas holiday in California.

"D.O.A." was a pleasant surprise. With Dennis Quaid tackling a schedule as full as any politician's during an election year, it was very satisfying to see continued quality in his work and in the work of those around him. "D.O.A." is 1½ hours of intelligent, rambunctious entertainment, earning it an A minus.

Logic professor to speak today

By The Collegian Staff

Logician John Corcoran, professor at the State University of New York at Buffalo, will deliver a lecture titled "Examples, Proexamples and Counterexamples" at 3:30 today in Union 207.

Robin Smith, head of the Department of Philosophy, said Corcoran's lecture will be non-technical and devoid of confusing jargon. She said Corcoran has made many important contributions to formal logic and the philosophy of logic.

Logic is the study of what goes on when individuals carry out proofs and deductions. Smith said the lecture will deal with logic as it relates to arguments: what individuals do while arguing and what makes a good argument.

The nature of mathematical proof is another area Corcoran has studied, Smith said. Some discussion of mathematical logic will be included in the presentation.

Corcoran is a visiting professor sponsored by the Council for Philosophical Studies. The council, funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities, supports the visiting-professor program to assist institutions that do not have graduate programs in philosophy in inviting well-known philosophers to speak.

Fraternity adds new study wing

By The Collegian Staff

After five years of planning, construction on a new wing of the FarmHouse Fraternity has begun.

The cost of the new wing, estimated at $60,000, will be covered by alumni donations.

The 28-by-40-foot wing is expected to be completed by June and will be used by the house members as study area.

"The new wing will be used as a study wing which will have a library where we can have some kind of reference material, conference room, and we will have space available for six computers," said Kent Moore, president of the house and junior in agricultural economics.

Russell Reitz, an alumnus of FarmHouse and a 1927 K-State graduate, said the FarmHouse Foundation and the Association Board of FarmHouse had been talking about the construction for some time. However, it was not until last summer that the association really began planning the new facility.

"We have constructed a campaign among the alumni for the funds for the new wing, and we have gotten over two-thirds of the estimated amount of the money available now," Reitz said.

The funds will be allocated to cover labor and materials for the project.

Once the wing is completed, the rooms will also be furnished by contributions from the alumni.

"When we are through with it from the alumni standpoint, we want the wing to be fully operational. Everything from the wastebasket to the pencil sharpener.... We want all of that in there before we turn it over to the boys," Reitz said.

The dedication of the new wing will be during the fall at the FarmHouse homecoming banquet.

"Although we do have some outstanding pledges which have not been paid."

When the donations do run out, it will be the athletic department's turn to pay — in a way.

With the department's current operating costs running so tight, the athletic department took out a loan from the Foundation to pay its share.

Longberg described the loan as "confusing."

"No one is around who was involved in the original decision in this matter," he said, adding that confusion is to be expected in a project of this size.

Although the Foundation is loaning the money to the department, no money will change hands. Instead, the Foundation will make advances against the loan to the department — that is, the Foundation will issue bonds knowing the department will eventually cover the bonds.

The maximum amount the athletic department will have to pay the Foundation is $2 million at a 5 percent interest rate, Longberg said. When money from donations runs out, the department will begin making annual payments of $130,000 until the loan is paid.

However, because the donations and gifts have exceeded expectations, the department may be able to pay less than the $2 million maximum, Longber said.

As an example of unexpected funds the Foundation received, Longberg said securities in a speculative growth company donated by a former K-State professor were unexpected.

"They were not readily marketable at the time, but they appreciated significantly. That provided an extra kicker to the project," he said.

Because much of the athletic department's income is from ticket sales, the students will be paying for the coliseum twice — through fees and tickets.

Candise Leonard, senior in human ecology and mass communications, is a member of the Intercollegiate Athletic Council which recommended the tentative ticket-price increases.

Although students are paying twice, she said they still pay less than the faculty and the public.

"Everyone else pays more. At the most, a student will pay $250 over four years and get some of the best seats in the house," she said.

Just to be eligible for a seating option — not a ticket — donors must give a minimum gift of $2,500, which makes them eligible for no more than 20 tickets, Longberg said.

Gephardt

Today is the deadline to file for a House seat in Missouri. That could have been the determining factor for the timing of his withdrawal, Morse said.

Glickman endorsed Gephardt because "he's dynamic. I just think he had the characteristics to be a good president. He is a good, moderate, Midwesterner."

Gephardt couldn't raise the money needed to support a presidential campaign, he said. "Nowadays, dollars are more important than ideas."

The process of primaries and caucuses, as it has developed, practically forces candidates who can't maintain funding to withdraw from the race, said William Richter, professor of political science.

"In a general election Gephardt would have done better because some of his policies may have appealed to Republican or unaffiliated people," Richter said.

In the past couple of decades, the number of states switching from closed caucuses to open primaries has been phenomenal, he said.

To some extent, being in the House of Representatives is advantageous, Richter said. But, the last time a member of the House stepped up to the presidency was in 1840.

Big Eight

Arizona in semifinal No. 2.

"Watching two Big Eight teams get into our own Final Four was the most exciting thing I ever saw," said Bill Hancock, associate commissioner of the Big Eight and one of the major figures in planning and running this 50th anniversary Final Four.

"It's just a dream come true for us after all those years of struggling so hard," Hancock said. "We hoped against hope we would get a team in the Final Four. Now we have two. It's just unbelievable. Coaches and athletic directors from all over the conference have been calling each other and offering congratulatons."

"All year long, we felt the Big Eight was one of the best in the country," said K-State coach Lon Kruger, whose team was knocked out of the Final Four by Kansas Sunday. "Two teams making the Final Four gives that feeling credibility. Oklahoma is explosive and plays good defense, and I have confidence that Kansas will do a great job."

When the season opened, Big Eight coaches told anybody who would listen that their league had come of age.

If Kansas gets past Duke and Oklahoma overcomes Arizona in Saturday's semifinals, it would set up an all-Big Eight championship finale — a prospect which leaves conference fathers glassy-eyed.

"It would be the greatest thing since 1971 when Nebraska, Oklahoma and Colorado finished 1-2-3 in the final football poll," Hancock said.

bles, three stolen bases and 28 runs batted in. Also, keep an eye on him at first base. His fielding average is .963. Now remember that he wears No. 27, and you'll know who the stud of the team is.

Another big gun for the Wildcats so far this season is No. 5, Jim Donohue. In the 21 games he's played in so far, he's knocked in 36 runs to go along with his nine homers and .373 batting average.

With regard to pitching, K-State has a lot of depth — with a total of 10 arms it can count on this season. One pitcher who has proved himself a leader so far this season is Bill Schafer.

Schafer, No. 33, has started out with a perfect 5-0 record in 26 innings of work. He has given up 23 hits, allowed 10 earned runs, struck out 29 batters and has an earned run average of 3.46.

Now, fans, those of you who have been to all the games in Ahearn Field House, spring is here and that usually means nice weather. With nice weather, people want to go outdoors. For $5, students can see the rest of K-State's 20 home games this season. If you don't care to see all of the games, then grab a dollar and your student ID card and go enjoy an afternoon of baseball at Frank Myers Field.

Kruger interviews at University of Texas

Staff/Steve Wolgast

Men's basketball coach Lon Kruger is greeted by more than 150 fans at Manhattan Municipal Airport just after midnight after he returned from Austin, Texas, where he met with University of Texas officials to discuss the job of head coach. Kruger is the top candidate for the position.

By The Collegian Staff

"We love you, Lon. Please don't go."

That was the basic message more than 150 people delivered to men's basketball coach Lon Kruger at 12:20 a.m. today when the second-year head coach arrived at Manhattan Municipal Airport following a visit to the University of Texas at Austin.

Kruger reportedly is the top candidate for the Longhorns' head coaching position, even though he was not one of the 25 persons to apply for the job, according to the Daily Texan.

As of Sunday, sources at Texas' athletic department said Kruger was the one they were going after.

Even though rumors began circulating about Kruger taking the job at Texas as early as March 11, Kruger said he was not contacted until Monday by Texas athletic director DeLoss Dodds, a former K-State track star, coach and athletic director.

Kruger's formal interview was in Austin Tuesday afternoon.

"It went well. It went smooth and the people are nice," Kruger said.

Kruger has been the only candidate to interview for the job in Austin.

According to The Dallas Morning News, sources close to K-State's athletic department think an offer is "pretty close" and that Kruger will accept it.

"I think the fact he's down there, and no one else has been, means something," the sources told the News.

The sources also said that Kruger would meet with his players this morning to reveal his decision. Upon his arrival in Manhattan, Kruger said: "We don't know what we're going to do to tell you the truth."

He added that there was no timetable involved in his decision.

He also said the impromptu pep rally will make the decision even harder.

"You all have been so good all year and forever, so this doesn't surprise me," Kruger said.

According to the News, Texas has made Kruger an offer. But Kruger would not comment on the offer.

"That's not an issue. Kansas State, to be honest with you, has been very generous and that's not an issue at all," he said.

Last week, The Associated Press reported K-State athletic director Larry Travis had talked with Kruger about a raise. Kruger has a four-year contract which pays him a base salary of $65,000 annually. After last season, Kruger was given a $7,000 raise and a one-year extension.

Dole ends campaign
Senator congratulates Bush

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republican Bob Dole ended his campaign for president Tuesday, saying he was "bloodied but unbowed" by the series of bruising primary losses that finished his candidacy.

Dole withdrew before a supportive audience of Senate and House colleagues and offered congratulations to George Bush, the all-but-anointed GOP nominee.

"My friends know that I am a fighter; I don't like to lose," the Senate Republican leader said. "I have been beaten before, and no doubt will be again. But I have never been defeated and never will be."

Dole, the Kansas senator, had signaled for days that he was ready to bow to the inevitable.

"One thing you learn how to do pretty well in our business is to count," he said in his withdrawal announcement. "You come to trust your instincts to tell you when it's over, and in my heart I know the time is now.

"So I return to the Senate as the Republican leader ... ready to do all I can to elect Republicans in November and doing all I can for our nominee, George Bush."

Bush, in Wisconsin, said he had telephoned Dole to thank him for a "very generous statement." He added, "It's been a hard-fought campaign and I respect the tenacity of Bob Dole."

Pat Robertson, in a statement distributed from his headquarters in Chesapeake, Va., praised Dole as "a magnificent competitor." The former television evangelist, with almost no delegate support, conceded "it seems obvious" that Bush will be the nominee but said anew that he won't withdraw from the GOP contest.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said there was no change in President Reagan's policy of neutrality, despite Dole's action.

Dole made his exit before an audience jammed into the Senate Caucus Room, a historic room where John F.

Arson not yet ruled out as cause of Aggieville fire

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

An early-morning fire in Aggieville Tuesday that gutted one business and slightly damaged two others is being investigated as arson.

There were no injuries in the fire, which was reported at 4:19 a.m. Tuesday and destroyed His Majesty's Fish 'n' Chips Seafood Shoppe Corp., 1108 Laramie St. It took firefighters about 30 minutes to put out the blaze.

"It was a suspicious fire," said Larry Wesche, fire marshal with the Manhattan Fire Department, who added that an investigator from the state fire marshal's office is investigating it as arson. As of Tuesday afternoon, there were no suspects in the case, Wesche said.

"We're just now in the process of interviews," he said.

Although there are no suspects, no one has been ruled out of suspicion, he said.

Robert Reyer, vice president of the business, refused to comment Tuesday night. Bill Yearian, investor, referred comment to Reyer.

His Majesty's, which is located in the Handi-Corner shopping center, is a total loss, Wesche said.

"It was pretty well totally burned," he said.

Although damage estimates were undetermined Tuesday, Wesche said it could approach $80,000. Final damage estimates are to be set today.

Workers came in Tuesday afternoon to clear out what was salvagable and to board up the outside of the building.

The business had been open only about 2½ months.

Although the contents were a total loss, the structure remains intact and was relatively unscathed, Wesche said. Two adjacent businesses — Kinko's Copies, 1110 Laramie, and Acute Hair Clinic, 1106 Laramie — suffered mild smoke damage.

"What we're going to do is have some professional cleaners come in and clean it up," said Dianne Fechner, owner of Acute Hair Clinic. The business closed Tuesday, and Fechner's goal is to have it re-opened by Thursday, although she said it may not re-open until Monday.

Anne Fitzgerald, manager of Kinko's, said the business had some smoke damage but wasn't forced to temporarily close. However, the business, which is open 24 hours a day, was forced to close for about 1½ hours while fire fighters battled the fire next door.

Speaker: Marketplace has pervasive impact on values

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

People who believe the public doesn't have control of the marketplace are destructive to the values and well-being of society, said Stanley Cohen in his Lou Douglas Lecture Tuesday night.

In Cohen's lecture to almost 200 people, he said that voters can control their economic destiny by supporting leaders who will allow them to flex their economic strength.

Cohen, London editor of Focus magazine, said: "The marketplace has more to do with our plight than we have been willing to admit. It is an invisible force which affects our economic success or failure. It has a pervasive impact on moral and social values."

Society's model of the marketplace is an economic democracy. It calls for unrestricted competition among vendors and for consumers to make rational and informed decisions, Cohen said.

"As consumers spend their dollars they 'vote' for the products and services they want to elect," he said.

But often consumers don't care

Campout at Ahearn for tickets supported by administration

Editor's Note: This is the third part of a five-part series on Student Senate's Ticket Sales Task Force, its mission and the problems it is encountering.

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Despite the move of men's basketball games from Ahearn Field House to Fred Bramlage Coliseum next year, students and administrators are working hard to keep the traditional campout for season tickets alive.

Student Ticket Task Force member's discussion surrounding possible modifications to camping out seem to lean toward preserving the status quo.

"The camping out should be limited to maybe a week," said Athletic Director Larry Travis. "If it goes on too long, it becomes a negative.

"Nothing is down on paper as yet. We're waiting for the Student Ticket Task Force proposal, then we'll sit down with (men's basketball) coach (Lon) Kruger and get his input," he said.

But, Travis said he was not trying to speak for the task force.

Despite the opening of Bramlage,

Students present proposals

Architecture students will present their proposals for new development of Kansas City's historic city market April 13-22 at the Kansas Regents' Center for Architectural Studies in Kansas City, Mo.

The proposals explore revitalizing and expanding the district within constraints of its function and historical character.

The 10 fifth-year students will show city market designs completed while attending K-State's academic program in Kansas City. The fifth year of the program allows students to work with a K-State professor in Kansas City on real-life architecture problems.

Senate begins debating allocations

SGA considers officers' raise

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

Tuesday was the first night of the tentative allocation process for Student Senate. The chief amendment being debated dealt with an increase in the annual salaries of the student body president and the Student Senate chairman.

The Finance Committee recommended the salaries remain at $3,600 for the student body president and $2,700 for the Senate chairman.

The amendment, proposed by Bernie Giefer, graduate school senator, would increase the student body president's salary to $3,700 and the Senate chairman's salary to $2,835, representing a 5 percent increase.

Doug Folk, Student Senate chairman, and Troy Lubbers, student body president, estimated they spent 50 and 70 hours respectively each week in the duties of their offices.

These positions have not received an increase since the 1981-1982 school year, said Sally Routson, Student Governing Association adviser.

"The length of time since there has been an increase is not important. What is important is whether or not they are being paid fairly," said Justin Sanders, graduate school senator.

"Raising the salaries of two people is not what we were elected to do," Sanders said. "The money we collect should be used for student activities," he said.

Todd Johnson, agriculture senator, said, "We're on an increase (in enrollment). It's time to do things like increase salaries. Next year, we can increase student fees (the activity fee) to cover the expense."

"We're starting to outprice the candidates," Lubbers said. Many students can't afford to give up another job and pay the campaign expenses to be student body president, he said.

"I don't think this is the year," Lubbers added, "but sooner or later we'll have to increase the salaries so that not only rich students will be able to run for office."

Senate will continue debate on this amendment Thursday.

In earlier business, Senate approved the Associated Students of Karsas recommended allocation of $19,072.20. This is 60 cents per on-campus student.

"All the student government associations of the schools served by ASK voted to pay the 60 cents per student," explained Chris Graves, ASK executive director.

This is part of a plan approved five years ago, Graves said. The fee was 50 cents for two years, 55 cents for a year and 60 cents last year. ASK hopes to keep it at 60 cents for several years, she said.

After two hours of debate, Senate voted to approve the ASK at K-State budget of $1,527.70. The debate centered on the number of advertisements ASK at K-State should run to encourage voter registration and student involvement in ASK at K-State, as well as to inform students of issues before the Legislature.

"ASK is the best program students can buy," Lubbers said. I'd like anyone to show me a program that does more for the student body, he said.

Senate also approved the Finance Committee's recommendation for the Consumer Relations Board of $3,727.30

Senate recessed early to meet Lon Kruger, K-State head basketball coach, as he returned from a job interview with the University of Texas at Austin.

At 9:40 p.m., Folk informed Senate that Kruger would be returning to Manhattan Municipal Airport at 10 p.m. Senate moved to recess until 6 p.m. Thursday night so that senators could join other students meeting the plane and hoping to convince Kruger to stay at K-State.

Dole supporters disappointed

Senator may seek re-election to current seat

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer
and Erwin Seba
Government Editor

A member of Sen. Bob Dole's presidential campaign organization in Riley County expressed disappointment at Tuesday's announcement by Dole that he was leaving the presidential race.

Mark Spire, associate professor of surgery and medicine and co-chairman of the Riley County Dole for President campaign, said area supporters were extremely saddened by Dole's decision to end his bid for president.

Spire said he believed Dole would now seek re-election to his Senate seat.

"People didn't associate him with the success of the Reagan administration," he said of Dole, contrasting him with Vice President George Bush, who has portrayed himself as a loyal follower of the president.

"There was no way to separate the issues between he and Bush. You can't attack the policies of a popular and loyal president," he said. "Bush is not as electable as Bob Dole; his support with Democrats is not as good as Dole's."

The organization inside of Kansas was excellent, but just not as good as Bush's outside of Kansas, he said.

Joseph Unekis, associate professor of political science, said Dole was unable to build an effective campaign organization.

"I surmise from what I have read that it takes more than a message, you have to be organized," he said.

Bush out-organized Dole and Dole never created a messsage that distinguished him from other Republicans, Unekis said.

"Bush's strategy of identifying himself with Reagan worked because Reagan is still very popular with Republicans," Unekis said.

"There's a joke that Dole was the candidate without an organization and Bush was the organization without a candidate," he said.

The focus of a campaign is to convince members of the party and the voters that the candidate can do the job, he said.

It's difficult to translate the power and strength that are attributes to a candidate inside the circle of Washington insiders to the general population, he said.

Candidates end up developing two sets of skills, he said, running for president and being president.

Dole has been at the center of power for 20 years and may have been an excellent president, but lacked the skills to run for president, he said.

"Apparently Dole's biggest problem was his inability to delegate responsibility to others," he said.

"Bush was able to dodge the Iran-Contra thing and let Dole self-destruct because of a lack of organization," he said.

William Richter, professor of political science, said Dole's backing away from criticism of Bush about the Iran-Contra affair was important in his failure to beat Bush in major primaries.

"There's a joke that Dole was the candidate without an organization and Bush was the organization without a candidate."
—Joseph Unekis, associate professor of political science

Richter said Dole stopped criticizing Bush after the Vice President's heated argument with CBS Anchorman Dan Rather about Bush's role in the Iran-Contra affair.

Apparently, Dole's staff believed Bush has generated a lot of sympathy among voters after the argument with Rather, Richter said.

Dole's withdrawal only confirms what many people had believed would happen with Dole's campaign since the Super Tuesday primaries and caucuses; he said.

"The handwriting has been on the wall since Super Tuesday," Richter said.

Jerry P. Rosenburg, assistant professor of political science, said Dole's withdrawal raises serious questions about the system of selecting presidential nominees.

"It still shows how a small group of voters in a small unrepresentative state can affect the presidential race," Rosenburg said.

"Maybe that says something about the strange electoral system we have for nominating and electing presidents," Rosenburg said.

Rosenburg said Dole's failure to claim the nomination came about because he was unable to capitalize on his victory in Iowa with a win in New Hampshire.

"Dole had Bush on the ropes and let him slip off," he said.

Dole lost New Hampshire because he did not defend himself against Bush campaign television commericials which portrayed Dole as voting for tax increases in the past that he would raise taxes if elected president.

K-State named bargain college

'Changing Times' sets criteria for 'best buys'

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

Bargain hunters, take note.

K-State has been chosen a bargain college by Changing Times magazine.

An article appearing in this month's edition of the publication lists K-State among 42 schools which it considers to be the best education buys in America.

Average American Collegiate Testing scores of incoming freshmen and the combined price of tuition, fees and on-campus housing were the criteria used in determining the nation's best college buys.

K-State's cost of $3,521 for an in-state resident is well below the national average of $4,100 for state institutions.

In addition to the objective data, Changing Times included the results of a poll of 13 experts in the education field, including Louis Albert, director of professional services for the American Association for Higher Education; Michael Nettles, senior research scientist for the Educational Testing Service; and Edward B. Fiske, author of "Selective Guide to Colleges" and "Best Buys in College Education."

President Jon Wefald called K-State's inclusion an honor.

"It is an honor to be named to this distinguished list, especially when you note the appropriateness and depth of the selection criteria and the stature, experience and knowledge of the selection panel," he said.

Wefald said the rating is a tribute to the faculty and reputation of the school.

"It's not surprising for those of us who deal with prospective students that we received this award," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life. "We talk with literally thousands of students every year, and I am impressed with how aware they are of the high quality of the K-State faculty."

Panama solution 'positive'

Church asks Noriega to step down

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — The Roman Catholic Church on Tuesday called for Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega to resign and offered to act as a mediator between the strongman and opponents demanding his ouster.

A church spokesman said Archbishop Marcos A. McGrath had talked with both sides and received "a positive impression" that a solution could be found to the agonizing crisis that has gripped Panama for more than a month.

In other developments Tuesday:

■ A general strike continued for the ninth day, with shopowners keeping their stores closed despite a violent crackdown against government opponents on Monday.

■ The U.S. helicopter carrier Okinawa passed through the Panama Canal on its way to its home port in San Diego. The U.S. Defense Department described the passage as "routine." But Noriega called the passage "a threat and an aggression."

■ Noriega said in a speech Tuesday night that he would not be vanquished by what he said was an imperialist plot against him.

Noriega told a "Solidarity with Panama" conference that the United States had spent more than $100 million in the effort to topple him.

"But with all the gold in the world they have not been able to bring this people or this commander or these Defense Forces to their knees," he said, shaking his fist to wild applause.

Delegates from about 25 Latin American and Caribbean countries attended the conference, but few represented governments.

■ In Washington, Panamanian Ambassador Juan B. Sosa, speaking on behalf of ousted President Eric Arturo Delvalle, asked the United States to send a military force to remove Noriega, head of the Defense Forces. "We're asking the international community to help," Sosa said. "We're paying the price. But we've got no weapons. Give us weapons."

The call for Noriega's resignation marked the first time the church had made its stance public. Last week, church officials privately urged Noriega, under indictment in the United States on drug trafficking charges, to step down.

On Monday, troops firing shotguns, tear gas and water cannons smashed a demonstration by thousands of anti-government marchers, chasing them off the streets of the capital.

Afterward, troops raided the Marriott Hotel, which serves as the headquarters of Panama's opposition and the foreign press.

About 20 opposition leaders and eight foreign journalists were arrested. The journalists and most of the opposition leaders were released Tuesday although Carlos Gonzalez de la Lastra, a founder and director of the National Civic Crusade, was still missing.

The crusade is a coalition of about 200 business, professional, labor and political groups that has been seeking Noriega's removal since last June.

"We are all angry at this latest demonstration, at people being beaten and threatened," spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, adding that the Noriega regime "is showing its true colors."

K-State proves it doesn't take belligerent coaches to get wins

Commentary

WALLY BROCKHOFF
Collegian Columnist

Sit down, coach, sit down! Sit down, coach, sit down!

Everyone who has attended a basketball game in Ahearn Field House has heard this chant at some point in time. It comes after an unusual display of anger by visiting coaches at a referee's call or judgment. Those poor coaches! If only they knew that the Ahearn crowd was defending the parentage of the victimized Big Eight officials, they would not feel like we were being such smart alecks.

Caustic crowds are not NCAA basketball coaches' biggest headaches, though. College coaches must constantly juggle competing interests from alumni, athletic directors, the media, the NCAA and others. With all the pressures the coaches must face, and with the glorification of coaching "geniuses" like Larry Brown, Billy Tubbs and Bobby Knight, I can see why more and more coaches have become classless crybabies.

Coaches who spend the entire game pacing up and down the court screaming at the officials are given credit for "working the officials," while the coach who remains positive and encourages his team is condemned for being passive.

That is why it is so refreshing to finally see a class act like our own coach Lon Kruger receive the recognition he deserves. After getting "dogged" by The Associated Press in Big Eight Coach of the Year voting, the Basketball Writers Association was wise enough to vote Kruger District 12 Coach of the Year over Kansas' Brown and the overweight coach from Oklahoma named Tubbs. I guess nice guys do not always have to finish last.

Maybe I am just spoiled. At K-State, we are fortunate enough to have an administration and an athletic director that are supportive of the University's coaches and do not pressure them to cheat in recruiting or sacrifice the long-term health of the programs in order to get short-term benefits. Also, having Jack Hartman and Kruger as our basketball coaches, we forget how fortunate we are to have such loyal, competent and classy coaches.

The success of the 'Cats basketball team in the NCAA tournament is a testament to the rewards that still can come to a team that does not act like the world owes it something. A testament to what an unselfish and team-oriented style of play can accomplish. A testament to worrying about how the team plays instead of blaming the referees for every loss or mistake. A testament to hard work, smart play and defense as an integral part of playing the game of basketball. And, a testament to the effects that rabid fan support, through the good and bad times, can have on inspiring a collegiate team.

Kruger has often referred to basketball team members as representatives of the University, and indeed they are. We can all be very proud of the manner in which they have represented K-State. Right or wrong, the athletics of an academic institution have a great deal to do with the amount and type of exposure an academic institution receives.

This is especially true in the Midwest, where practically everyone I know reads the sports section of the newspaper first. That is why I am glad to have K-State represented by Kruger and the team, even if it does take the national media longer to catch on to our class act than the ranting and raving taking place down the river.

To all those involved with K-State athletics, especially the outstanding coaches and athletes involved with our non-revenue sports programs, thanks for a wonderful year in 1987-88.

Waldheim created his own 'credibility gap'

During the Watergate scandal, as revelation after revelation from newspapers and congressional committees tore down the stone wall of plausible deniability from the Nixon administration, a new phrase was coined for the lack of credence given to President Nixon's denials of involvement in the cover-up of his aides' wrong doing.

The president was said to suffer from a credibility gap.

Certainly, the president of Austria, former United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, must be suffering from a similar gap in the face of a new disclosure about his record as an officer in the Nazi German Army.

The gap is of Waldheim's own making. When he launched his campaign for the Austrian presidency, Waldheim claimed he had served on the Russian front and had been wounded early in the war and then returned to Austria to work on his doctoral degree.

Documents uncovered by the World Jewish Congress established that Waldheim had in fact served as an officer in a German Army unit in Greece after being wounded — a unit which spent most of its time fighting and hunting down Greek partisans.

Waldheim then admitted the truth, but he said he was just a staff officer who never participated in any "special actions" against Greek civilians and freedom fighters. Besides, he maintained, he was just like everyone else, doing what he had to do to stay alive.

Documents released Friday by Jewish World Congress prove that staying alive for Waldheim included communicating a directive from Adolf Hitler ordering the execution of Greek partisans being held in Athens.

On Aug. 8, 1943, Waldheim, then a lieutenant on the German General Staff attached to the 11th Italian Army in Athens, entered the order in his unit's war diary and transmitted it by radio to a German division in the field.

This document, discovered in the U.S. National Archives by the World Jewish Congress in 1986, is one of the documents which led the U.S. government to place Waldheim's name on a "watch list" of undesirable aliens who are barred from the United States and who are to be detained if they ever enter the country.

It is, of course, impossible for Waldheim to make amends for his participation in Nazi war crimes. But, he could spare his country any further embarrassment and resign from the presidency as quickly as possible.

And after resigning, he could just shut up. For if he were to speak the truth now, no one would believe him. That's the price one pays for digging a credibility gap.

Sex-crime offenders should get AIDS test

The Kansas Legislature is finally preparing to take a stand on the testing of convicted sex offenders for the AIDS virus.

In a bill being considered by the Senate Public Health and Welfare Committee, all convicted sex criminals would be tested for the virus. The results of these tests would then be given to the victim, the court and the convicted person, thus easing the fears of the victim involved as well as pinpointing a deliberate spreader of the disease.

Unfortunately, the bill does not as yet specify what will happen to the criminal if he is found to be infected.

However, not all of the Legislature is in agreement with this bill. Some, like Brenda Braden, a deputy attorney general, would like to see all persons tested who have been merely charged with a crime during which bodily fluids were exchanged.

She said it isn't fair to make the victim wait until the person is convicted before the testing occurs, especially considering that some criminal cases take longer than six months.

This option has drawn attack from the American Civil Liberties Union as being an unconstitutional search and seizure since the person has not yet been convicted of a crime. The committee turned down the motion to include this option in the bill, since the victims themselves could be tested anyway, and a judge can issue search warrants for blood tests if there is probable cause.

The original bill of doing tests on convicted criminals is a logical one, and much more constitutionally sound than requiring tests of all alleged criminals.

If the Legislature is willing to take a stand on the criminal aspect of the disease, it will soon follow with more plans to encourage research and control of the disease.

Thanks, guys

Editor,

Dear Coach Lon Kruger and the rest of the K-State men's basketball team:

Thanks, guys. You made this year at K-State one that many will never forget. For many of us who bleed purple, you gave us reason once again to be proud of the tradition that many have left behind. You gave us reason to camp out for two weeks before basketball tickets went on sale, like many of our fellow students in years past.

You gave us reason to celebrate many great victories. At the same time, we felt badly right along with you when we weren't so fortunate.

You gave Ahearn Field House the finale it deserved. You gave Billy Tubbs the beating he has earned. You closed the University of Kansas's long streak when many thought it would go on at least until the University of Oklahoma invaded Lawrence.

You made it worth being hoarse for days after our home games. You made it possible to return to the top of the Big Eight where we will always belong. You made it possible for CBS and the rest of the nation to swallow the fact that Kansas State does indeed include the part "State." You made it possible to celebrate the tremendous victory against Purdue with our fellow students. You made it worth shedding a few tears as we watched the season that seemed unstoppable do just that — stop.

But our pride and our thanks don't stop. Thanks to you, we will be able to relive many great times this season. Thanks to you, we can again hold our heads high when we talk about K-State basketball. Thanks for all those memories Mitch, Charles, Will and Ron. We won't forget the determination you all displayed in your eyes as you left for Pontiac, Mich.

We won't forget how hard you tried to get to Kansas City, where we belong. But instead, we'll have to think of how it could have been, as we're sure you'll do the same. You have no reason to hang your heads — be disappointed, but not ashamed.

Thanks may not be enough to repay you for what you've given us, but we're awfully proud of you. You deserved a trip to Kansas City. You earned it by playing your best against the best. You know it. We know it. But the rest of the nation will never know it. However, the rest of the nation has no feeling about what it's like to be a K-Stater. But we know and we're proud.

For all of this the best we can say is thanks. It's not much, but you've earned it. So here goes nothing. Thanks, guys.

Misguided efforts

Editor,

Efforts to resolve the question of student funding for the KSU Childcare Cooperative are being aimed in the wrong direction. Some are aimed at the question, "Are increased funds really needed?" The general understanding is yes they are, but only an in-depth study will reveal the answer.

Other efforts are going into the debate of whether the entire student body should pay while only a few would use the co-op. "Is this fair?" Yes, it is. It is the very basis our education system is founded on. The validation of this policy, taxing everyone to support schools, comes from the belief that public education will benefit society as a whole. The funding of preschools is no different.

So the real question is whether preschools benefit society or not. And the answer to this question is no, they do not, because preschool children are at an age where formal schooling has been determined to be unneeded. If it were needed, then why is it not currently required (and funded) by law? The things a pre-school child is capable of learning — cooperation and obedience — can be taught by parents or babysitters just as easily as by a teacher.

So it seems we are wasting our time arguing over an expensive alternative to babysitters.

'Margin of Reality'

Editor,

The "Margin of Excellence." What a great phrase to help shake out some more coins from the Kansas Legislature. A more realistic phrase, for those of us down here in the teaching faculty ranks, might be the "Margin of Reality."

To be more specific, our copy center budget per faculty member in our department is $15. It's not much, and right about this time in the semester I run out of money. As a matter of fact, I'm 17 cents over my budget.

That means that the rest of my copy expenses come out of my pocket — and at the 5 cents per copy price and not the 1½ -2 cent departmental price. It will cost me around $15 for my final exam alone.

My point is that I certainly hope some of the Margin of Excellence manages to trickle down to my copy center budget.

Speaker addresses British consumer rights

Editor: Market's economic factors evolving

By Candise Leonard
Contributing Writer

At a press conference Tuesday, Stanley Cohen reflected on the condition of British politics and consumer rights in the marketplace.

While working more than 40 years in Washington, D.C., Cohen monitored regulatory agencies and wrote about concerns of the consumer for Advertising Age.

Most recently, he used the same approach as the editor of a British magazine, Focus. With a staff composed of reporters from 17 countries, Cohen directed the magazine for European marketing and advertising executives.

"There is a phenomenon in Europe," Cohen said. "It is the formation of the 'new Europe' and the Common Market."

Changes are evolving due to the Treaty of Rome, he said.

The treaty was adopted after World War II for the European Economic Community with the purpose of "ensuring the economic and social progress by establishing a common market to unite the economic policies of the member states."

According to "Modern Political Systems," the Common Market "ultimately would allow the free exchange of goods, establish common forms of taxation, common social security provisions, operate with the same currency and use similar banking practices and rules for the control of credit."

Cohen equated some of these policies for Europeans with the Bill of Rights protection given to U.S. consumers.

One change was accomplished through a case that cited the Treaty of Rome, Cohen said. British Parliament was forced to change its position and establish equal pay scales for women.

Cohen said the economic factors of a common market are evolving faster than the political factors for the common market.

"It's hard to make it work because Europe is wedded to the idea that you wheel-and-deal in business," Cohen said.

For example, he said most advertising agencies do not use rate cards. Instead, they will agree to some accounts even if the client has only half of the money needed for the number of ad insertions they are requesting.

"Today, sovereignty rests in the institution of the British crown," Cohen said. "You have only the rights the Parliament has voted for you."

He said the United Kingdom has no freedom of information law nor libel laws, so there is more work to be done.

Cohen said working in England made him appreciate the American Revolution, which was fought for sovereignty by the people.

"Government is designated as our servant, with only the powers we give to it," he said. "And, the U.S. government must be accountable."

Professor explains theories of shape

By Chad L. Sanborn
Staff Writer

William Thurston, professor of mathematics at Princeton University, defined topology as the manipulation of a shape into another shape using a certain number of degrees of freedom of motion.

About 100 people, including students, faculty and guests from Emporia State University, attended as Thurston delivered the second annual Harry E. Valentine Lecture Tuesday in Cardwell Hall 102.

The topology and geometry of shapes are the basis of his work in creative mathematics, he said. The difference between the two theories of shape lies in what each demands of a shape.

"Geometry is concerned with precise shapes," he said. "It cares about the difference of angles in a triangle and its exact measurements.

"Topology is interested in shape without quantitative measurements," Thurston said. "It demands more qualitative measurements."

As an example of topology, Thurston drew a sphere inside a cube.

As far as topologists are concerned, the two shapes are the same, because they both have the same number of degrees of freedom of motion, Thurston said.

In addition, he said that if a person could stand inside the sphere and look through it to the cube, there would be a matching point on the cube for each point on the sphere and vice versa.

After receiving his doctorate in mathematics from the University of California at Berkeley in 1972, Thurston spent a year at the Institute for Advanced Study and was appointed assistant professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1973. A year later he was named professor of mathematics at Princeton.

In 1983, Thurston received the highest recognition a mathematician can receive when he was awarded the Fields Medal, which is considered by mathematicians as the equivalent of the Nobel Prize. He won the award for revolutionizing the study of topology in two and three dimensions.

High schools to act in K-State Players' festival competition

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

Nine high schools will be participating in the third annual One-Act Play Festival sponsored by the K-State Players at 8 a.m. today in Nichols Hall.

The festival provides an opportunity for Kansas high school students to perform a one-act play of their choice, and to receive critiques of their performance.

"It is done as a festival — not as a competition," said Rhonda Miracle, speech instructor. "We don't want schools to be afraid to come because of one dominant school.

"We just want the schools to bring their work, show their work, and it will be as open and educational as possible," she said.

Miracle said that 200 students are expected to attend the festival.

"We have had a very positive reaction (from previous years), and each year we get larger," Miracle said. "The first year we had five schools performing and one school watching. This year we have nine schools performing and two watching.

"We anticipate next year that we may need to make it into a two-day event," she said.

Harold R. Nichols, head of the speech department, and Winona Fletcher, professor of theater at Indiana University, will be present to evaluate the performances. Fletcher is visiting K-State for the week and will also work with the ethnic studies program and the Ebony Theatre.

The morning session is scheduled to begin at 8 a.m. and the afternoon session will begin at 4 p.m. Each performing school will be allowed one-hour total time to erect its set, perform and to strike its set.

The number of students from each school will range from five to 23. High schools presenting one-act plays and their instructors are as follows: Onaga, Jolene Clark; Marysville, Julie Hagemier; Peabody, Dorothy Rucker; Junction City, Lee Howe; Shawnee Heights, Margaret Ogle; Valley Heights, Jan Pope; Bishop Miege, Robin Mesh; Rose Hill, Tony Dockers; and Manhattan, Michelle Hendrix.

Decision time draws near for MOE vote

Margin money to go for merit increases

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

As the current legislative session draws nearer to conclusion, so does the time for the Legislature to do-or-die on the Margin of Excellence proposal.

Gov. Mike Hayden's budget proposal for funding of faculty salary increases was sweetened by House action to the tune of $1.7 million to alleviate salary disparities that would have been created between teaching and non-teaching faculty in Hayden's version.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee in a 6-5 vote added another $4.5 million to the House version of the proposal to provide funding for the first year of targeted investments at six regents universities.

"I feel reasonably confident we can get the MOE package by the full Senate," said Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City and member of the Ways and Means Committee.

"When that happens, the House has two options. They can concur, which they won't do, or it goes to conference committee," he said.

The House proposal gives $6.7 million for faculty salaries and the Senate package adds $4.5 million to that, he said.

The outcome of the bill will be based on the selling job the Senators do with House members and the selling job supporters of MOE do with the House, Werts said.

Provost James Coffman said faculty salary increases would be distributed on a merit basis.

"The money will go to the college and the dean allocates it to departments, then department heads make recommendations to the dean," he said.

It is not a given that everyone in the faculty will receive a salary increase, he said.

Across the board salary increases imply there is a cost of living aspect to MOE, which is precluded by a mandate from the Board of Regents, Coffman said.

It is theoretically possible that some people would get a salary increase greater than the 7.9 percent average recommended by the regents, some could get less and some could receive no raise, Coffman said.

"I would anticipate that alleviation of any compression of salary would not be a primary objective," he said.

That would not be in concert with the concept of merit increases, he said.

"On the other hand, I'm sure there are instances where in recent years people who have been highly productive at a time when there was little money to reward that, and there would be instances where that would be taken into account," Coffman said.

"In the last year, we have slipped from 18 percent below the national average for state universities and land grant colleges, to 23 percent below the national average," he said.

"To take a step this year at correcting the problem and not follow through by supporting MOE next year would be a waste of this year's money. It's that simple," Coffman said.

"I feel reasonably confident we can get the MOE package by the full Senate."

—Sen. Merrill Werts, Senate Ways and Means Committee

"One of the reasons MOE has come this far, in addition to all the schools taking a coordinated effort in achieving a common goal which was critical, was the support of key groups like Farm Bureau, Kansas Livestock Association, Kansas Bankers Association and the Kansas Chambers of Commerce and Industry. And we appreciate their support," he said.

People here need to realize that President Wefald was singularly instrumental in getting their support, he said.

"The Associated Students of Kansas were really instrumental in getting the job done, and they're still gunning on it," he said.

Paul McCright, associate professor of industrial engineering, in his first year as faculty at K-State, said, "My gut feeling is that MOE should improve the salary structure overall. What effect it will have on me personally in this first year I don't know, but I will be watching in the next years."

"The 7.9 percent is not earth shaking and when you're coming from behind you're only talking 3 percent or 4 percent above the cost of living increase," he said.

"If I talk to people at other universities who I consider to be my peers, and they are making $10,000 a year more than I am, I begin to feel that the people of Kansas don't appreciate me and recognize me for what I do," McCright said.

Ronald Downey, professor of planning and evaluation services and chairman of the Faculty Senate committee on salaries and fringe benefits, said the K-State Fiscal Year 1988-89 Budget delineated three problems that were the targets of MOE dollars.

The first target is to narrow the gap in salary levels between K-State and other institutions by providing a raise to the majority of people.

Second is salary compression. It is clearly recognized that entry level salaries are approaching the salary of faculty who have been here for 5 to 10 years, he said.

"Thirdly is the old issue of market values, which goes hand in glove with salary compression," Downey said.

"We've got to make salaries higher in those areas where the market pressures are the greatest so they are consistent with the marketplace," he said.

"We don't have the same problems in all academic areas. As an example, engineering has many outside markets as compared to some others," he said.

"The way we have tried to deal with market pressures before was to raise entry level salaries, contributing further to salary compression," Downey said.

"The issue is, do you distribute the money equally to all budget units," he said.

The danger of giving it equally to all units is that assumes market pressure, salary compression and peer lag is equal in all units, and it is well documented that it's not, he said.

"The minute you say to dean A, 'I'm going to give you a percentage of the money higher than dean B,' you have an immediate political problem," Downey said.

"How do you determine where salary compression, peer lag and market pressure is greatest? What data base do you use?" he asked.

Donald Hoyt, assistant provost and professor of planning and evaluation services, said the primary data base in determining salary disparity between K-State faculty and faculty at peer institutions is a report generated by the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

"Conclusions on what is the bottom line are based upon that study, but the analysis also takes into account outside market pressures," Hoyt said.

In addition to other universities, industry, business and even the government are seeking the services of qualified people, he said.

Also taken into account are those "high points" the regents traditionally expect K-State to excel at — for example, agriculture, veterinary medicine and engineering along with many others, Hoyt said.

Judgments are made to ensure K-State is competitive in the "high points," even if it is not as competitive in some other areas, he said.

Stephan Konz, professor of industrial engineering, said if an individual department head gives someone a 10 percent raise he has to give someone else a 6 percent raise.

"I don't feel there are many individuals who don't deserve a raise," he said.

"Judgments about merit should look beyond the horizon of six months if you've had people who were productive in research or publication in the last few years but perhaps not in the last six months," Konz said.

"There will always be a body teaching the students, even if the Legislature doesn't give a raise. They just won't be a very good body," he said.

enough to invest the time and effort to inform themselves on the quality and background of products.

"This is understandable," he said. "Much of what they buy involves technology they can't understand. Often the consumer doesn't even know what questions to ask."

Consumers don't necessarily make rational decisions about social objectives or public interest, Cohen said, when they decide to buy automobiles that are souped-up gas guzzlers.

However, their "economic ballot" counts, he said.

Unrestricted competition among vendors relies on "vendors who are supposed to be working their tails off to please consumers," he said.

But, Cohen said, many self-service retailers are managed by "faceless ... upwardly mobile young, eager beavers" who may be the company's only employee earning more than minimum wage.

Suppliers may also have personal goals that are more important than developing better quality products, Cohen said.

"(The suppliers') personal goal is to get moved up or to find a better job elsewhere — probably for the competition," he said. The suppliers emphasize short-term goals, not tomorrow's prospects.

The financial market also falls short of the "utopian concept" of the free-enterprise system.

In theory, the financial market is a stabilizer — the incentive for management to behave efficiently and responsibly. But in practice, its sole concern is maximum return on investment, he said.

"Loyalties are short-lived," Cohen said. "They seldom have anything to do with whether a company produces good products or behaves in a socially responsible manner.

The United States, Cohen said, was once known for creating important products like the automobile and the electric refrigerator. Now it is known as the inventor of fast-food restaurants.

"So it's a less-than-perfect world. To an alarming degree (the marketplace) rewards junk instead of quality, and channels capital and creative energy from the significant to the trivial."

To remedy some of these misplaced priorities, Cohen said some standards are set.

"We set safety standards, pollution standards, and we reserve the right to punish businessmen for using unfair and deceptive advertising," he said.

These government interventions are labeled "consumerism" and "environmental protection," but they have been a part of the free-enterprise system for over a century, Cohen said.

Swaggart receives 1-year suspension

By The Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Fiery evangelist Jimmy Swaggart was ordered Tuesday not to preach from the pulpit or his television show for at least a year while he is rehabilitated from "moral failure" that reportedly included paying a prostitute to pose nude.

In announcing its decision, the Assemblies of God elders disregarded a more lenient three-month suspension recommended by the church in Louisiana. The national church included provisions for two years of rehabilitation and counseling to begin when Swaggart has agreed to rehabilitation in writing.

Louisiana district officials refused comment, as did the Jimmy Swaggart Worldwide Ministries in Baton Rouge, La. But a spokesman said Swaggart's ministry would have a statement Wednesday.

Swaggart is the latest evangelist to be forced from the pulpit. His accuser, Marvin Gorman, was forced from the Assemblies of God when he admitted to an immoral act with a woman. And Jim and Tammy Bakker were forced from their PTL ministry in a scandal that included a sexual encounter between Bakker and young female follower.

"It is hoped that Jimmy Swaggart will agree to this program of rehabilitation and that such program will be redemptive and restorative in the life and ministry of our brother," the Rev. G. Raymond Carlson, the church's general superintendent, said in a statement.

People approved by the church would supervise the rehabilitation, Carlson said. He provided no other details.

"If he does not accept, then the Executive Presbytery would take action to dismiss him," Carlson said at a news conference.

Nutrition in a Shell

People may wonder which came first, but it doesn't really matter as long as we have it — the egg.

How can such a small, oval-shaped food be so full of nutrients and have so many uses?

Eggs may differ in size and color, but they contain similar nutrient values. The average egg weighs 50 grams and contains six grams of protein and five of grams fat. It contains all the vitamins except C and has only 79 calories.

"The biggest drawback of the egg is its cholesterol level," said Albert Adams, professor of animal sciences and industry. The yolk contains the largest amount of nutrients, but it also contains 274 milligrams of cholesterol.

"One function of the egg is as a thickener in recipes," said Mary Clarke, associate professor of foods and nutrition.

"People who are watching their cholesterol level can use recipes that have egg substitutes, or you can separate the yolk and use the whites," Clarke said.

The way an egg is cooked can change the nutritional value of it, she said.

Hard boiling an egg is one of the easiest ways to cook it, and this can be done wrong, Adams said.

Hard cooking an egg is the best way to cook it, not hard boiling, Adams said. The water should be brought to a boil and then shut off and the eggs should sit in the water for 20 minutes until cooked. This method won't toughen the protein or change the nutrient value of it.

When cooking eggs in water, it helps to add a tablespoon of salt to help prevent the shells from cracking.

Not only can eggs be cooked and eaten in many ways, but they can be used for decoration. Eggs most often serve as a symbol for Easter.

Eggs are a primitive symbol of fertility. Christianity saw them as a symbol of the tomb from which Christ arose. The practice of coloring, giving, and eating eggs on Easter still continues today. The rabbit is the legendary deliverer of the symbolic eggs because it was also a symbol of fertility and new life.

Coloring Easter eggs is a custom borrowed from a 5,000-year-old springtime Persian custom that has spread to many countries through the centuries.

The giving of colored eggs at Easter, or vernal equinox, or the starting of spring, symbolized friendship and good will.

In Eastern Europe, the Ukrainians covered their eggs, called pysanky, with elaborate designs. Each color in the designs symbolized a virtue. For example, yellow stood for innocence and wisdom; green represented rebirth, hope and vitality; and orange meant endurance and ambition.

In Belgium, children make baskets and nests filled with hay and hide them for the Easter bunny on Easter eve. The next day they find them filled with colored Easter eggs and candy.

For those who would rather eat eggs than look at them, here are a few interesting recipes to try.

K-Stater awarded fellowship

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

From more than 1,300 candidates, 127 college seniors and recent graduates were chosen as a 1988 Mellon Fellow in the Humanities.

One award recipient is Francesca Royster, senior in English literature.

The fellowship includes a cash award of $10,250 plus tuition and fees for one year. It was organized to aid students pursuing graduate study in the humanities. Upon completing their education, the recipients teach humanities courses at colleges and universities.

Royster said she plans to use the award to begin graduate study in English literature at the University of California at Berkeley.

"I didn't know how I was going to pay for it otherwise," she said.

Donald Hedrick, professor of English, nominated Royster for the competition with a letter of recommendation.

"I wouldn't have even submitted my application if it weren't for Nancy Twiss," Royster said. "I didn't think I had a chance."

Twiss is an academic adviser.

Royster's application included an essay and letters of recommendation.

"I wrote about how I wanted to combine studying literature and politics and the different ways the study of literature can help you understand human beings," Royster said.

After the regional committee chose Royster as a semifinalist, she went to Texas for an interview. There she was chosen as a finalist.

The University of California at Berkeley has accepted Royster into its English graduate program. Now, Royster said, she is waiting for approval of her college selection from The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, the administrator of the Mellon scholarship.

"Each school can only have a certain number of Mellon Fellows," Royster said. "But I just talked to the English Department at Berkeley, and so far I am the only Fellow who has applied in their department."

Royster also was in the state finals of the Rhodes competition and has won the Minority Affairs Academic and Leadership Award and the Dean's Scholarship.

The fellowship program was established in 1982 by The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. The candidate may renew the fellowship for a second year.

Tax law may affect working students

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

Due to tax law changes under the Tax Reform Act of 1986, many students with part-time jobs cannot claim exemption on their W-4 Form.

The new law states that if a student is claimed as a dependent on another's tax return, but still has investment income that when added to wage income equals $500 or more, he or she cannot claim exemption from withholding for this year.

An example of investment income, now included in the reform act, is interest on savings. But if a student has no interest income and earned $2,450 or less in wage income, the student will generally be exempt from withholding.

Students can also claim exemption from tax withholding on the W-4 Form if they paid no federal income tax last year and expect to pay none this year.

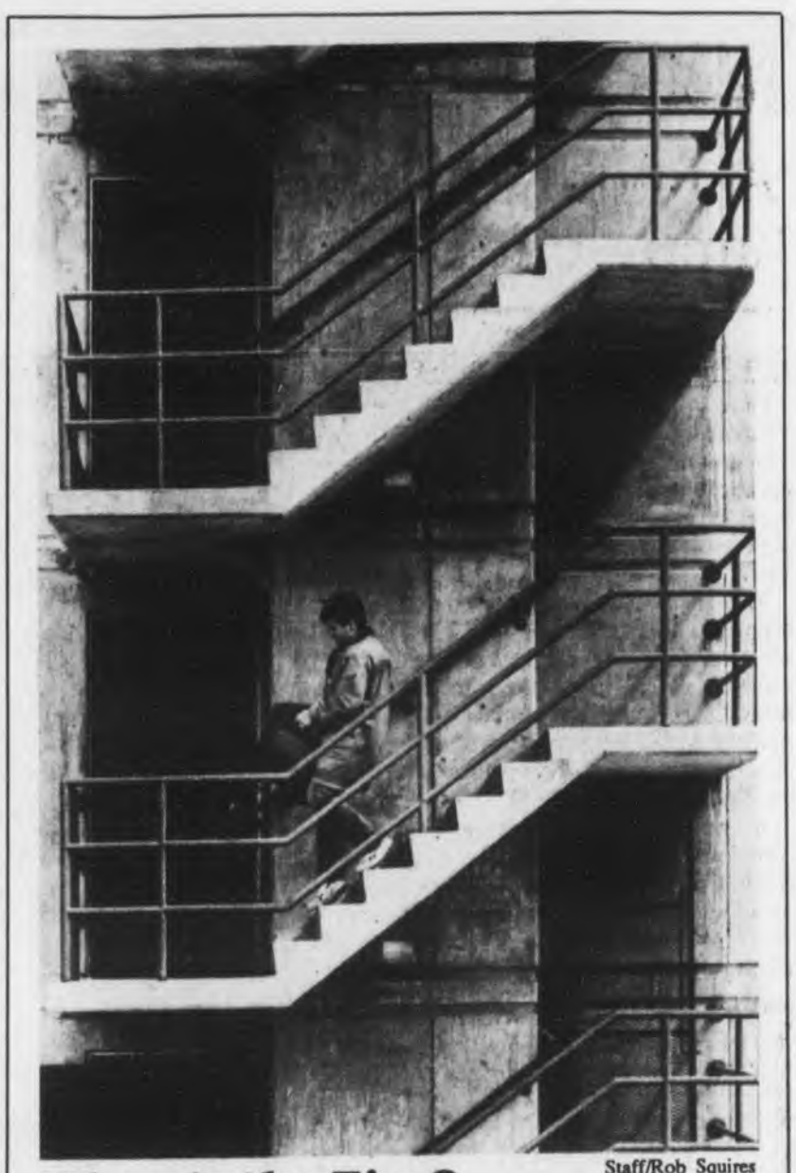
Christine Crenshaw, associate director of student financial assistance, said this is a good time to remind students that even though their parents decide not to claim them as a dependent, if the student satisfies the criteria to be claimed on their parents' tax return, they cannot claim themselves as an exemption on their own tax return.

To do so would make them eligible for the personal exemption of $1,900, which is not allowed under the circumstances. If a parent is eligible for the $1,900 deduction of taxable income for the student, the student cannot claim that same exemption a second time.

"It is one of the double exemptions that is not allowed," Crenshaw said, adding that dependency is really an eligibility question and not an action question. It is not a question of whether the parents do claim the student, but rather if they can claim the student.

Since exemptions can no longer be claimed in many cases, this gives the federal government a steady flow of money coming in as it is earned, instead of just at the end of the year, Crenshaw said.

It's expensive to track down someone who didn't pay income taxes, so this is a way to get the taxes directly out of each paycheck, she said.



It will also allow the federal government to receive tax revenue that was difficult to get in the past.

Students often listen to bad advice, and many think that if they don't file a return nobody will know the difference, Crenshaw said. If they do have to pay taxes at the end of the year, and they didn't have them withheld, some will just not have saved the money to pay for their taxes.

The Tax Act will also help the federal government in this situation, by again withholding the taxes directly from the paycheck.

In the cases affected by the Tax Act, the real effect will be felt on take-home pay, Crenshaw said.

"The IRS probably figures that students are a high-risk group, because they are least likely to file a return," she said.

Parking spaces scarce

Local apartments overcrowded

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

City commissioners discussed Tuesday the shortage of parking space around apartment complexes near the K-State campus and the problem of housing that may not meet city safety codes.

Commissioner Dick Hayter said the parking ordinance now in effect isn't working.

"I'm convinced we have an ordinance that can't be enforced," Hayter said.

The current ordinance says landlords must provide one parking space for each non-related person in each apartment.

The problem is most parking lots for apartment complexes don't have enough spaces for the tenants.

City Planner Larry Hulse said there are more tenants per unit than there should be. Hulse said the ordinance states only two unrelated persons can be in each apartment, but there are usually at least four tenants per unit.

"There are more occupants than there are parking places. Landlords will have to cut occupancy," Hulse said.

Commissioner Dave Fiser said this isn't the city's problem.

"It's the apartment owner's problem to enforce, not the city's," Fiser said.

Enforcing the ordinance wouldn't be worth the expense, said City Attorney William Frost.

"Enforcing the ordinance would be too costly and too time consuming," Frost said.

Mayor Gene Klinger said tenants aren't always made aware that their housing doesn't meet city safety standards before they rent or buy the property. Klinger said he blames realtors for the problem.

One realtor who refused to be identified said the blame should fall on landlords.

"This is hogwash. They're (the commission) just trying to blame it all on the realtors," she said.

She said realtors wouldn't deceive customers because they don't want to get involved in a lawsuit. She also said damage inflicted by the tenants before a city inspection caused the housing to not meet city standards.

Manhattan resident Bev Hassajgen told commissioners there is more sub-standard housing than they know about.

Study shows aspirin aids victims of heart attacks

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — A two-year international study of more than 17,000 heart patients showed that aspirin and the clot-dissolving drug streptokinase, taken together after the onset of chest pains, reduce deaths among heart attack victims.

The Second International Study on Infarct Survival, involving patients in 400 hospitals in 16 countries, is billed as the largest heart attack treatment study ever. It was presented Tuesday at the annual meeting of the American College of Cardiology.

The study showed that a chewed aspirin tablet or administration of the drug streptokinase, or SK, improved the survival rate. The rate improved more, however, when the two were taken together.

Mortality among heart attack victims given the combination was 7.8 percent after five weeks, compared with 12.8 percent for patients given a placebo.

Drs. Rory Collins and Peter Sleight and researcher Richard Peto, all of the University of Oxford, England, said the improvements were evident across the range of patients, including high-risk cases involving stroke or patients older than 70.

The importance of the study, they said, lies more in the size of the sample than in what was done. They said other studies were too small to give a true picture of the effects of the drugs.

The median age of the patients was just over 60 years, and 23 percent were women. The study was funded by the British Heart Foundation and one maker of SK. A drug company donated the aspirin.

Peto said the study was done in hospitals in medically sophisticated countries, "but an aspirin tablet will work in rural China."

Sleight said the combination of drugs significantly reduced the likelihood of a second heart attack while the patient was hospitalized and reduced the likelihood of a stroke by about one-third.

Of 17,189 patients in the survey, 534 given placebos for both aspirin and SK died within five weeks. Of those given aspirin but a placebo in place of SK, 447 died. Of patients given SK and an aspirin placebo, 420 died. Of patients given both medications, 327 died. The choice of treatment was made at random.

Collins said some doctors were uncomfortable giving a placebo. But he said doctors were asked to expose a patient to a possible placebo only if they were uncertain of treatment for an individual case. They were not asked to reject other treatments if they were obviously called for, he said.

Movie fosters positive review

'A Room with a View' is happy-ending love story

By Ann Iseman
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Once in a great while, a movie is released which has nothing wrong with it — no weak performances, no muddled story line, no annoying dialogue, no unnecessary subplots. One such movie is "A Room with a View."

This is a feel-good movie with a happy ending, but it is not typical or silly. Nor is it a half-witted attempt to make money at the box office. Instead, it is a beautifully filmed version of E.M. Forster's third novel, set in turn-of-the-century Florence and the English countryside.

A young woman's experience with love could be said to be the emphasis of the story. But that is not really what the movie is about. It is about passion and being true to your feelings, and with the very proper, upper-class Honeychurch family of Edwardian England, this makes for an interesting conflict.

Movie Review

Lucy Honeychurch, played by Helena Bonham Carter is the beautiful young heroine of "A Room with a View." She is the perfect lady, mindful of her elders, proper in her etiquette and very, very *un*true to her feelings.

It takes George Emerson, portrayed by Julian Sands, the handsome young middle-class man who is staying at the same pension — a small hotel — in Florence, to wake Lucy from her sedate (or sedated) lifestyle. Overcome by Lucy's beauty as well as the romantic Italian landscape, he takes her in his arms and kisses her.

After this moment, Miss Honeychurch is never quite the same. She is no longer able to hide her feelings from herself. She makes a valiant effort, even going so far as to become engaged to the socially acceptable Cecil Vyse, portrayed by Daniel Day Lewis, who has as much passion as the pair of wire-rimmed glasses he wears when he tries to kiss her.

Carter gives a superb performance as the proper young lady striving to keep her emotions in check. The only time her character releases her passion and spirit for others to see is while she is playing the piano.

The friendly clergyman, Mr. Beebe, said upon hearing Lucy play Beethoven, "If she ever takes to living as she plays, it will be very exciting — both for us and for her."

I was unable to find anything wrong or bad about this movie. Even the nude scene, which some people might think is unnecessary, I found extremely enjoyable.

For once, men are the subject of the nudity and no sex is involved. Three men, innocently having a swim in the pond, engage in a bit of stealing-each-other's-clothes mischief and begin to run around the pond, unaware that the ladies are about to intrude upon their wooded solitude.

This scene not only adds a little humor to the movie, but it even further jolts Lucy out of her once firmly entrenched idea of being a woman. She laughs and glances demurely over her fan as the men endure their embarrassing predicament.

"A Room with a View" is a movie to be savored. With movies like "Gor," "Flowers in the Attic," and "Light of Day" being released, you just don't know how long it will be until you see another good film.

This movie has been released on videotape, but if you want to catch it on the big screen, you have the chance to see it today at 3:30 and 7:30 p.m. and at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the Union.

Spring Dance '88 offers diverse styles

By The Collegian Staff

Spring Dance '88 will feature ballet, jazz and modern styles of dance in the K-State Dance program's semester concert at 8 p.m. today and Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

Dance participants are confident the repertory of works will appeal to even those who have not attended many dance concerts.

"It is a really diverse concert," said Marian Petersen, sophomore in education and a performer in a classical ballet piece. "There are all types of styles — even an African (dance) piece."

The choreography for the concert was created by K-State faculty members Jeffrey Groff, speech instructor and dance artist-in-residence; Luke Kahlich, associate professor of physical education, dance and leisure studies; and Judith Quirk, instructor of physical education, dance and leisure studies.

Two K-State students' works were also chosen to be performed, Kahlich said.

"Seek 'n' Find" was choreographed by Sharisse Horn, junior in dance, and "Barre Blues" was created by Nancy Shade, senior in dance.

Dancers have been rehearsing since January, Kahlich said, adding that there are a total of 36 students involved in the program. Participants are both dance majors and non-majors.

Tickets are available at the McCain box office and are $5 for the general public and $4 for students and senior citizens.

camp out would still take place at Ahearn and the ticket outlet in Ahearn would remain open for all student season ticket sales to avoid competition with sales at Bramlage, he said.

David Whetstone, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and chairman of the Student Ticket Task Force, said Kruger had encouraged placing some limitation on the amount of time students camp out for tickets.

Kruger, he said, had believed that the camp out became negative after it continued past a certain point.

"I support the camping out still taking place at Ahearn for the convenience of classes," Kruger said. "I think the time should be limited, not to two days, but to some optimum length. It can go too long."

After some optimum time enthusiasm wanes for camping out, Whetstone said.

"We are contemplating limiting the camp out time, but when you specify the start date, a lot of groups will all show up at the same time," he said.

"We feel there are problems with the enforcement of a limitation policy," Whetstone said. "There is an opportunity for politics to enter into what should be a first-come, first-served situation.

"Someone in charge of policy enforcement would be deciding who's first, when several groups arrived at the same time," Whetstone said.

"Limiting the time to camp out has to be looked at to determine feasibility," he said. "If everyone showed up at the same time what would you do? Hold a lottery right then?"

Torrey Head, administrative assistant for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, agreed that a limit should be placed on the camp out, but he hopes the policy will not be too restrictive.

"I grew up here, and students have been camping out for tickets ever since I can remember," he said. "I hope there isn't too much structure put on camping out, but it should be limited to a reasonable period of time."

Input from professors, the administration and students should determine what a reasonable period of time is, he said.

"When all the student seating was general admission, students would camp out by Ahearn for days before a single game just to be the first in line to buy tickets to a single game," Head said.

"We feel like momentum is a key when you are selling tickets," he said. "If we can get the momentum going early, people are eager to be a part of it and buy up the season tickets."

The task force is currently considering a proposal that would terminate the camp out on Oct. 14, at which time tickets would go on sale, Whetstone said.

Midnight Madness, the first time the K-State basketball team is allowed to practice under NCAA rules, is scheduled to begin at 12:01 a.m. on Oct. 15, Head said.

"We're going to do all we can to keep him," Travis said. "I think when you have a winning season like Lon had, people are going to look at him. DeLoss knows Lon, and Texas is something, I'm sure, a lot of people would like to look at."

People began arriving at the airport about 10 p.m. to wait for Kruger's return.

"You guys have been missing out on a lot of sleep," Kruger told the crowd.

Kruger assumed head coaching duties at Pan American University in Edinburg, Texas, in 1982. In his four seasons there, the Broncos were 7-21, 13-14, 12-16 and 20-8. He returned to K-State in 1986, and posted a 20-win season — the first coach ever to do so at K-State in his first year.

Since then, the Silver Lake native has compiled a better record (45-20) than any other coach in the Big Eight Conference except for Billy Tubbs of the University of Oklahoma (54-13).

Dole

Kennedy launched his presidential bid and site of the Senate Watergate hearings 15 years ago and the Iran-Contra hearings a year ago.

Surveying the crowd and hearing an effusive introduction by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., Dole began by saying: "Maybe I ought to change this."

His withdrawal came on the day of the primary in Connecticut, one of several home states for Bush where another Dole loss was certain. Dole had for a time hoped to hang on until next week's primary in Wisconsin, but his outlook was hardly better there, and Bush's delegate lead appeared insurmountable.

Dole's candidacy took off in Iowa's caucuses, a farm state where he benefited from his rural roots in neighboring Kansas. He won the lead-off delegate event, leaving Bush stunned with a third place finish behind former television evangelist Pat Robertson.

For almost a week Dole looked like a good bet for the GOP nomination. But his chances were frozen in New Hampshire.

He relied on a surge in popularity there built on his Iowa success. However, in what he later conceded was a tactical mistake, he didn't counter tough Bush television ads suggesting Dole would raise taxes. New Hampshire dealt him a loss from which he could not recover.

Eggs

Low-Fat Scrambled Eggs

1 cup rinsed cottage cheese
2 large egg whites
1 drop yellow food coloring

Stir egg whites with fork until frothy. Add rinsed cottage cheese and food coloring. Fry in skillet. This mixture may seem watery, but water will evaporate during cooking.

Western Souffle

Serves: 8-10
2 sticks margarine
8 slices bread
5 eggs
1 ¾ cup milk
1 green pepper, chopped
1 onion, chopped
Ham, chopped
Salt and pepper to taste
Grated cheese

Melt butter and pour into a 9" x 12" baking dish. Cut bread into cubes and place in dish. Beat eggs and add milk. Sprinkle chopped peppers, onion and ham over bread. Salt and pepper to taste. Cover with shredded cheese. Pour egg mixture over cheese. Cover with foil and refrigerate overnight. Bake at 325 degrees for 35 minutes. Remove foil and bake 10 minutes more. Let stand a few minutes before cutting.

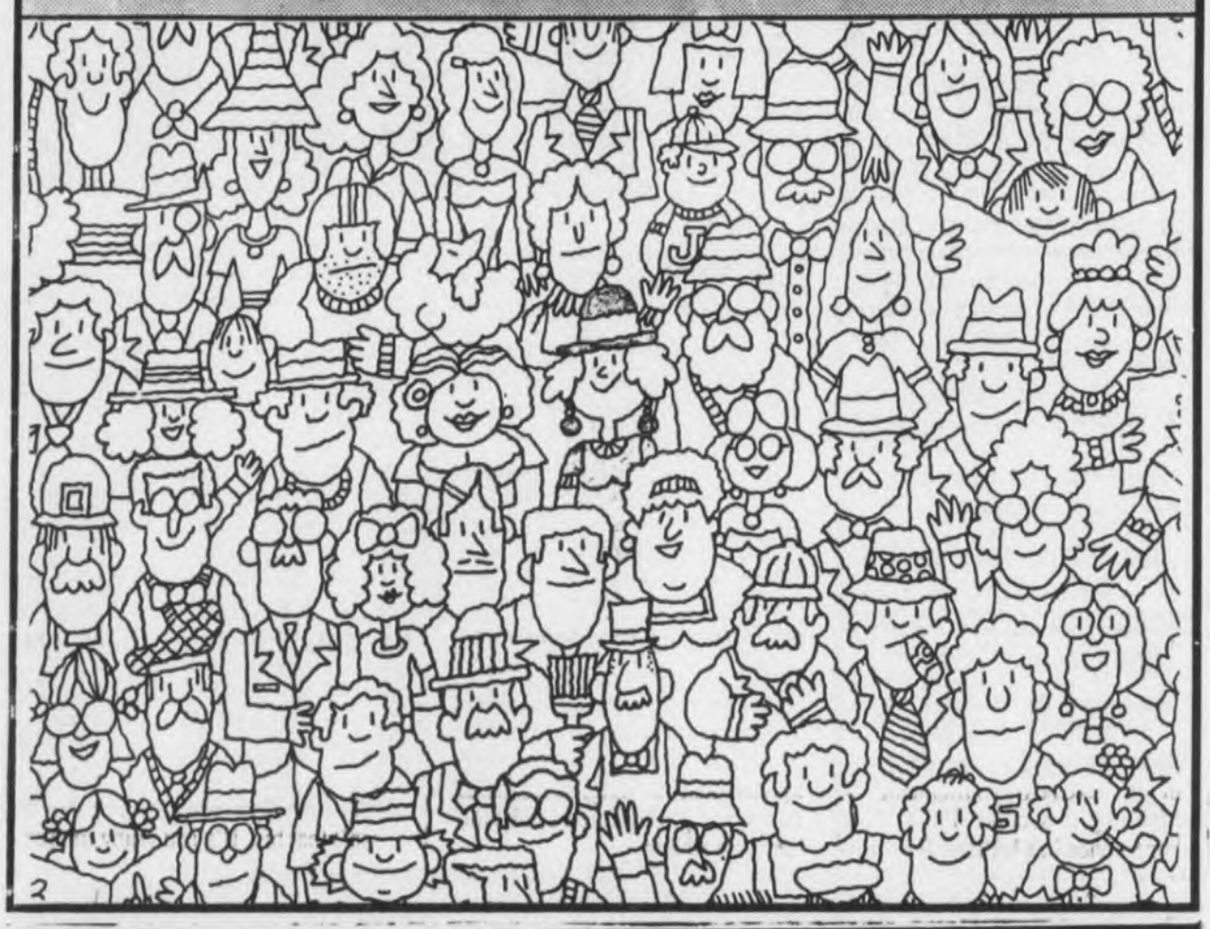
Individual Egglets

Serves: 4-6
6 tablespoons butter
6 eggs
6 tablespoons cheese, grated
6 tablespoons cooked crumbled bacon
6 teaspoons minced parsley
Salt and pepper to taste
Worcestershire sauce
Paprika
Tabasco



Spray a six-cup muffin tin with Pam. Place one tablespoon butter in each muffin cup. Gently break egg into each cup and sprinkle with one tablespoon cheese, 1 tablespoon cooked bacon and 1 teaspoon parsley. Add salt and pepper, Worcestershire, paprika and Tabasco to taste. Bake at 350 degrees for 15-20 minutes.
—Karol Hite

Avocado Egg Salad

2 tablespoons mayonnaise
2 tablespoons dairy sour cream
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon liquid hot pepper seasoning
2 avocados, peeled and chopped
1 cup chopped tomatoes
½ cup chopped red onion
6 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
¼ cup snipped fresh parsley or cilantro
Spinach or lettuce leaves, optional

In large bowl, blend together mayonnaise, sour cream, lemon juice, salt and hot pepper seasoning. Add remaining ingredients except spinach. Toss lightly until well combined. Cover and chill.

Hartman gives Manning award

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The kid was tall and gangly, but remarkably quick and well coordinated for his age. At 10, he overmatched every other youngster on the playground and was getting, naturally, a rather inflated opinion of himself.

That's when Darnelle Manning stepped in.

"Danny," she said, "the world does not revolve around you. You're just part of a revolving world."

The kid listened to his mom. It was a philosophy that was practiced in the Manning household, not just preached. And it became a part of the fabric of his personality.

Tuesday afternoon, Danny Manning accepted the Eastman Kodak trophy as college basketball player of the year. As this latest award was given to the Big Eight's all-time scoring leader, speakers praised his athletic ability and unselfish attitude on the court, and Darnelle Manning stood nearby wearing a proud smile.

"That's Danny, all right," said the mother of Kansas' 6-foot-10, two-time All-American. "One thing we always did in our home was play everything down. If Danny had a great game in high school, we didn't let it become too big of a deal. We always wanted to teach Danny that the world does not revolve around him. We never wanted him to feel like he was bigger than life."

As Kansas prepares to meet Duke Saturday in the semifinals of the NCAA Tournament — Manning's second Final Four appearance in a brilliant four-year career at Kansas — that same unselfish attitude figures to be one of the best things going for the Jayhawks.

"Danny Manning makes other players around him better players," said retired K-State Coach Jack Hartman, who presented the Eastman Award.

"It's this unselfish attitude that you don't always see in the great players," Hartman said. "In many ways, Danny has probably diminished his national reputation by playing like that, with people who don't see him play and can't fully appreciate all the things he does in a game."

Manning enters the 50th Final Four as the seventh all-time leading scorer in NCAA history with 2,895 points. He's scored in double figures in 52 straight games. In leading his injury-weakened team to this improbable plateau, he's averaging 26.8 points and seven rebounds a game.

His list of achievements and accomplishments stretch on and on. But the lessons he learned as a youngster have taken deep root.

"People talk about basketball players being unselfish and being willing to give up the ball if somebody else has a better shot, but that really does describe Danny," said Archie Marshall, Manning's closest friend on the team and a victim of a career-ending knee injury at mid-season. "Danny really does care about other people. He's never been hung up on myself."

Many experts predict Manning will be the first player chosen in the next NBA draft. Everyone agrees that a long, successful career as a professional awaits the versatile athlete.

Wickstrom looks to conquer near-disaster

By Kenny Harrison
Collegian Reporter

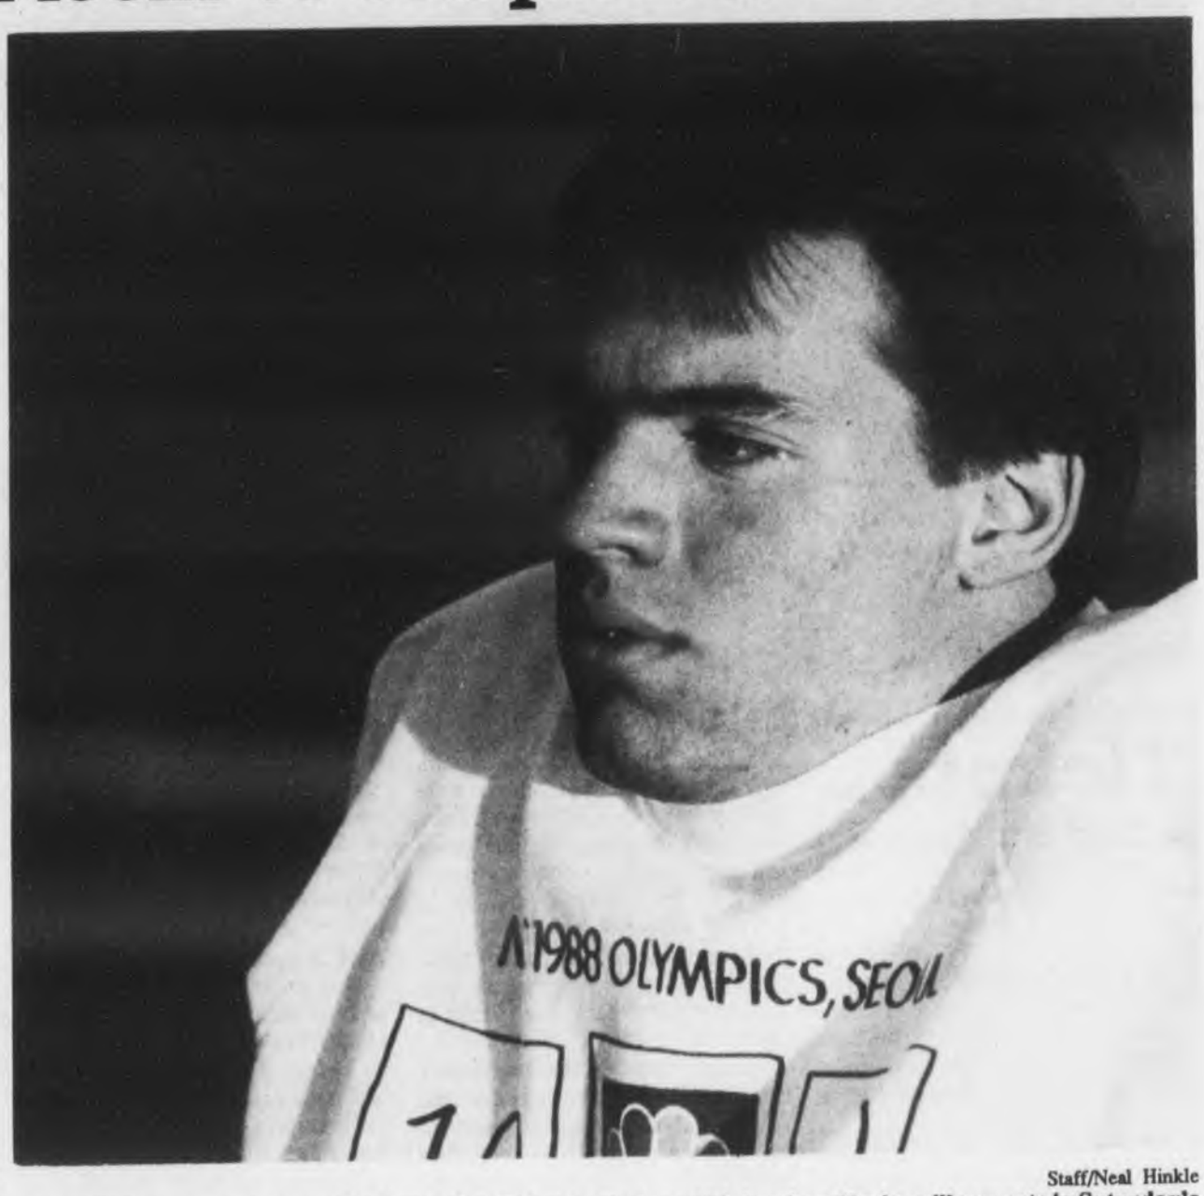
To make a comeback from an injury in basketball or football is one thing, but to make a comeback the way the Wickstom brothers of K-State's track team have adds a whole new meaning to the word.

Brian and Kevin Wickstrom began this comeback the day after they were involved in an almost-fatal accident in the first week of November 1987.

The two were on their way back from a friend's house in Omaha, Neb., when their car plunged seven feet into a ditch just north of Manhattan on Highway 99.

After being unconscious in the ditch for two hours, they were found by a farmer and taken to Westmoreland Hospital, where they were treated for one hour and then taken to Stormont Vail hospital in Topeka.

During their two-week stay at Stormont Vail, the identical twins' "comeback" took a turn for the worse. They were in comas for two days. On two additional days, they slipped in and out of consciousness.



After coming out of their comas, they got stronger every day. They were finally moved to Bethany Medical Center in Kansas City, where they both spent the rest of their recovery and were eventually released to their parents in Overland Park.

Both Brian and Kevin were scholarship track athletes at K-State and were very competitive. And even though their roads to recovery were long, both realized they still had goals to accomplish.

Brian, the better sprinter of the two, is the 1987 Kansas state champion and record holder in the 400 meter dash.

His record time is 47.9, but he hopes to better that time even though he lost valuable practice time due to the accident.

"The accident was a setback, but it wasn't that big. It's just going to take me a little time before I get where I need to be," Brain said.

Staff/Neal Hinkle

Brian Wickstrom, state record holder in the 400 meter dash, and his brother, Kevin, will compete in Saturday's track meet in Nebraska despite a car accident that almost took their lives in early November.

K-State sprint coach Darryl Anderson said in order for Brian and Kevin to get back into competitive condition, they will have to work harder on a few areas, namely speed, stength and endurance.

Anderson said Brian stayed at K-State during spring break to work on these areas. He said the fact that he could give individualized attention to Brian would enable him to get some quality work done in the weight room as well.

Brian said that although he trained instead of laying on a beach somewhere during break didn't bother him.

"Track is more important to me than going off and having fun," Brian said.

Brian should be able to compete for the Wildcats this spring, and with the times he ran in high school, should have a legitimate chance to score in most of K-State's meets.

Brian's brother Kevin stayed at home in Shawnee Mission this semester and has been taking classes at Johnson Community College. Kevin elected to do this because he was in worse condition than Brian

326 lettermen return to Big Eight's gridirons

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Lest we forget with all the hoopla surrounding the two Big Eight Conference entries into the NCAA's Final Four, practice has begun at six conference sites for what the Big Eight is best known for — football.

Spring workouts began Monday at Oklahoma, Nebraska and K-State. Some began as early as Feb. 29 at Oklahoma State. Missouri began practices March 7 and Kansas started March 22.

April workouts are scheduled to begin at Colorado April 4 and at Iowa State April 5.

The conference returns a total of 326 letterwinners from a year ago, an average of nearly 41 at each school. Fifty-three starters return on offense, while 43 starting defenders are back.

There are plenty of "prime timers" returning this year, including seven players from the league's all-conference squad. Six members of the second team offensive unit return as do eight second team defensive selections. Seventeen returners earned varying degrees of All-American attention last season.

Here's a team-by-team look at the 1988 Big Eight spring football camps:

OKLAHOMA SOONERS

Coach Barry Switzer faces a major task of restructuring the offensive line and defensive secondary — where only one starter remains — as keys to success this spring.

"I think it is obvious that we rebuild our offensive line," Switzer said. "We must find some folks who can play in the secondary, at linebacker and at end."

But teams such as the Sooners do not rebuild — they reload. OU, which returns 41 lettermen and nine starters this season, has gone 11-1 the past three years and won the Orange Bowl two of those three seasons.

Oklahoma's strengths lie in its offensive backfield and defensive line. Most coaches wish they had the problem Siwtzer does of deciding who to play at quarterback: senior Jamelle Holleway or sophomore Charles Thompson.

"We beleive we have two of the best quarterbacks to be found anywhere," Switzer said.

Holleway is a two-time All-Big Eight quarterback as a freshman and a sophomore, and was the conference's offensive player of the year in 1986 before a knee injury hampered his progress last season. Thompson scored 10 touchdowns and averaged seven yards per carry in Holleway's abscence. OU concludes workouts April 23 with an intrasquad game.

Players to watch: offensive guard Anthony Phillips, 6-foot-3, 280-pound senior; halfback Anthony Stafford, 5-7, 175-pound senior, averaged 6.9 yards per carry last year; and linebacker Richard Dillon, 6-0, 220-pound senior. Dillon was second among Sooner linebackers in tackles a year ago.

NEBRASKA CORNHUSKERS

Nebraska is another school that doesn't have too many concerns this spring.

"Our objectives in spring practice? The same as always — evaluate personnel, experiment a little bit with offensive and defensive formations and evaluate the kicking game," coach Tom Osborne said.

The 'Huskers return 11 starters and a conference-high 51 lettermen from a 10-2 squad last year. Nebraska's strengths are all offensive areas, defensive backs and its kicking game.

Osborne's biggest concern is rebuilding the defensive interior and tackles.

"We have very little experience at tackle and that's probably the No. 1 concern on our whole football team," Osborne said. Only junior Ray Valladao is an experienced player in this area.

Evaluating good, but inexperienced, running backs is the top priority on offense. Nebraska's practices end April 23 with an intrasquad game.

Players to watch: outside linebacker Broderick Thomas, 6-3, 235-pound senior. A Lombardi Trophy candidate in '88; quarterback Steve Taylor, 6-0, 195-pound senior, a Heisman Trophy candidate who tied the Big Eight record with five touchdown passes against UCLA last year; center Jake Young, 6-4, 250-pound junior. The first "true" sophomore to start for the 'Huskers since 1973.

OKLAHOMA STATE COWBOYS

How do you replace All-American running back Thurman Thomas? Simple. Insert Barry Sanders who racked up 600 yards rushing as Thomas' understudy and led the NCAA in kickoff returns, averaging 31.3 yards per try.

That's coach Pat Jones' biggest question mark this spring. That and work on the punting game and dealing with a youthful defense.

"We're going into spring needing to replace both defensive ends and two starters in the secondary. We also start the spring needing to find a punter," Jones said.

Twelve starters and 50 lettermen return from a 10-2 team that won the Sun Bowl last season. Jones' running back worries should be made a little easier with the loss of only one starter on the offensive line.

Players to watch: quarterback Mike Gundy, 5-11, 185-pound junior. All he's done the past two seasons is set Big Eight records for freshman and sophomore quarterbacks. With 3,792 career passing yards, he's already 14th on the conference list; wide receiver Hart Lee Dykes, 6-4, 210-pound senior. Needs just 458 yards to pass Johnny Rodgers as the Big Eight's all-time leading receiver.

COLORADO BUFFALOES

Moving three players to new positions means redefining the depth chart for coach Bill McCartney.

"Tom Reinhardt will move from outside linebacker to middle guard...Tom Stone will move from outside linebacker to tight end, and O.C. Oliver will switch from halfback to cornerback," McCartney said.

Though the Buffs went 7-4 last year and weren't invited to a bowl for the first time in three seasons, McCartney is excited about his eight returning offensive starters which led Colorado to 24th nationally in total offense.

"This should be our best offense to date," McCartney said. "I'm excited about its potential."

Lack of experience in the secondary will be Colorado's biggest test as all four starters graduated. In all, seven defensive starters graduated, including four All-Big Eight performers.

Colorado returns 37 lettermen to practice which begins next week. Workouts end April 30 with a varsity-alumni game.

Players to watch: quarterback Sal Aunese, 5-10, 195-pound junior. The Big Eight newcomer of the year last year after taking over starting duties three games into the season; halfback J.J. Flannigan, 5-11, 185-pound junior. Timed at 4.3 in the 40-yard dash; linebacker Don Deluzio, 6-2, 235-pound senior. A walking disaster. Played with pinched nerve his junior season and then hit by a car in off-season. Recovered from that, but suffered knee injury before year began.

MISSOURI TIGERS

Missouri returns 17 starters and 41 lettermen, but the key to spring drills is to replace senior leadership, coach Woody Widenhoffer said.

"Our primary objective is to replace our seniors," Widenhoffer said. "Spring ball is really the time when you make the football team for the fall."

Switching to a four-man defensive front resulted in the Tigers chopping 10 points off their points per game average. Work on the pass rush is the team's No. 1 priority in this area.

Offensively, the team looks to be "a little bit more complex" as compared to last season when Mizzou was 5-6, Widdenhoffer said.

Major weaknesses are depth at tight end and replacing punter/place kicker Tom Whelihan. Practices conclude April 16 with the Black and Gold intrasquad game.

Players to watch: comerback Adrian Jones, 6-0, 184-pound junior. Broke up a Big Eight-high 12 passes last season and should contend for All-America and Jim Thorpe Award honors; quarterback John Stollenwreck, 6-0, 200-pound junior. Transfer from Southern Methodist who became Tigers' starter five games into 1987 season.

Blue Devils focusing on stopping 'other' 'Hawks

Duke sees even match with KU

By The Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — One would think Duke's practice Tuesday would focus on trying to stop Kansas All-American Danny Manning, but Coach Mike Krzyzewski said it's the Jayhawks four other starters the Blue Devils must worry about.

Krzyzewski said the Blue Devils didn't stop Manning when the 6-foot-10 senior scored 31 points and grabbed 12 rebounds in Duke's 74-70 overtime victory in February, so there's no reason to think they can stop him in the NCAA Tournament semifinal game Saturday in Kansas City, Mo.

"You can't ever say to a great player, 'Let him have what he's going to have,' " Krzyzewski said. "A great player thinks that he can have everything — and rightfully so.

"I think you have to make Manning earn everything and not let him have everything. And when you're making him earn everything not to loose track of the other guys."

One of those other guys is 6-2 junior Scooter Barry, son of NBA Hall of Famer Rick Barry. Averaging only 3.4 points, the guard hit for 15 against K-State in the Midwest Regional finals.

OU won't change game plan for Arizona

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Arizona has compiled very impressive numbers enroute to its semifinal meeting with Oklahoma in the Final Four.

The No. 3 Wildcats have played 37 games and won 35. In those victories, they have beaten their opponents by an average of nearly 22 points. They turn the ball over slighly more than 12 times a game, and their ball-handling guard, Steve Kerr, averages fewer than one turnover per game.

The Wildcats protect the ball well, shoot well, play strong defense and can get up and down the floor.

All that seems to underwhelm Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs, whose fourth-ranked Sooners play Arizona Saturday in Kansas City.

"What that means is they do a great job of handling the ball," said Tubbs. "We've run into teams like that. Some teams are harder to force into mistakes than other teams, and Arizona appears to be one of those, but we're just going to have to go out there and see."

Oklahoma has compiled a 34-3 record by using a suffocating, full-court defense to force turnovers and quicken the pace of the game. Sooner opponents turned it over 893 times and had the ball stolen on 465 occasions.

"Remember, Louisville only made one turnover in the first half against BYU. They made 22 in two halves against us," Tubbs said.

"What happened in the last game or the rest of the games this year, you can throw that out the window. This is another game, and we're going to test them and see if they can handle it. We're not going to change our game plan," Tubbs said.

Blackledge traded to Steelers, ecstatic

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Quarterback Todd Blackledge, the No. 1 draft choice who never lived up to expectations at Kansas City, got his wish to leave the Chiefs Tuesday when they sent him to the Pittsburgh Steelers.

The Steelers gave up a fourth-round choice in this year's National Football League draft to obtain Blackledge, whose father, Ron, is their offensive line coach.

"I'm ecstatic," said Blackledge, 27, who returns to the state where he starred in college, helping lead Penn State to the No. 1 ranking in 1983.

Blackledge, after backing up Bill Kenney his first three seasons, won the starting job in training camp in 1986 and again last season — only to lose it back to Kenney both times.

Last season's reversal was particularly galling to him. He started the first two games, but after the players' strike, Coach Frank Gansz went back to Kenney, just as his predecessor, John Mackovic, did after seven games the previous year.

Blackledge, who maintained he was never given a fair chance to prove himself, played in only one game the rest of the season, ended it on the inactive list and asking to be traded.

Tuesday's deal culminated several months of negotiations between the Chiefs and Pittsburgh.

"It's been a long process but under the circumstance we have a deal we can live with and Pittsburgh feels the same," said Jim Schaaf, the Chiefs' general manager.

Blackledge's contract with the Chiefs expired on Feb. 1, and he had to agree to terms with the Steelers before the trade could be made.

In five seasons at Kansas City, Blackledge started 24 games, of which the Chiefs won 13. He completed 364 of 742 passes for 4,510 yards and 26 touchdowns, and he was Sandy Ransopher, junior in business administration and a member of I Contributed A Twenty, camped out for tickets for the 1987-88 season.

"I thought camping out was fun. You get to see who the real sports enthusiasts are," she said. "I think a week is about the right amount of time to camp out. Beyond that, it starts to wear thin.

"I'm involved with ICAT because I think it has a lot to offer. I was in ICAT even before we knew we were going to get priority seating," she said.

Craig Renfro, director of the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund and ICAT adviser, said final decisions on the campout and ICAT have not been made.

"Camping out is fantastic," he said. "It gets people together and propels them into the basketball season."

Last year, ICAT members camped out only for those seating sections designated for ICAT, and they will do the same this year, Renfro said.

However, last year there were more members of ICAT than there were seats designated for the group and many members ended up receiving seats in a separate section.

The ICAT members who ended up in the separate section had an equal opportunity at the better seats, they just chose not to camp out as long as others, he said.

"Last year ICAT members camped out basically on a one-to-one basis, for their own tickets," Renfro said. "They could camp with four other people who were also members of ICAT."

Scott Carlson, freshman in pre-physical therapy and a member of Beta Theta Pi fraternity, said a week would be a good limit on the length of camp out.

"I plan to camp out again this year," he said. "Everybody was pretty friendly, and I got to know more people."

Carlson said he was not a member of ICAT, nor did he plan to join the group.

"I couldn't see paying $20 and then still have to buy my ticket. I'm happy with the seat I got," he said.

Rebecca Svaty, junior in education-history and a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority and ICAT, camped out this year for ICAT and said she would camp out again this year, if that's what it takes to get good tickets.

Due to lack of organization, few sororities routinely camp out for their house, Svaty said.

"Before this year some sororities had gotten tickets through some of the fraternities that camped out, and sometimes it's hard to get people organized," she said. "I think if we had known how many girls wanted tickets, we would have camped out."

Clifton Phillips, junior in history, said he was a member of ICAT this year but did not plan to rejoin.

"I camped out for four or five days this year, including spending two overnights," he said. "But when it was time to buy the tickets, I had given the wrong fee card to my tentmates and so I didn't get a ticket through ICAT."

"I think people should be able to camp out for as long as they want to. If you want the best seats, then you should have to work at it," Phillips said.

Thursday: The different options the task force is looking at for ways to sell season tickets.

IOWA STATE CYCLONES

Coach Jim Walden plans on continuing to "have fun" in his second season at ISU.

"We'll still run a little bit of everything. Our offensive guys have fun because they never know what we're going to try next," Walden said.

Iowa State returns 38 lettermen with 17 starters from a 3-8 squad. Questions remain about the Cyclones' defense, but on offense the team is in good shape — even without a clear cut choice for quarterback.

Senior running back Joe Henderson was a first team All-Big Eight pick and the first Cyclone to rush for more than 1,000 yards since 1981 with 1,232 last season. And if Henderson can't put it in, Walden turns to sophomore kicker Jeff Shudak. As a freshman, Shudak was third nationally, connecting on 20-25 field goal attempts.

"I'm looking forward to Shudak winning some more games for us," Walden said. ISU concludes spring drills May 7 with an intrasquad game.

Players to watch: split end Dennis Ross, 6-3, 197-pound senior. Was 17th in nation with 5.3 catches per game last year; strong safety Jeff Dole, 6-1, 195-pound senior. Tied for team lead with 98 tackles last year and has returned 48 punts for 368 yards in his career.

KANSAS JAYHAWKS

New coach Glen Mason was less than happy when the Jayhawks opened spring drills last week. Apparently, an off-season conditioning program failed.

"The players did not show they were in condition," Mason said. "A lot of conditioning is mental. There is a mental well being put up by some players, and we as coaches have to break down those walls."

To combat this, Mason implemented 6 a.m. workouts in addition to the normal afternoon practices. But the conditioning factor won't hamper Kansas' biggest weakness which is experience. Thirty-five lettermen and 11 starters return, but overall depth is another concern.

A quarterback battle is shaping up between sophomore Kelly Donohoe and freshman Kevin Verdugo. Donohone started in six of Kansas' 11 games last season; Verdugo, four. Kansas will conclude workouts April 23 with an intrasquad game.

Players to watch: linebacker Curtis Moore, 6-1, 230-pound sophomore. First freshman to lead Kansas in total tackles in more than 20 years; defensive back Clint Normore, 6-0, 222-pound senior. Recorded half his 62 tackles in last three games. A reserve on KU's basketball team. Also played both sports at Wichita State before transferring.

Blackledge was the seventh player chosen in the 1983 draft, coming after John Elway but ahead of Dan Marino, Jim Kelly, Tony Eason and Ken O'Brien, all of whom established themselves as pro stars.

"When we drafted Todd, we had high hopes he'd be our quarterback of the future," Schaaf said. "For a variety of reasons, it has not worked out. He's been a dedicated, hard-working player who's conducted himself as a first-class person."

The trade was only the second the Steelers have made for a quarterback in Chuck Noll's 19 seasons as coach. They got David Woodley from Miami in 1984.

The Steelers were looking for help after Mark Malone was the lowest-rated quarterback in the league last season. In the final seven weeks of an 8-7 season, Malone threw only one touchdown pass and was intercepted 11 times. For the year, he completed 156 of 336 passes for 1,896 yards and six touchdowns.

Blackledge will compete with Malone, third-year pro Bobby Brister and former Minnesota Vikings' backup Steve Bono.

Kevin, whose best time in the 400 meter dash is 49.5, has been doing workouts devised by Anderson at home and has been running every day. With steady progress, Kevin should return to K-State next semester and step right into fall training, Anderson said.

So, with the Wickstrom brothers on their roads to recovery, the two could make an immediate impact on the Wildcats next fall.

INF passed to Senate

Treaty awaits final approval

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee recommended overwhelmingly Wednesday that the Senate ratify a historic treaty to eliminate all U.S. and Soviet medium-range nuclear weapons.

"This is a small step away from the nuclear brink," said Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said following the committee's 17-2 vote.

"It means the elevator of nuclear escalation will finally stop and hopefully descend," said committee chairman Claiborne Pell, D-R.I.

Cranston said his head count shows no more than five senators will vote against the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces Treaty when the full Senate takes up the treaty, probably late next month. Ratification requires a two-thirds Senate majority, 67 votes if all 100 senators are present and voting.

The only dissenting votes inside the committee were cast by Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Larry Pressler, R-S.D. Helms has worked vigorously to derail the treaty.

The resounding committee vote papered over a bitter partisan dispute over an amendment added to the treaty on Tuesday with the aim of assuring that the meaning of the pact cannot be reinterpreted by a future president without the consent of Congress.

Many moderate Republicans said the amendment represented a partisan jab at President Reagan and his administration's reinterpretation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty to permit the deployment of a Star Wars missile defense system.

Several GOP lawmakers said the controversy may cause them to reassess their support of the treaty and Cranston said he may be willing to search for a compromise when the Senate debates the issue.

The treaty, signed Dec. 8 by President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, requires both sides to destroy, within three years, all nuclear-armed missiles with a range of 300 miles to 3,400 miles.

These include all Soviet SS-20 and other medium- and shorter-range missiles aimed at targets in Western Europe and all of the smaller force of U.S. Pershing 2 and ground-launched cruise missiles stationed in Europe and aimed at the Soviet Union.

The treaty is the first accord in the history of arms control to require the actual destruction of the missiles that carry nuclear warheads.

The Foreign Relations Committee voted after 21 days of hearings in which scores of expert witnesses testified. The Senate Intelligence and Armed Services committees also conducted an intense examination of the agreement and recommended it be adopted, the latter voting its approval, 18-2.

The Armed Services Committee did express some lingering concerns, and in final testimony on Wednesday, Ambassador Maynard Glitman, the chief U.S. INF negotiator, responded to them.

Glitman said "futuristic" weapons such as lasers and particle beam generators are banned by the treaty if they are carried on "weapons delivery vehicles" within the range.

Kruger announces intent to remain Wildcat coach

By Tom Perrin
Sports Writer

The Lon Kruger panic is over.

Kruger ended a day of speculation and rumor Wednesday afternoon with an announcement that he will remain at the University as K-State's men's basketball coach. On Tuesday, Kruger was in Austin, Texas, interviewing for the coaching vacancy at the University of Texas.

While Kruger wouldn't say if Texas Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds had offered him the position, President Jon Wefald confirmed that an offer had indeed been made.

"It's a Kansas State thing — a reflection of the enthusiasm of the students, the support of the K-State people," Kruger said, explaining his reasons for rejecting the Texas bid.

Dodds, a K-State alumnus, former athletic director and track and field coach, denied that he had made Kruger an offer in a statement released by the Texas sports information department.

K-State coach Lon Kruger announces that he will remain head coach of the Wildcats Wednesday afternoon in his office.

Players, fans react/ Page 7

When word leaked that Dodds had received permission from Athletic Director Larry Travis to interview Kruger, an all-out effort was waged by both administration and students to retain the second-year coach who has led K-State to the National Collegiate Athletics Association tournament two straight years.

Kruger said these efforts played a part in his decision to stay, but that the biggest factor was a commitment given to him on Monday morning by Travis before Texas had made contact. Although Kruger has yet to sign a new agreement, Travis said the pact will contain a two-year contract extension and an unspecified, but significant salary raise.

"That meant much more to me than had they done it after someone else had called. I did not want to have it get into a negotiating-type thing," Kruger said. "I told them I wasn't going to go down there and come back. I was going to go there and make a decision and not negotiate after I got back."

University eliminates break, schedules classes for Monday

By The Collegian Staff

Yes, there will be classes on Monday.

In past years, the Monday after Easter has been a University holiday. Beginning this year, however, a change has been made.

"This year, for the first time, Monday is not a student holiday," said University Registrar Don Foster.

The reason, he said, is because the Kansas Board of Regents established Martin Luther King Jr. Day as an official University holiday.

"Therefore, we had to pick up another day. It was basically a trade of days," he said.

Foster said the regents did not specify which day would have to be used to make up for the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday but that administrators believed the Monday after Easter was the best choice.

"One of the other options would have been dead day (the day before spring finals begin)," he said.

Foster said the change has not resulted in many complaints, but just "a lot of confusion."

One reason for the confusion is because the 1987-88 KSU Programmer — published by the Union Program Council Promotions Committee — listed April 4 as a student holiday.

Foster said K-State isn't the only university that has eliminated the after-Easter holiday.

"Most universities — (the University of Kansas) included — cut out the Easter holiday several years ago," he said.

Task force studies ticket distribution methods

Editor's Note: This is the fourth part of a five-part series on Student Senate's Ticket Sales Task Force, its mission and the problems it is encountering.

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Pursuing alternative ways to sell student season tickets is just one more "task" the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force has tackled in the last few months.

In the committee's search to find an appropriate policy for disbursement of season tickets, members pursued two methods other than the traditional "one ticket for every game" method that is in effect now at K-State.

Selling football and basketball tickets in a package was one option the committee considered, said David Whetstone, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and chairman of the task force. The other method would be to sell tickets as a pass and then students would go to the athletic department and pick them up at a specified time before each game, he said.

Although they have pursued both options, the committee's proposal to Student Senate will probably not include either one, Whetstone said, because the task force has not had much student input either for or against the alternative options.

Pam Meyer, senior in social work and task force member, helped in researching the options by contacting other universities. She offered some insight as to why the dual-ticket method, selling season tickets which are good for both football and basketball games, is used by other colleges.

"The dual-ticket program is used to get (students) there to support the weaker sport," she said, adding that the University of Kansas sells its tickets in a block at the beginning of the fall semester.

KU began selling dual tickets in 1982 at a cost of $55 per ticket, said Diana Miller, KU ticket manager. The program was started "to give the students one ticket for all the sports at one economical price," she said. "They were cheaper at the time and they helped sell football tickets."

This year the ticket costs $60 and admits students to all football, basketball and baseball games, Miller said.

At least one member of the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has voiced support of the dual-ticket program.

"In our situation it might be a good idea (to sell dual tickets)," said Torrey Head, administrative assistant of the department. "The House shows U.S. support by approving Contra aid

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House overwhelmingly approved on Wednesday a $48 million package of humanitarian aid for the Contra rebels in Nicaragua and for children injured in seven years of civil war.

The aid bill, passed on a 345-70 vote, was portrayed as a gesture of U.S. support for a temporary truce reached last week between the rebels and the Sandinista government, and for continuing talks aimed at achieving a long-term end to hostilities.

"The hope is that this will lead to political instead of military processes now taking over" in Nicaragua, said House Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash.

"This war is over, whether some like it or not," said Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said after the House vote, "We are pleased and look forward to the vote tomorrow in the Senate."

Despite producing the first strong bipartisan vote on U.S. policy toward Nicaragua in more than five years, lawmakers showed more weariness than joy as they plodded through two hours of debate.

"It is not the magic key to facilitate a cease-fire in place or fruitful negotiations and all the rest," said Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., who said it has become clear Congress is no longer inclined to grant the military aid he would prefer. "But for the moment it's the only thing we have to give."

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., promised speedy consideration on the other side of the Capitol, although it was unclear whether the matter could come to a vote on Thursday. GOP lawmakers said President Reagan had indicated strong support for the measure.

The legislation would renew aid to the rebels, whose last U.S. support ran out Feb. 29, and keep them together as a fighting force while they wait in cease-fire zones inside Nicaragua for a long-term truce to be worked out with the Sandinista government.

"It sends a message to the Contras that they are not abandoned, that we do care about them and want to keep them healthy and a viable force," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., who participated in negotiations to draft the compromise.

Man stands to raise shed funds

NEW DELHI, India — A Hindu ascetic has been standing for three months in the western state of Gujarat to collect funds for a shelter for holy cows.

Ramanuj Vaishnavdas, 24, has been on his feet under a tree in front of a temple in Palanpur town day and night to collect 5,551 rupees (about $427). He wants to build a shelter for the cows, which are considered holy and an image of the mother by the Hindus.

The sadhu, or ascetic, takes a break only for 15 minutes every morning for his ritual bath, the United News of India news agency reported Wednesday.

He sleeps and eats — only one meal a day — while standing.

Cow shelters and orphanages are common in India, where cows roam freely on the streets and often are a traffic hazard.

Balloonists' liftoff grounded

MENDOZA, Argentina — Two U.S. balloonists trying to circle the globe nonstop remained grounded Wednesday when high winds damaged a balloon and depleted their supply of helium.

Balloonists John Petrehn and Rowland Smith hoped to begin their flight next week. If the round-the-world flight does not prove feasible, the two will attempt to set other distance and duration records, Petrehn said.

Petrehn, the project head, is a 52-year-old businessman from Topeka, while Smith, 50, is a Kansas-based pilot for Trans World Airlines.

Argentine air force officers said the balloons seemed in poor shape and that the balloonists were considering canceling the trip this year because of the condition of the balloons and because weather conditions around the 45th parallel were deteriorating.

Some Panama shops reopen

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Supermarkets, pharmacies and small shops opened for the first time in 10 days Wednesday as a nationwide strike aimed at toppling Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega began to fall apart.

Despite the defections, Alberto Boyd, president of the National Council of Private Enterprise, said he and other strike leaders were not ending their effort to get rid of Noriega.

In Washington, the Reagan administration said it was considering new sanctions to force out Noriega, but it appeared no action was imminent.

The reopening of the capital's Gago, Rey and Super 99 supermarkets signaled the first crack in a work stoppage that closed an estimated 90 percent of the nation's business and industry.

Later, the city's leading pharmacies reopened, as did some small clothing and other dry goods stores in the central business district.

Swaggart plans to defy warning

BATON ROUGE, La. — Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart plans to resume preaching three months after he tearfully confessed to sin, his lawyer said Wednesday, in a move that would defy the suspension by his church and could lead to his dismissal.

Swaggart, an Assemblies of God minister who stepped down from the pulpit Feb. 21, will return May 22, said Bill Treeby, a lawyer for Swaggart and a board member of Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries.

The date coincides with the end of a three-month suspension by the church's Louisiana council. The national church's General Presbytery on Tuesday overruled that term as too lenient and ordered him from the pulpit for at least a year under two years of rehabilitation and counseling.

Although the fiery preacher did not specify his sins, a prostitute has said Swaggart paid her to pose nude.

"We have an issue involving the constitution and bylaws of this organization," said Treeby, noting there was a conflict over whether the national presbytery or the Louisiana council has the right to discipline ministers.

"He is willing to submit himself to the Louisiana District," said Treeby. "He will be considering an appeal to the national Presbytery."

Treeby said the national Presbytery might dismiss Swaggart from the denomination if he resumed preaching May 22, but that Swaggart could appeal that.

Meese called 'sleaze' by Byrd

WASHINGTON — Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd on Wednesday called Attorney General Edwin Meese III "the crown jewel of ... sleaze" and urged him to quit, but President Reagan reiterated his support for his old friend, the focus of an 11-month-old criminal investigation.

Meanwhile, Solicitor General Charles Fried, who ranks fourth in the Justice Department hierarchy, refused to give an immediate answer when Meese personally urged him not to join two other senior department figures who resigned Tuesday, department sources said.

On Tuesday, Fried, who argues the government's position in Supreme Court cases, told The Associated Press that the resignations had prompted him to reassess his own future. He said he needed time to think the matter through.

Congressional reaction against Meese was strong the day after the resignations of the No. 2 Justice Department official, Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns; and the head of the department's criminal division, Assistant Attorney General William Weld.

Of Meese, Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon said "you finally reach a place where there is a cloud of suspicion, a sufficient cloud of suspicion, that I think you owe it to the president to remove yourself."

U-LearN to request increased funds

By Chad L. Sanborn
Staff Writer

Student Senate will meet at 6 tonight in the Union Big Eight Room to debate whether to double 1988-89 allocation funds for U-LearN in order for it to create two new positions.

Tentative 1988-89 allocations for the FONE Crisis Center and University for Man will also be discussed.

U-LearN has requested $25,884.76, more than double the sum it received for 1987-88.

Debbie Paap, senior in fine arts and U-LearN co-director, said the higher request is justified because U-Learn is becoming the central information center for the campus.

"U-LearN is changing," she said. "We used to be the place people called for trivia answers. But now we answer over 30,000 phone calls (per year) and pass out 30,000 pamphlets. We are constantly being asked to sit on various committees. The higher-uppers in the administration are finally realizing what we can become."

Funded primarily through Senate, Paap said there is a 50-50 chance U-LearN will receive its request.

"We know the money is not there. It is up to the senators to decide if they want to go into the reserves," she said. "And (the chance of receiving the full request) is tough to figure with senators, knowing they can fight for two hours over 50 bucks."

However, the Student Senate Finance Committee has recommended U-LearN receive $12,280.00. That is down $654.39 from last year's allocation of $12,934.39 and less than half of this year's request.

Mark Burns, junior in finance and chairman of the committee, said the committee wanted to fund the new positions through an increase in the Student Services Fee. But Senate voted down the fee increase, saying it would send a bad message to the Kansas Legislature and possibly hurt the chances of the Margin of Excellence plan.

The finance committee decided against granting U-LearN's full request, Burns said, because the committee recommended no salary increases. Exceptions were made for the Student Governing Association's secretary, whose increase was mandated by the state and the legal services secretary.

FONE has requested more than $12,612.76 for next year — $773.90 more than Senate allocated it for 1987-88. However, the Senate Finance Committee has recommended FONE receive only $11,855.06.

The University for Man, 1221 Thurston St., has requested only $36.12 more than its 1987-88 allocation of $13,133.13. The committee has recommended UFM receive $12,270 for next year — $862.63 less than it received in 1987-88.

Federal economics to be forum's topic

By The Collegian Staff

The federal budget, problems created by the federal deficit, and international economic issues will be the topic of discussion at a forum at 7:30 tonight in Union 212.

Roger Trenary, instructor of economics, said his presentation will focus on how the federal budget problems were generated, how the budgetary deficit escalated to its present level, and possible solutions to economic problems.

Trenary said some of the problems he will discuss were generated by an appointed federal committee. The committee's report is scheduled to be released in 1989.

Patrick Gormely, associate professor of economics, will address international economic issues.

Two of these issues are the international debt problem and the fact that importing oil is getting the economy into trouble, Gormely said.

Presently, America is in a pretty "easy" time, but the price of oil is increasing and it could lead to problems, he said.

NOW the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover.
2 And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people.
7 Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed.
14 And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.
15 And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer:
16 For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.
17 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:
18 For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.
19 And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.

26 And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body.
27 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it;
28 For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.

Success of task force depends on students

Confusion may add to excitement, but members of Student Senate and administrators have decided that confusion isn't the type of excitement they want to have at sporting events.

As a result, Senate created the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force.

The task force's mission is to organize and compile a complete policy for athletic ticket sales and a new seating plan to be used during men's basketball games in Bramlage Coliseum.

And it's about time. For too long the guidelines surrounding ticket sales and policies have been obscure — at best. They are inconsistently changed and are confusing to fans.

But the formulation of a comprehensive policy is a big job for any group to tackle.

The task force's final recommendation is expected to run the gamut from the sale of tickets to seating policies in the student section. If approved by Senate, the recommendation will be set in stone — not changed on a whim.

But once the recommendation is made, it must be made easily available — not locked away in a Senate filing cabinet somewhere.

And because of the large impact the proposal will have on fans, the task force must tread lightly, considering all of its options and what solution would benefit fans the most.

While evaluating the student practice of camping out to get good tickets, task force members must realize that setting a deadline for the start of camping will only begin a tradition of camping out to camp out for tickets.

And the group must decide the seating in the coliseum fairly — not on the basis of a student's association with campus organizations.

If the form of season tickets is to be changed, it should not be decided on the basis of what works at other college campuses. Rather, it should be decided on what is best for this University and the team's fans.

But the task force cannot formulate such a wide-scale recommendation on its own. Instead, today's student forum in the Union is the best way for students to voice their opinions on the task force's mission and to make sure the group isn't overlooking any problems or solutions.

When Bramlage Coliseum opens, it could prove to be one of the best additions to campus in a long time. However, if the task force does not create a policy that can be used year after year, fans may be faced with too much confusion and not enough excitement.

Good care for animals doesn't come cheaply

On Sunday, an anonymous announcement was published in the Manhattan Mercury chastising the T. Russell Reitz Animal Shelter for what the author saw as numerous instances of inhumane treatment.

Included in the ad is the inference that the $53 "adoption fee" is unjustified. The cost breaks down as follows: $15 for adoption, $8 for rabies shots if the animal does not have a current tag, $5 for a license if the owner-to-be lives in an area that requires one, and a $25 deposit that is returned after the animal has been spayed or neutered.

The importance of spaying and neutering animals is immense. It has become so important that a bill has already passed the Kansas Legislature requiring all adopted pets to be neutered or spayed. A Manhattan city ordinance already requires adopted pets to be spayed or neutered within 30 days of adoption.

The good news is that many veterinarians offer discounts on spaying or neutering adopted pets. K-State Veterinary Medicine Hospital gives a 50 percent discount if the pet is adopted from the shelter.

Another falsehood in the advertisement is that the shelter should operate within the confines of the definition given in the National Humane Society's announcement describing the purpose of a Humane Society animal shelter. The city shelter is not sponsored by the Humane Society but by a government-mandated regulatory association, said a shelter official.

It is there for the convenience of the people. It exists to reduce the population of stray animals and animal bites.

The final misconception is that the whole tone of the announcement suggests the shelter is inhumane in its treatment of animals by its use of euthanasia. Actually, this is a service to an animal.

An animal will not continue to live on the streets, where it may starve or become disease-infected. It will not be forced to live in a home where it is unwanted, which could lead to endless cases of animal abuse — the least of which is improper care.

The truly inhumane treatment of pets occurs when people pay to have such announcements published that contain misleading and erroneous statements. The money would be better spent in attempting to adopt animals and find homes for them.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced typed pages, and the author will be photographed.

Send submissions to the Collegian in Kedzie 103.

Holding the public's hand

State's ban on legal ads goes too far

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

I received a lot of junk mail this week. In fact, aside from bills, that is about the only mail I ever receive.

A look at some of the letters piled up on my desk would reveal two different Publisher's Clearing House give-away offers (one addressed to Cathy Doud and one addressed to C.M. Doud), a card encouraging me to see my eye doctor to get my eyes checked, a letter from my dentist informing me it has been six months since I've had a torture session with him, three or four assorted offers for credit cards, an offer for credit card insurance, a couple of catalogs and a card telling me to call and see about what I won in the sweepstakes I entered. Funny, I don't even remember entering a sweepstakes.

Most of the mail is pretty harmless. Just because I receive notices telling me about offers and products doesn't mean I rush right out and and buy them. Like most consumers, I'm fairly rational. (Most of the time.)

However, if I happened to live in Kentucky, I wouldn't have to be rational. The state would take care of it for me.

Apparently the state of Kentucky thinks that the consumers who live there are unable to take responsibility for their actions. They seem to feel that if consumers receive a direct mailing they might just lose all control and rush right out in a wild spending frenzy and purchase the advertised service. Heck, if direct mail advertising worked that well, then everyone would be doing it now.

However, it is not all services that are banned from direct mail advertising, just the legal services. In particular, a specific attorney is being banned by the state from using direct mail advertising to send information about his services to those people who need it most — in this case, people who are threatened with mortgage foreclosures. The case will be heard this spring by the Supreme Court.

But is it really necessary to drag the courts into this? The problem could be solved if the people involved would just look at it rationally. If the advertiser in question was not a lawyer, just a person providing a service, it would seem idiotic to prevent him from sending advertising to prospective clients. How are they supposed to attract these clients if they don't advertise anyway?

Those opposing the attorney's use of direct mail advertising to target prospective customers claim that if this is permitted, the next thing that will happen is that lawyers will be ransacking hospitals, courts and banks to get records to add to their mailing lists. Of course, the fact that people, like insurance agents and stockbrokers, already do this very thing doesn't seem to make any difference to them. Obviously, lawyers are far less scrupulous about these sorts of things.

The Kentucky court seems to think that if a person who is distressed receives a message from a lawyer in the mail, he will see it as a quick fix and rush right out into the devious lawyer's office to spend his money. Wow. If this is the kind of faith the legal establishment has in its members, the public certainly should be concerned. Those lawyers in Kentucky must be really bad guys bent on hoodwinking the public if the court can't even trust them to let them advertise their services.

Not to be too Pollyannaish, I realize there are bad lawyers in the real world. However, the problems should controllable by each state's legal association. All the state needs to do is make restrictions upon the accuracy and fairness allowed in these mailings and establish severe penalties for disobedience. Sure, some inaccurate mailings could still be sent out, but surely the customer isn't as dumb as the state seems to believe he is.

It is time for the courts to remove some of these petty restrictions upon advertisers in this country. Advertisers need the freedom to place information regarding their products in front of those people who need it the most without government interference. The Supreme Court has already upheld other similar cases, such as when it ruled that Ohio could not stop ads aimed at women who were injured by the Dalkon Shield.

The courts should not stop there. Advertising needs to be recognized as a vehicle for information and communication, and be respected as such. Trivial censorship should not be tolerated by the advertisers or the consumers. The public doesn't need a babysitter any longer. Let's show a little faith in not only the lawyers and advertisers, but the consumers as well.

Lucky to be alive

Editor,

This is in response to your editorial "Speed limit on U.S. 24 should be reduced soon" in Monday's Collegian. I was one of those "lucky" women who survived the accident, and I praise God for keeping the driver, me and my baby through that ordeal.

I fully agree with the sentiment of you and the people who live along that route about putting a speed zone there. It is a circus out there, and there have been many times when cars have passed me as if I was sitting still.

Keep in mind that there are many people who have to turn off along this route or pull on to this route making it all that much more dangerous. Since the accident, we've heard from the wrecker, the insurance man and several others who looked over the car after the accident who all said that we should not have survived, let alone walk away from it like we did.

I realize others would grumble about having to slow down should a speed zone be enforced, and I like getting home right away after work too. But at least I'm still here and the next person might not be so "lucky!"

MOE support

Editor,

When I arrived as president of K-State two years ago, I was appalled to discover how far this great university had slipped behind its peer institutions in terms of faculty compensation and program funding support. In sharing these findings with the Board of Regents, we were able to develop a program to address this issue — the Margin of Excellence.

In recent days, significant actions on this measure have been taken in the Kansas House of Representatives and the Senate. As many of you are aware, the House recently approved full funding of the salary increases recommended in the MOE for fiscal year 1989.

At K-State, this would result in an average increase of 7.9 percent for all unclassified employees — which is the increase needed to move us toward 100 percent salary parity with our peer institutions over the next three years. Full funding would also result in a 4 percent increase plus one step for classified employees.

Most recently, Sen. Merrill Werts of Junction City presented a motion before the Senate Ways and Means Committee calling for full funding of the entire MOE program — salary and program enhancements. This motion received approval from the committee by a vote of six to five.

If the Ways and Means Committee's recommendation receives approval from the full Senate, the salary issue will provide for full funding while differences in funding of program enhancements called for in the MOE will be worked out by the Conference Committee of the two houses.

At this point, the prospects for the MOE are excellent. A great deal of the credit for the success of this venture goes to the students, faculty, staff and alumni of K-State who worked so hard to see that the citizens of Kansas and their representatives in government were informed on the issues.

As we enter the final days of the 1988 legislative session, we need to continue to work with our representatives to remind them just how important this investment in higher education is to all of the citizens of Kansas.

Immigrants on the Plains

Thai Billiards and tailor shop expects a lot of business from the 2,700 Garden City residents from Southeast Asia. About 5,000 Southeast Asians have lived around the town since 1980; many have since moved on to other American cities.

With the failing agriculture and oil economies, increases in a city population in this part of Kansas is an anomaly. What is even more strange, however, is who moved there. Of the 6,000 newcomers to Garden City since 1980, more than 5,000 of them were Southeast Asian.

They did not, however, move into a typical Anglo-American community. Garden City already had a large population of Hispanic descendants who started moving there after World War II. They still account for some of the growth.

Together, the Asian and Hispanic populations make about 30 percent of the city's residents. Anglos still hold the majority with a little more than 70 percent of the total population. Asians account for about 10 percent, and those of Hispanic descent are about 20 percent of the total.

An Phan Vu, president of the Board of the Asian Mutual Assistance Center, brings up a point during a meeting.

Although the Asian immigrants are counted as one group, they had little in common before coming to the United States. They have three different languages and cultures — Cambodian, Laotian and Vietnamese.

And, their homelands were not always friends with each other. For instance, Cambodia and Vietnam were enemies during the Vietnam War when Vietnam helped attack Cambodia.

Liberal immigration laws for Asian refugees in the early 1980s combined with job opportunities provided by two beef-packing plants built during the same time period account for much of the growth.

Iowa Beef Processors is the bigger of the two packing plants. It employees about 2,600 people to slaughter, process and package the meat. The starting wages range from $6.40 to $6.70, according to the employment office at IBP.

The evolving cultural make up of Garden City has aroused curiosity around the nation. More than 75 newspaper articles have been written about the city. The Philadelphia Inquirer, Denver Post and the Wichita Eagle-Beacon have sent reporters to study how Garden City has been affected.

Now, the Ford Foundation has included the city in a $1 million nationwide study of new immigrants and the communities they move into.

"Suddenly, a lot of newcomers have moved in, and Garden City seems to have been able to handle the situation," said Janet Benson, associate professor of anthropology and member of the Garden City project team set up by the Ford Foundation.

Garden City, which has a population of about 27,000, will be studied along with the immigrant populations in San Francisco, Chicago, Philadelphia and Miami. Researchers from K-State, the University of Kansas, The Wichita State University and the University of Colorado will use the $150,000 allotted by the Ford Foundation to conduct their research in western Kansas.

Benson said the group will study not only how well the Asians have adapted to Garden City, but also how successful the city is in accommodating them.

"Something like this hasn't really been studied before," Benson said. "Why is there a better situation in Garden City relative to other cities?"

She said Garden City had adequate housing, employment and health care for the influx of newcomers — something other cities were not successful in providing.

Regardless of how well Garden City has accommodated the immigrants, it is not without some side effects.

Fights among the cultures, involving bicycle chains and knives, have erupted at the high school. In 1984, the school hired security guards to curb the number of violent disturbances. The guards were dismissed one year later.

Now, Principal Greg Sprinston said there is a "peaceful coexistence" among the cultures. He said the atmosphere is good, but students do not often cross cultural lines by participating in extracurricular activities, which are predominantly made up of one ethnic group.

The high school's soccer club, for example, has about 35 members. More than 30 of the players are Asian, said Mike Eskitch, the team's coach.

No other conflicts have flared because the city is big enough for the cultures to ignore others, said Peggy Serry, bilingual teacher at the high school. All three cultures have their own restaurants, entertainment and social groups.

"You can see it in the (high school) cafeteria. The Vietnamese sit in this circle, the Mexicans in this circle and the whites over here," she said.

Ignoring other cultures is not limited to the high school. Many Asians live in mobile home parks because the homes are inexpensive and are not required to meet city standards.

Enormous mobile-home parks have sprung up outside the city limits. For example, East Garden Village contains more than 450 mobile homes in a 130-acre lot.

City ordinances and landlords forbid large amounts of people from living in the same house or apartment. The city says it is a health hazard, and landlords regard it as excessive wear on the apartment.

Often, Asians live as inexpensively as possible so they can send money to relatives still in Southeast Asia, said Sister Levita Rohman, member of the Asian Mutual Assistance Center and Catholic Agency for Migration and Refugee Services.

Mobile homes are the perfect solution for saving money. They are inexpensive to own and there are no landlords.

"When you own your own home no one can tell you how many people can live there," she said.

Rohlman, who helps Asians find homes and jobs when they arrive in Garden City, agreed with Benson — the refugees usually do not have problems finding housing and employment. But, she credits organizations like the mutual assistance center and other Asians in the area for the success.

Families support relatives who just arrived in the United States by opening up their homes until the immigrants can find housing, providing transportation to work, and helping them adjust to Western Kansas.

"It's a lot of work (for the anchor person in the United States). They have to be responsible for the newcomers. They have to make room in their houses, take them to work, enroll their kids in school ... ," she said.

"They have to be committed, or neither they or the people they brought here will be happy," Rohlman said.

Attendance is high at one elementary school that has a 60 percent minority student population; it is often 100 percent.

This is the first installment of a three part series. The following articles will study how the immigrants have adapted to the city, and how the city has accommodated the Asians. The stories will run on a weekly basis.

Highways focus of seminar

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

The future of Kansas' transportation system was the subject of the 70th Annual Kansas Transportation Engineering Conference, which opened to more than 385 participants Wednesday in the Union.

The purpose of the two-day conference is to bring together those involved with the Kansas highway system to discuss the current status and future of state transportation. Concurrent sessions on topics including effective highway designs, highway construction materials and designs and updates on various transportation systems were also part of the conference.

Today's topics include an update on state aviation, safer road designs and highway research programs.

Stating a highway system is a "pay for what you get" situation, Kansas Secretary of Transportation Horace Edwards spoke about the current status and outlook of Kansas transportation.

Edwards said the system is currently short of funds, and that maintenence programs are inadequate.

By 1991, all federally funded programs will come to an end and by 1993, the national interstate system should be completed, creating a vacuum in the state transportation system, he said.

Deb Miller, Director of the Kansas Department of Transportation Division of Planning and Development, presented details of a transportation agenda, "2020 - A Plan for the Future." The program is a multi-year, multi-faceted effort for a plan to reach agreement and make a formidable plan for the transportation needs in the 21st century.

Currently, forums are being held throughout the nation on the program and have been completed in all but seven states. The purpose of the forums is to clarify the program details and how they are being addressed by highway users.

The two-day conference is sponsored by K-State, the Kansas Department of Transportation, Kansas Association of County Engineers, Kansas Institute of Municipal Engineering/APWA and the Kansas Association for Uniform Traffic Control.

Group discusses distribution of MOE faculty salary raises

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

The number of variables determining how to allocate the Margin of Excellence faculty salary increases grows with each press release from the Legislature.

A Wednesday night forum, sponsored by the American Association of University Professors, focused on the complexities of determining allocated salary increases when MOE funds are approved by the Kansas Legislature.

Compounded by issues like merit, equity, expectations and a rising cost of living, the salary increases could lead to a decline in faculty morale, a University official said.

"We have to ensure that interdepartmental salaries don't become so disparate that it adversely affects morale," said Donald Hoyt, assistant provost and professor of planning and evaluation services.

"We get faculty sniping at faculty, saying, 'how come you're getting so much more than I am?'" he said.

According to figures from the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, K-State lags well behind other national schools in salaries, he said.

At the professor level, the disparity is 26.4 percent; at the associate professor level the gap is 21.1 percent; the gap is 12.7 percent for assistant instructors; and 2.8 percent for instructors, Hoyt said.

According to the same study, the national average for percentage of faculty who are full professors is 43.5 percent. At K-State the percentage is 39.4, Hoyt said.

Hoyt said the issue of salary equity must be dealt with.

Message to Kruger clear: stay

'Cat backers expressed concerns

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

The message to K-State's men's basketball coach Lon Kruger from students, alumni and administrators Wednesday was an emphatic "Coach, don't go!"

"Every office in the athletic department has been receiving telephone calls almost continually since (Wednesday) morning," said Torrey Head, administrative assistant in the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

"There is a genuine concern on the part of alumni, students and fans. Coach Kruger has done a tremendous job, and the people want him to stay," he said.

"He's been such a positive influence here, as evidenced by the number of people who have called to express concern and the number of people out at the airport (Monday) night," Head said.

Pennie Wallerstedt, director of administration programs for the Alumni Association, said her office had received about 20 calls from alumni Wednesday morning inquiring about whether or not Kruger was going to accept the job at Texas.

"The callers were all expressing concern. They don't want it to happen at all," she said.

Kruger's decision not to accept the Texas position came as a relief to the team — especially the underclassmen. Sophomore point guard Steve Henson said losing Kruger would have been devastating.

"I know there have been a lot of the games this year we've won because of the great coaching jobs," Henson said. "There were a lot of times we'd be talking in the room or dorm saying, 'Man, (Kruger) really came up with something great this time.'"

Henson, who had been waiting on Kruger's decision since 10:30 a.m., said he wasn't worried about the second-year head coach making the move to Texas.

"Actually I was surprised I found out about it," Henson said.

"I went to (McPherson) last night and intended to come back this morning. I called one of the managers, and it didn't have anything to do about coach (Kruger), and he thought I heard it on the news. He told me, and I thought it was ridiculous."

Reserve guard and forward Carlos Diggins, who first heard the rumor two days ago, also said he wasn't worried about Kruger leaving.

"I knew how coach felt about being here, and how he felt about the players. I didn't think anyone would leave this program to go to Texas," Diggins said.

In a private meeting with Kruger Wednesday afternoon, Diggins said Kruger reassured him he would not leave K-State.

"(Kruger) told me that we have a lot of hard work to do for the next year and that we need to start right away," Diggins said.

Students also voiced concerns about Kruger's decision.

Mary Ann Locke, junior in business administration, said she thinks Kruger is a great coach and has done a lot for K-State and that it would be hard for students to see him go.

"Everyone seems to like him as well as the team. It's like he's part of the team. It (would be) hard to part with someone like that. It's like he's family," she said.

Jim Wondra, senior in accounting, said Kruger was one of the major reasons the basketball team had been so successful.

"Everything that can be done to keep him (here) should be done," he said.

"He could start a dynasty here, like Jack Hartman did," he added.

Nikole Perrigo, freshman in journalism and mass communications, said it would be a big loss to K-State to lose Kruger.

"I think all those people showing up at the airport to welcome him home shows we are really backing him," she said.

Sports writer Tom Morris also contributed to this report.

Baseball team at home today

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

K-State's baseball team will be looking to bounce back from a Tuesday loss today, as it hosts Emporia State University at Frank Myers Field. Game time is 1 p.m.

The Wildcats will also open their Big Eight Confernce season against top-ranked Oklahoma State at Stillwater, Okla., Friday.

K-State pitchers issued eight walks and the Wildcat defense allowed five unearned runs as K-State fell to the University of Creighton Bluejays, 11-3, at Rosenblatt Stadium in Omaha, Neb., Tuesday evening.

"It was a type of game where whatever could go wrong, did go wrong," Coach Mike Clark said. "During the baseball season you're going to have some of those games."

K-State's starting pitcher, Bill Schafer, lasted only one-third of an inning in suffering his first loss in six games.

Creighton took advantage of Schafer's control troubles to score four runs on only one hit in the first inning, and K-State could never recover.

Clark said K-State cannot afford to overlook the Hornets from Emporia. The Hornets could present K-State with difficulties, Clark said, and it is important the team keeps its thoughts on this afternoon's contest rather than look ahead to the weekend.

"(ESU) has always been a tough NAIA ballclub. A lot of people saw them as the top team in Kansas last season," Clark said. "You usually tend to overlook a smaller school when you play right before a big game."

K-State's record is 18-6. Friday, the 'Cats will begin what is one of their toughest road trips of the season at Oklahoma State.

"It will be a good challenge," Clark said. "Not too many people go down to Stillwater and win. We're off to a good start and we're confident that we will go down to Stillwater and represent K-State well.

"You have to play the top teams in order to build your program," Clark said. "I didn't take this job to be fifth, sixth or seventh; I plan on building this program to be able to contend with the best of the Big Eight. I don't think that we'll go down there and be in awe of anything. We have an experienced group and I feel that we can play with anyone."

Final Four coaches say pressure is off

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The pressure of being in the Final Four is not nearly as overpowering as people might expect, the coaches of this year's NCAA semifinalists agreed Wednesday.

"The pressure is greatest in the first game of the playoffs," said Arizona coach Lute Olson. "I would be surprised if any of us in the Final Four feel a great deal of pressure."

"I don't think there's any pressure at all," said Billy Tubbs of Oklahoma. "We call it desire."

Olson, Tubbs, Kansas' Larry Brown and Duke's Mike Krzyzewski all took part in a conference call originating a few blocks from Kemper Arena, where the semifinals will be staged Saturday. Olson's high-scoring Wildcats, 35-2, will meet Tubbs' high-scoring Sooners, 34-3, in a semifinal that figures to produce over 200 points. In the first semifinal, Kansas, 25-11, plays Duke, 28-6.

Brown's 1985-86 Jayhawks lost to Duke in the Dallas Final Four 71-67, but he and Krzyzewski both figure their players will not be overcome with pressure to perform.

"Maybe there's pressure in getting to the Final Four once you start the tournament," said Brown, who also coached UCLA to the Final Four in 1980. "Losing that regional championship game is the toughest on both teams because you're so close to the Final Four, and then suddenly it's all over. But I don't feel any pressure. And I know our kids don't either. They're just thrilled to death."

"Being in the Final Four is something you want to take advantage of," Krzyzewski said. "You never know if you're going to do it again. And you want to make the most of your opportunity. Once you're here, the focus for all teams is to make the most of the opportunity and the time. Try to win, but also try to take part in what the Final Four is all about. That's the way we're approaching it."

"I really think the pressure decreases rather than mounts," Olson said. "At this point, you know if you can win that next one you're going to have a shot at the whole thing. But there are four good basketball teams there and anything can happen. I think there is less pressure with this one than with the ones before."

Olson's team hopes to dispel the lingering doubts that many might still have about the Wildcats.

Kruger right where he wants to be — at K-State

Commentary

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

He's staying!

Lon Kruger's announcement Wednesday afternoon that he would remain as head basketball coach at K-State brought with it a collective sigh of relief from K-Staters everywhere, and was an affirmation of Kruger's belief in his alma mater and what it stands for.

Coaching positions like the one the University of Texas at Austin had offered Kruger don't come along every day, and it says a great deal about Kruger's commitment to K-State that he spurned what probably would have been a great deal more money to remain here, at home.

Kruger is one of the most outstanding young coaches in America today and an outstanding person as well.

"In all my years in college athletics, I've never met a young man with more strength of character, moral fiber and belief in what he's doing than Lon Kruger," K-State athletic director Larry Travis said Wednesday afternoon.

High praise from a man who but hours earlier had to be wondering if he would be soon searching for a coach.

Travis said Kruger, even though he's just been at the helm at K-State for just two years, has earned every bit of the notoriety he's currently receiving.

"I'm from the old school where you've got to earn your wings, and he's earned them," Travis said.

Kruger, for his part, said it was that on-going love affair between himself and his alma mater that made it all but impossible to leave.

"I couldn't be more pleased. We're right where we want to be, fighting the battle we want to fight," he said.

University President Jon Wefald, who took an active role in the efforts to convince Kruger to stay at K-State, said Kruger's role as a leader on campus and around the state is one that shouldn't be underemphasized.

"What I tried to do in my discussions with Lon was to outline the pros and cons of Texas and Kansas State, especially in terms of basketball," Wefald said. "As a basketball coach you can be a major player in Kansas, where basketball is king. In Texas, where football is king, it's tougher to make an impact.

"He's a K-Stater, and I think Lon realizes that he's playing a key role in what we're trying to do here at K-State."

Wefald said it is Kruger's dedication to his job that has fostered the most respect over the past two seasons.

"I really respect the outstanding job Lon Kruger has done here in the past two years," Wefald said. "The professionalism he and his players demonstrate on and off the court is a credit to Kansas State University."

Travis, upon his return from a noon luncheon with Kruger and Wefald Wednesday, was beaming as he moved toward reporters with his coach at his side.

He looked just like the cat that swallowed the canary, and his smile let that proverbial cat out of the bag — those of us assembled outside Ahearn then knew that Lon was staying.

That's all we wanted to hear.

Thanks a bunch for putting the faith in us that we've put in you, my friend.

Lon Kruger was the man for the job when he was hired in 1986, and he's still the man for the job.

Arizona ready to leave Tucson

By The Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — The University of Arizona's first-ever trip to the Final Four is getting plenty of attention in Tucson.

So much in fact that Wildcats Coach Lute Olson says he will be glad when his second-ranked Wildcats leave today for Kansas City, Mo., and the site of the NCAA Tournament windup.

"Everybody is talking about the team," he said. "You pick up the paper, you turn on the TV, you see the Wildcats. It's definitely a focal point."

Arizona, 35-2, faces 34-3 Oklahoma in Saturday's semifinals. The Wildcats have been installed as 7-5 favorites to go on and win Monday night's title game.

"We've been saying all along our goal is to get to the Final Four," said senior center Tom Tolbert. "But obviously, if you say that, you want to win the whole thing. We know there are two more games to play."

"Everybody is excited and everything," said All-America junior forward Sean Elliott. "But we still realize there are two games left and we still have our mind set on the national championship."

The team returned from the regionals in Seattle to a campus reception Sunday night at McKale Center with 9,000 screaming fans.

"The fans are going crazy right now. We can't go anywhere without people saying something about the (North Carolina) game or asking about the Final Four," said Elliott.

OU won't alter game plan

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs was told that his opposite number at Arizona, Lute Olson, said it wouldn't be in Arizona's best interests to run with the Sooners in their Final Four matchup Saturday.

"If he doesn't want to run around with me, I don't want to run around with him," Tubbs said. "Whatever's in his best interests is fine with me."

But seriously, folks. Although Arizona pushes the ball up the floor — the Wildcats averaged 85 points a game in going 35-2 — Tubbs probably would have been surprised if Olson had said his team would run with the Sooners.

Only one team this year has been successful playing Oklahoma's game. That was Missouri in the second-to-last game of the regular season when the Tigers, playing at home, beat Oklahoma, 93-90, in overtime.

Everyone else who has tried to match the Sooners sprint for sprint has gone away a loser. Oklahoma is 34-3 thanks to its breakneck pace, averaging 104 points per game. Based on those numbers, Olson's statement was understandable, and sound.

Task force plans ticket sales forum

By The Collegian Staff

A forum at noon today in the Union courtyard will give students the opportunity to ask questions and voice their opinions on the structure of ticket sales and seating in Bramlage Coliseum.

Current seating plans call for 6,000 seats to be allotted to students. The seats will be sold in horizontal blocks from court level to the top row of seating, said Dave Whetstone, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and chairman of Student Senate's Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force.

By grouping the seats, the problems of having fans standing within groups of fans sitting are negated.

Also once a ticket is purchased, that is where the student will sit, Whetstone said.

While the task force studied policies at about 25 other universities, Whetstone said, the group did not find a rotation system successful enough to implement.

The distribution of tickets may also be changed before next season, Whetstone said. Currently ticket sales are on a first-come, first-serve basis causing some students to camp out for priority seating.

The task force members will present their resolution to Student Senate by April 24.

Head said that at this time the idea "doesn't hold too much weight in the athletic department."

The idea is being received by students with mixed reviews.

"I'm a big K-State basketball fan, but not a K-State football fan," said Pat McLaughlin, senior in accounting. McLaughlin said he possibly would buy a dual ticket so that he could go to the basketball games.

"I think it's a good way to promote football," said Kathy Hayden, sophomore in business. "If you don't want a football ticket, you can just sell it to someone who wants it."

Selling tickets as a pass and having students pick up each game's ticket at the athletic department is currently in use at some schools. One major benefit from this method is that the athletic department can resell those tickets to the public which are not claimed by students, Meyer said.

Tickets would be available on a first-come, first-served basis, she said, adding that students would be assured of a ticket but not a certain seat.

"You wouldn't get the same seat every time," Meyer said. "It would all be based according to where you are in line on the day of the game."

This alternative also received mixed reviews from students.

"I think it's a good idea," McLaughlin said. "As long as you would still be able to get a seat — you don't have to be on the front row every time."

"It would waste too much of my time (waiting in line for tickets)," said Kathy England, sophomore in business.

"It's a little bit of a hassle," said Rob Banister, senior in civil engineering, who had attended Washburn University, where the price for tickets is included in student fees.

Friday: Reactions from students attending a public forum today that is designed to give input to the task force.

Kruger

oposals and discussing things with wife Barbara and other friends, including former Coach Jack Hartman, Kruger said he made up his mind to stay at K-State around noon Wednesday. Not surprisingly, Travis couldn't be happier with Kruger's decision.

"I'm just completely ecstatic about Lon and Barb's decision to stay at Kansas State University," Travis said. "I haven't come across too many people like Lon in my 25 years of athletic association. I really haven't found a young person who has more strength of character, belief and moral fiber than Lon Kruger."

Travis viewed Kruger's staying as significant even beyond the face value of retaining a winning coach.

"For the first time, the Kansas State ... athletic director has decided that we were going to get into the mainstream of reality when it comes to doing what we have to do to keep good people," he said.

"We've held so long in the idea that we don't have enough to do that and we've lost good people. I made up my mind 6 to 8 months ago that wasn't going to be the case."

Travis received plenty of help from Wefald in his efforts to keep Kruger.

"I spent a good amount of time talking to (Kruger) about it — just the two of us," Wefald said. "I talked to him on the phone last night for quite awhile then I talked to him for an hour or so this morning."

Kruger was greeted by around 150 cheering fans at the Manhattan Municipal Airport just after midnight Tuesday when he returned from Austin. Kruger received the call from Wefald shortly after arriving home with his wife and seven-year-old daughter.

Kruger straightfacedly told the group he wasn't sure if he would accept the Texas job or not. Around 12 hours later, during a lunch meeting at the President's home with Wefald and Travis, Kruger had made his decision.

Krause suggests abolishing co-op

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

For the first time, the idea of dissolving the KSU Childcare Cooperative was publicly raised Thursday by an administration official. Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said it may be time to consider closing the financially strapped co-op.

"Maybe we're kidding ourselves," Krause said. "Maybe we ought to dissolve it and give it to the private sector."

In addition, Krause, who attended the co-op's board of directors meeting Thursday afternoon, said the University would pledge $9,000 to the co-op and continue its previous financial commitments, including providing bookkeeping services and rent reduction.

The co-op had been seeking about $200,000 in a combination of student and administration money, said Esther Gray, assistant director of the co-op. However, Student Senate voted down a bill March 4 that would have established a student fee to support the co-op.

Gray said the possibility of closing the day care center has not been discussed by co-op officials and that Krause's suggestion came as a surprise.

"That's not something the board's been talking about," she said. "That's new to us."

Although the University's latest monetary pledge isn't what co-op officials had hoped for, Krause said it is the best the administration can do right now.

"At a time when resources have been very scarce at this institution, we've put in a fair amount," he said, adding the issue isn't whether the co-op is a quality program but rather if the University can afford to allocate any of its already-meager funds.

Although Krause said the administration will continue to search for sources of funding, he admitted that the co-op is low on its priority list.

"In terms of the overall funding priorities of this institution, it's low," he said.

However, Krause said he is drafting a memo to Student Body President Troy Lubbers and Senate Chairman Doug Folk encouraging them to look into proposing a "quality of life" bill that would establish a student fee. Ideally, Krause said, students would vote on the referendum.

The fee would potentially fund the co-op, debate team, non-varsity athletics and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, Krause said, adding that he believes such a bill would keep the co-op funding issue alive.

"I don't think (the co-op) is a dead issue, and I think (the bill) will revitalize that issue," Krause said.

Dawn Peters, chairwoman of the co-op's board of directors, was unsatisfied with the University's offer.

"The support we're receiving from the University will not raise (teacher) salaries," Peters said. "We'll probably have a whole new staff next fall."

Krause countered: "The fact of the matter is you have a whole host of student services that are

Task force presents sales options

Editor's Note: This is the fifth part of a five-part series on Student Senate's Ticket Sales Task Force, its mission and the problems it is encountering.

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

The crowd was sparse Thursday at a public forum that centered on the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force's suggestions for the sale of athletic tickets.

The task force, established by Student Senate, was created to study problems involved with the sale of athletic tickets, primarily basketball tickets.

The goals originally set for the committee are:

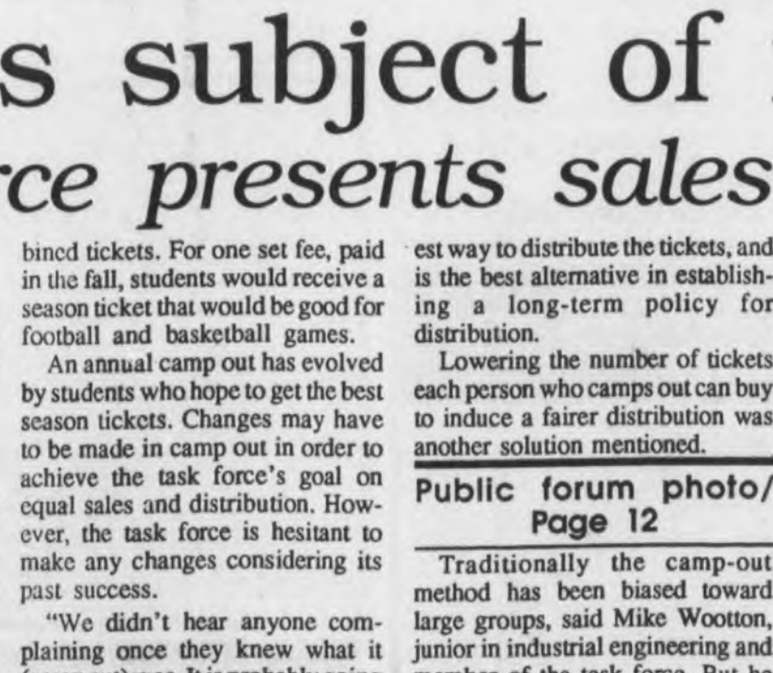
- To adopt the best possible distribution method for student tickets.
- To provide student seating that is compatible with the amount of money spent by the student.
- To avoid ticket sale conflicts with I Contributed A Twenty members.
- To avoid conflicts in the coliseum between the faculty, staff and students, such as blocked views of the game.

Keeping these goals in mind, several possible solutions have been examined by the task force, said David Whetstone, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and chairman of the task force.

One possibility is selling combined tickets. For one set fee, paid in the fall, students would receive a season ticket that would be good for football and basketball games.

An annual camp out has evolved by students who hope to get the best season tickets. Changes may have to be made in camp out in order to achieve the task force's goal on equal sales and distribution. However, the task force is hesitant to make any changes considering its past success.

"We didn't hear anyone complaining once they knew what it (camp out) was. It is probably going to be the best way once it is set in stone (as the best method)," said Jim Gewecke, junior in business administration and task force member.



Camp out provides publicity for the team, he said. It also is the fairest way to distribute the tickets, and is the best alternative in establishing a long-term policy for distribution.

Lowering the number of tickets each person who camps out can buy to induce a fairer distribution was another solution mentioned.

Traditionally the camp-out method has been biased toward large groups, said Mike Wootton, junior in industrial engineering and member of the task force. But he said this won't be such a problem since Fred Bramlage Coliseum has better seating plans than Ahearn Field House.

"The (Coliseum) design isn't like Ahearn. There's not a bad seat in the house," Wootton said.

Although sales to off-campus students are not as prominent as sales to members of residence halls and greek organizations, they do have tents in line, he said.

If the camper-ticket ratio is lowered, individuals would be required to be at the camp site for longer periods. The change may also involve setting a date for erecting tents on Ahearn's lawn, Whetstone said.

"If we alter the number of tickets, there are still problems with an individual being there (at the tent) for extended periods of time," he said. "The administration wants it (ticket sales) to be limited — a few days ideally. We didn't think this was reasonable."

As the distribution method is now, there may be up to five students stationed at each tent. Each student is then able to purchase twenty tickets, a total of 100 tickets per tent.

Reducing the number of ICAT members who receive tickets may also solve the problem. Traditionally, the group has been a support organization for K-State sports, Whetstone said. Its members receive first choice of tickets.

"To me, the present ICAT group is not following the original intent of what it is supposed to be," he said. "They traditionally have given time and service as well as money."

Whetstone then quoted Lon Kruger, men's basketball coach, as saying he thought ICAT "had lost sight of its original purpose."

Determining how, when or if the ICAT membership will be reduced is not an item for feasible discussion by the Athletic Ticket Task Force at this time, Whetstone said.

Contra aid measure receives approval; Reagan to sign bill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate gave lopsided approval Thursday to a $48 million humanitarian aid bill that would break a one-month drought in the flow of U.S. supplies to Nicaragua's Contra rebels and send medical care to war-injured children.

Approval on an 87-7 vote sent the measure to President Reagan, who has promised to sign it into law so that rebel fighters can be sustained in the field as they wait for agreement with the leftist Sandinista government on a long-term cease fire and a reconciliation between the two warring sides.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan, who leaves Washington today for a 10-day vacation, wanted to sign the bill before he leaves. "I would think he would sign it almost immediately after receiving it," Fitzwater said.

Congress had twice earlier this year rejected aid proposals for the rebels, and their last U.S. support had expired on Feb. 29.

The easy passage of the bill in the Senate, and a day earlier in the House, was made possible by a March 23 accord on a 60-day truce between the Contras and the Managua regime reached after talks in Sapoa, Nicaragua.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., noted that the aid bill fell short of the desires of Contra supporters, who would have preferred to send weapons to the rebels, and also bothered rebel opponents who oppose sending any aid.

University Inn faces foreclosure

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Mortgage foreclosure proceedings on University Inn were filed recently by FirstBank, but the facility is not likely to close, said Phil Brokenicky, president of Manhattan's FirstBank.

"Right now I do not foresee the University Inn closing, even if it goes through the foreclosure process," he said.

Foreclosure proceedings usually take from 90 to 120 days, Brokenicky said. If no buyer is found during that period, the case would be heard in a court of law. The judge would then direct the sheriff to sell the hotel to the highest bidder, he said. The auction would take place on the courthouse steps.

University Inn is currently being leased from the KSU Foundation by Kansas Partnership Inc., a company based in Atlanta, Ga. Kansas Partnership Inc. was unavailable for comment Thursday.

The Foundation has owned the land, located at 17th Street and Anderson Avenue, for more than 25 years, said Art Loub, KSU Foundation president.

The Foundation is in no danger of losing lease payments before the hotel is

Kassebaum to travel to Japan

WASHINGTON — Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., will travel Friday to Japan for a week-long series of meetings with government officials on agricultural trade and other issues.

Kassebaum, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, is scheduled to meet next Monday in Toyko with Yasuo Goto, Japan's agriculture vice minister, and representatives of a Japanese agricultural cooperative.

In a statement, the Kansas senator said she planned to discuss concerns over Japanese quotas on U.S. beef exports. American meat producers want the restrictions lifted.

Kassebaum's trip will occur while Congress is out of session for its Easter recess.

For most of next week, Kassebaum is to participate in a conference with other members of Congress and the Japanese Diet.

Dole reproachful of aid bill

WASHINGTON — Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas sharply criticized but supported on Thursday a $48 million humanitarian aid package for the Nicaraguan rebels.

"It is sad, and dangerous to American security interests and the cause of freedom in Nicaragua, that this is the best we can do. But, sad though it is, this is the best we can do," said Dole, who voted for the package as it passed the Senate 87-7.

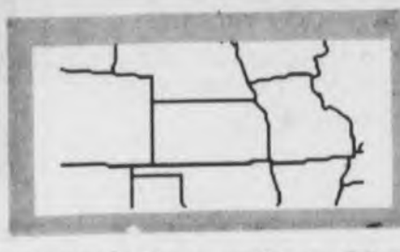
Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., also voted for the aid package.

Arias to address Harvard grads

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Costa Rican President Oscar Arias Sanchez will be the principal speaker at the Harvard University commencement in June.

The author of a Central American peace plan, Arias won the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize for his "outstanding contribution to the possible return of stability and peace to a region long torn by strife and civil war," the Nobel Committee said in awarding the honor.

Arias, 47, studied at Boston University and attended Harvard's summer school before continuing his education abroad. He spoke last year at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government.



Daylight-saving time returns

WASHINGTON — It's time to rearrange the light in our lives.

Daylight-saving time returns at 2 a.m. Sunday, the day that clocks should be shifted an hour forward.

This annual change, which causes confusion every year, may complicate even more lives this time by coming on Easter, a day when church attendance is higher than normal.

So, to avoid arriving for services an hour late, remember to set the family clocks one hour ahead before retiring Saturday night.

Rhodes wins Pulitzer Prize

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Pulitzer Prize awarded to Richard Rhodes for "The Making of the Atomic Bomb" completed a sweep of three major national book awards for the Kansas City author.

"I'm delighted, of course," said Rhodes, who was at his Kansas City apartment Thursday afternoon when Michael Korda, his editor at Simon & Schuster, called from New York with word that the book won the prize for general non-fiction.

"I guess it's unusual to win the three awards in a row," he said. "I'm happy for the book — I wanted it to be something people would read and think about, and perhaps this will help."

Earlier, Rhodes' book won the National Book Critics Circle award and the National Book Award.

The 800-page book, a comprehensive study encompassing the worlds of nuclear physics, politics and the people involved in creating the bomb, was published last February.

"It took me five years, working full time," said Rhodes. "I mortgaged my home, traveled through most of the world where the bomb was worked on over the war years, read 500 or 600 books, and thousands of documents."

The book was the eighth, four of them novels, that Rhodes has produced over the past 18 years, and the only one still in print. The book has been a success, although it failed to make hard-cover best-seller lists.

House passes retirement bill

TOPEKA — A bill that would remove any mandatory retirement age for Kansans received the House's approval Thursday.

The bill is designed to conform state law with federal law, which prohibits age discrimination by employers against anyone over the age of 40. However, the measure goes further, by prohibiting age discrimination against anyone over 18.

The House passed the bill, 120-0, after almost no debate. The action sends it to the Senate.

Current state laws prohibit discrimination agains anyone from 40 to 70 years old.

Under the bill, the criteria for employment for anyone 18 or older would be the ability to perform the job, and people could continue to work indefinitely as long as they are up to the task. However, the proposal does contain some exceptions, for firefighters, law enforcement officers and people in high-level policy-making positions.

Originally, the bill would have prevented age discrimination against only older persons. However, a House committee amended the bill after some lawmakers said the state needs to protect young people as well if it is serious about preventing age discrimination.

The federal law applies to all employers with 20 or more workers. The bill would apply to employers with four or more workers.

Students' design wins contest

Two students have won $2,000 each for their collaborative design of a veterinary hospital as part of a national design competition sponsored by Hill's Pet Products in Topeka.

Tracy Ann Carlile, senior in veterinary medicine, and Greg Miller, fifth year senior in architecture and design, designed a modern small animal hospital with grooming and boarding facilities suitable for a Johnson County site they chose. They are the first KSU team to win the national competition since its inception in 1984.

Senate amends FONE Crisis Center budget

UFM increase fails after 90-minute debate

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

After approving the first five allocation recommendations from its finance committee, Student Senate voted Thursday night to amend the budget for the FONE Crisis Center.

In a roll-call vote, Senate voted 24-21 to increase the contract for the FONE volunteer coordinator from 11 to 12 months.

The finance committee recommended an 11-month contract at $235 per month for an annual salary of $2,820. The amendment, sponsored by Laurie Lawson, arts and sciences senator, called for a 12-month contract at $232 per month for an annual salary of $2,784.

In previous years, only the FONE director had a 12-month contract. The volunteer coordinator usually didn't work during the month of Christmas break.

Charlene Nichols, arts and sciences senator and former FONE volunteer coordinator, said this posed a problem for the Crisis Center.

"When I worked at FONE, I spent several nights over Christmas break from 5 p.m. to 8 a.m. at the center alone," she said. The problem is that you must have two people available in case of a suicide call, she added.

When the volunteer coordinator was gone for a month, this left the director alone with few volunteers to help staff the phones.

Senate also debated an amendment to decrease the FONE director's salary to make it comparable to that of the student body president. This amendment, sponsored by Rattan Noth, graduate school senator, was defeated.

Also defeated was an amendment to decrease the volunteer coordinator's monthly salary to $301.12 per month and make it a 12-month position, making the annual pay $2,781.

Senate continued debate from Tuesday on the amendment to increase the salaries of the student body president and the Student Senate chairman from $3,600 to $3,780 and $2,700 to $2,835, respectively.

"We're pricing this (serving as student body president) out of average students' ability to run (for office)," said Jason Miles, arts and sciences senator. "Most students can't afford to give up a part-time job for a position that pays so little."

"We should represent people over programs," said Justin Sanders, graduate school senator, "but we have to remember that these programs represent people.

After an hour of debate, the amendment failed.

University for Man had requested Senate to support 20 percent of the UFM budget, and the finance committee recommended that Senate fund 18 percent.

Senators voted down an amendment to the finance committee's recommendation for the U-LearN budget which would have paid the $16,500-per-year salary for a full-time director of the service.

Supporters of the amendment argued that U-LearN is at a critical point in its development and needs the services of a full-time director. Currently, U-LearN are three student directors.

An increase in U-LearN's budget would have required Senate to dip into it's fiscal reserves for next year in order to maintain a balanced budget.

Passage of the amendment would benefit the entire campus, Miles said.

"We're doing something which is going to produce some good for the entire campus," he said.

Sanders, in arguing against the amendment, said Senate's financial reserves would eventually be depleted if it dipped into the funds this year to pay for U-LearN.

"I agree that the reserves would not be destroyed this budget. They will not be built up by it either," he said.

House to accept 'puppy mill' bill

Regulations to toughen, include all state kennels

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House agreed Thursday to accept a tougher "puppy mill" bill the Senate passed earlier in the day, which would bring all commercial dog and cat kennels under state regulation.

Under the bill, some kennels will be inspected by both the state livestock commission and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Now, the USDA inspects only those kennels that ship dogs out of state, and other kennels are not inspected by any government agency.

The House voted, 85-37, to accept the Senate version after more than an hour of debate. The measure now goes to Gov. Mike Hayden.

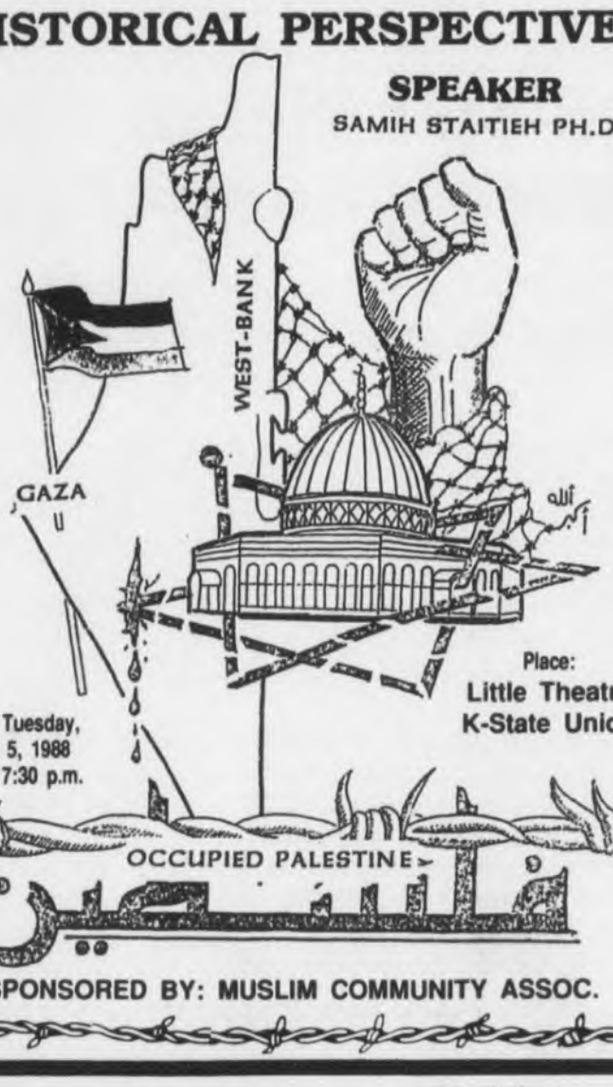
Another Senate bill killed by a House committee would have required state inspection only of kennels not inspected by the USDA. Opponents of the tougher bill contended that dual regulation is unnecessary and places a burden on kennel owners.

"I do not think we need to have inspectors following inspectors across the state," said Rep. Don Rezac, D-Onaga.

However, supporters said the state has developed a bad reputation after Kansas breeders shipped sick dogs and cats to East Coast pet stores.

"Let's be the best in this commercial industry so New York, New Jersey and Connecticut want to buy our dogs," said Rep. Ginger Barr, R-Auburn, the main proponent of the tougher bill in the House.

And Rep. Robert H. Miller, R-Wellington, said the chief USDA inspector in Kansas has told lawmakers the USDA doesn't have enough money to do adequate inspections in Kansas.



Opponents also said the bill is the first step by animal rights activists to regulate the treatment of livestock.

"They're family pets only after they're sold," said Rep. Dick Eckert, R-Wetmore. "This is a farm bill — we're dealing with farm animals."

Earlier in the day, the Senate voted, 21-16, to approve the proposal after it was resurrected Wednesday by Sen. Jeanne Hoferer, R-Topeka, who amended the measure into another bill prohibiting the sale of rabies vaccine to anyone other than veterinarians.

Co-op officials receive more gloomy figures

No one said it would be easy. Officials with the KSU Childcare Cooperative certainly don't have to be told that, especially after another disappointing day Thursday.

They were told by Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, that they would receive only $9,000 in additional money from the administration. That comes on top of the money the University has already pledged in the form of bookkeeping services and rent reduction.

Make no mistake — the administration has not totally ignored the co-op as some have claimed.

But the $9,000 allocation is extremely disappointing for co-op officials, who were viewing the administration as their last shot at getting funding. Esther Gray, assistant director of the co-op, said the center needs upwards of $200,000.

In early March, Student Senate voted down a request to establish a student fee to support the co-op.

The paltry amount of money pledged Thursday doesn't even come close to solving the co-op's financial woes, which are significant. The most it will do is the equivalent of using a screen door to hold back a river.

However, the University is experiencing very tight financial times and — like the co-op — it knows there are no easy answers to getting money. Meanwhile, more and more demands are placed on it every day. It's a safe bet that no one envies Krause's or any other administrator's job.

Probably the most significant thing that happened Thursday is that now, for the first time, an important University figure has hinted that the co-op's days may be numbered. But realists would have to admit they have considered that possibility much earlier than now.

Although closure is a possibility, those concerned with quality child care should do all in their power to see that it doesn't. Including the administration and student leaders.

And until a solution is found, everyone at the University can only hope those at the co-op don't mind taking it one day at a time.

Changing holiday only generates confusion

Everyone who planned on an Easter holiday Monday is probably aware that the University decided to cancel it.

The fall 1987 schedule of classes, which contained a schedule for the 1987-88 school year, listed Monday as a University holiday. As late as mid-summer 1987 — the deadline for publication in the Union's KSU Programmer — the administration still planned to make April 4 a University holiday.

The change occurred since that time.

That is a "snap decision" by K-State administration standards, especially when one considers that planning for the current budget (fiscal year 1989) began in July 1986. And that preliminary planning for the 1991 fiscal year has already begun.

Then why the abrupt change?

Those who used the 1987 fall line schedule to plan spring activities must adjust their agendas. But according to the Registrar's Office, they were consulting an unofficial source.

Those who used the Union Programmer to plan their spring schedules would find that schedule is now in error. But that is not the Union's fault, as the calendar carries with it a disclaimer which reads, "Note: Academic calendar is 'unofficial'; consult the KSU General Catalog for official dates."

Thus, individuals wishing to plan ahead should only consult the general catalog, the publication which lists all official academic policies — including the official calendar.

However, those consulting the catalog would find it stating that classes will be cancelled on April 4 in observance of the Easter holiday. Furthermore, it says that classes will be cancelled next year for the Easter holiday.

So with most of the available sources listing April 4 (the Monday after Easter) as a University holiday, and even going on to say that K-State will have the holiday next year, why did the administration cancel it?

With most of its supporting information in error, the University should have honored the holiday, at least in 1987, to give people a chance to adjust to the new scheme.

Would one less day of school cause the University to lose accreditation?

It is not the administration's fault that the Board of Regents made a late decision when it mandated that all of its institutions must cancel classes on Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday. The celebration of King's contributions to this country was needed.

But why does the celebration of King's birthday need to take precedence over the celebration of Easter?

Would King have wanted that?

Perhaps before next year's calendars are made, the University and the regents should consider the ramifications of making quick decisions. And furthermore, give a little thought to what their priorities are, as well as the priorities of those they choose to honor.

Collegian Columnist

Two more days and you will have to shell out more cents to mail your letters. Yes, the U.S. Postal Service has decided to increase the cost of postage beginning April 3. So, do not procrastinate, but write to those long-forgotten friends tomorrow and save your hard-earned cents.

I have yet to find someone who does not like receiving letters. For millions of people around the globe, the sound of something dropping in their mailbox is the highlight of their day. An equal number of people enjoy the excitement of coming home and finding mail waiting to be opened. It is even more exciting if one happens to be returning from a trip.

Of course, what we all look forward to is personally addressed mail from nice people we know around the town, state, country or world. One has to be abnormal to look forward to junk mail. However, I know real people who like junk mail because they do not get any personal letters. I feel compassion for such people.

Dear Father in heaven, please stop all the junk which comes to me by post. I do not want to receive 11 identical, personally addressed invitations to apply for a credit card I do not want. Moreover, I do not want to receive 23 letters of the above-mentioned type stating that I have been especially selected as a man with sophisticated taste and determined personality and would therefore be likely to purchase some silly tote bag.

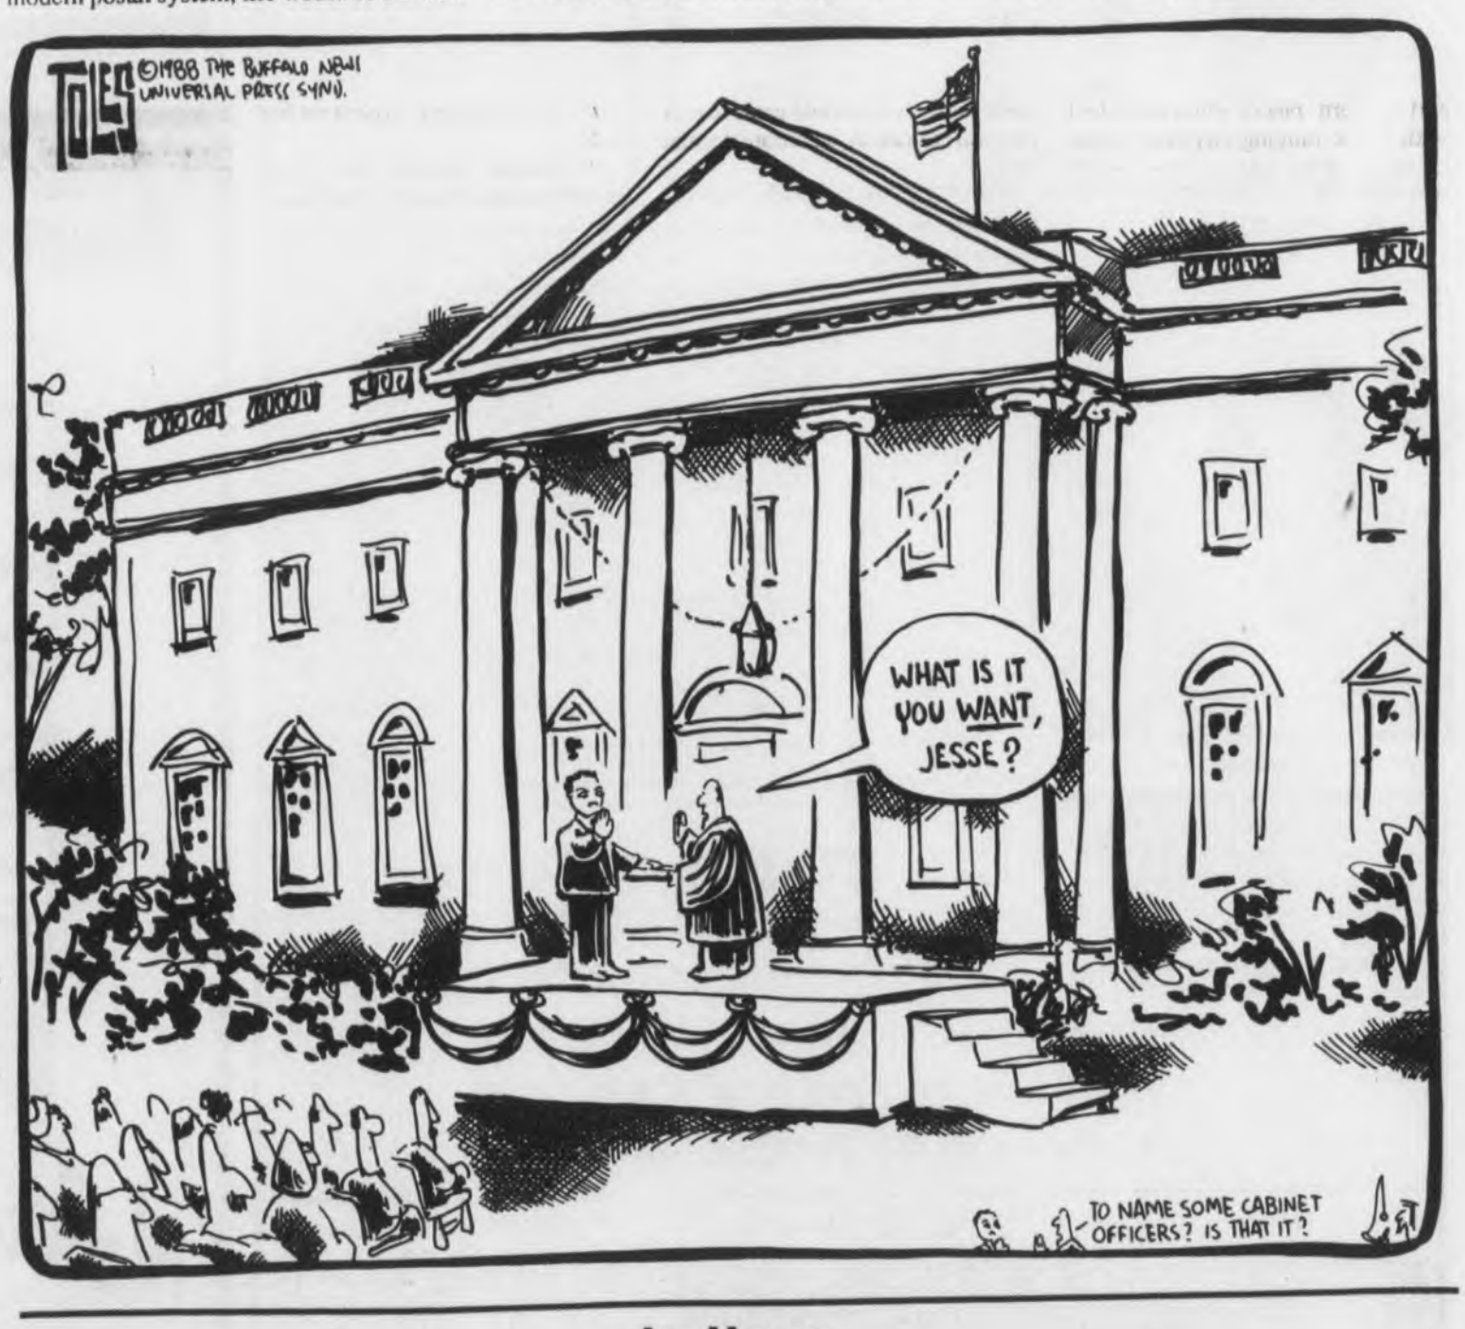
Oh, how I hate it when a Publisher's Clearing House notice says I have won $10 million. Ten million dollars, my foot!

And, I already know that the K Marts and the Wal-Marts and the Hypermarts have everything on sale all year-round. Sometimes I wonder if they ever sell anything at regular prices at all.

Though junk mail may be the bane of the modern postal system, life would be difficult without letters. Letters are used in countless ways, and I do not wish to enumerate these.

The pen is mightier than the sword, and no one can undermine the relevance of letters written to the editor of a newspaper. They serve as a way of exchanging ideas and opinions in a public forum, as well as addressing grievances. As a high school student in a large Third World city, I wrote more than 40 letters to the newspapers in a period of two years. It did pay to write. In one case, the postal authorities replaced a missing postbox (apparently stolen!) in our locality. In yet another case, the traffic police took steps to reduce congestion at a traffic junction near the local railway station.

There exist quite a few people who keep writing long, drawn-out letters to politicians, hoping they will be read. Just for the sake of these poor souls, I wish those letters were read, but more often than not it is a waste of time and effort. I know a lady who, after sending these letters, watches television to see if her words have had any effect on the people concerned. I can only say "God bless her."



I love to write letters. In fact, I love to write. Well, I love to talk, too. A sweet, young girl from Scotland once pointed out to me that I am someone who loves all forms of communication. Well, but that is not the point of contention right now. The problem is that there is no one to check on me if I get sidetracked while writing a column.

Being an avid letter writer, I obviously got involved in pen friendship. At one point in my life, my pen friends numbered in double digits. Whenever a pen friendship broke, it was due to the persistent refusal of the other party to reply. Currently, I have four pen pals. We have been pen pals for almost seven years, but we have never met. Nevertheless, these friends are closer to me than my personal friends. In our letters, we write everything to each other without any fears or inhibitions. This is possible because — unlike asking things personally — in pen friendship it takes about 15 days before you get an answer!

Besides offering an insight into your pen friend's personality, pen friendship is a great learning experience. You can learn a lot about his or her city, country and culture. It always amazes me to think that we can be such great pals without ever having met one another.

Can you imagine that, probably 25 years from now, letters will become obsolete? Electronic mail using computer networks is becoming more and more popular. I believe the day is not far off when it will replace the post office. I am afraid that it will remove the personal touch involved in letter writing. But, before we had letters delivered by letter carriers, they were delivered by pigeons; nevertheless, mankind adopted to this advancement.

With electronic mail, it would be easier to discard junk mail — possibly you would just have to type "d" for the mail you want deleted and never read. In fact, some ingenious computer firm could come with a software called "DELETE-JUNK" which would automatically delete all junk mail you receive!

Gratifying story

Editor,

I want to express my gratitude for your presenting, in a rather prominent position, a report of last Tuesday evening's lecture by Martin Lowry. In view of the fact that research in the humanities often receives little attention or esteem at this University, it is very gratifying that you and your reporter, Becky Ives, took some pains to inform the campus about the very important work of a researcher who is working at the cutting edge of a relatively new area of study.

Dead day trade

Editor,

In personal response to the front-page article in Thursday's Collegian which addressed the decision to "trade" the Easter holiday break for the day honoring Martin Luther King Jr., I am extremely disappointed in the decision. Insofar as the administrators opted to omit the Easter holiday as opposed to dead day (the day before spring finals begin), I am even more disappointed and offended.

In all due respect, King, and the memory he left behind is significant and appreciated. At any rate, my intent is not to belittle or downgrade Martin Luther King Jr. Day. Perhaps the Board of Regents' decision to honor him is warranted.

But let's look at the so-called "dead day" and assess whether or not it stands on the same threshold of importance as the King of Kings, Jesus Christ. Where is the honor due, anyway? Most students, if not all, realize that if they're not prepared for finals by the day before they actually begin, then an extra day isn't going to make a substantial difference in their performance the next day. Is that "dead day" really utilized for said purposes? Perhaps, but perhaps not.

On the other hand, I claim a great deal of significance and importance to a historic holiday, the results of which continue to be the focus of multitudes of changed lives even 1,988 years after the event! Jesus Christ, the son of God and more than just a historical or significant figure (to many of various skin colors), died, but then became alive to show us the kind of power behind his love for each of us!

His song, as King's, was and is "We shall overcome ...," a song only his disciples — past and present — can sing because he first overcame all the evil in the world on our behalf.

So, even though this year's policy and impending confusion have already been instituted, may I sincerely encourage the administrators making such decisions in the future to weigh the significance of each holiday we, as students, faculty or staff, are allowed.

Spring Dance offers variety

Judith Quirk, instructor of physical education, dance, and leisure studies and Jeffrey Groff, instructor of speech, perform in the ballet "Just Catch Me." Quirk choreographed two pieces, "Just Catch Me" and "Remembrance." They were part of Spring Dance '88, performed Thursday in McCain Auditorium. Practice for the dance began in January.

Spring Dance '88 offered a variety of dance styles and music to its audience this year. There were ballet, jazz and modern pieces choreographed with music ranging anywhere from classical to the blues. The concert was Wednesday and Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

Judith Quirk, instructor of physical education, dance and leisure studies, choreographed two pieces — "Just Catch Me" and "Remembrance."

"Just Catch Me" is a ballet duet piece featuring Quirk and Jeffrey Groff, instructor of speech.

"We got our other pieces worked out first and then I decided I wanted to do a duet," Quirk said. "You worry about the other dancers first. You think that as professionals you can wing it a little bit."

For "Remembrance," a ballet piece, Quirk said she tried for a different style than she used in her piece last semester, which was a sharp, Spanish-style ballet.

"I decided to go for a different feel from my last semester's piece so they would know what it was like to roll off their point shoes and dance as an ensemble," Quirk said. "They had to learn how to control through their point shoes. Some of them hadn't had much chance to perform in point shoes."

Quirk also stressed the importance of the dancers learning to dance together and watch each other.

"You have to be constantly aware of other dancers around you," she said. "That was a big part of the training for the piece."

The pieces "Kutana," "Journey Through," "Ribbons" and "How I Feel" were all choreographed by Luke Kahlich, associate professor of physical education, dance and leisure studies.

All of Kahlich's pieces, with the exception of "How I Feel," were choreographed this year. "How I feel" was choreographed in 1985 and was selected for the Gala Concert in the South Central Regional American College Dance Festival.

Dance practices for the concert began in January. "Kutana," a modern piece with heavy African qualities and themes, required 3 rehearsals a week or 6 to 8 hours per week, Kahlich said.

Another of Kahlich's modern pieces, "Ribbons," featured Rachael Warren, a guest performer in the concert.

Other pieces such as "Barre Blues" and "Seek and Find" were choreographed by dance students. Nancy Keyser-Shade, senior in dance, choreographed "Barre Blues" and Sharisse Horn, junior in dance, choreographed "Seek and Find."

"Seek and Find," a modern piece, was originally choreographed for a dance composition course as a final project. The piece was selected to be taken to Champaign, Ill., for the American College Dance Festival this year.

"It took me a couple of months to choreograph the piece," Horn said. "The theme of the piece signifies two people going through a relationship and whether they should be together. They end up together at the end."

Horn chose Tammy L. Francka, senior in dance, and Gregory Alan, member of the Kansas State Repertory Dance Company, to perform her piece.

"I thought Tammy and Greg would look good together for what I wanted," Horn said.

"Planes," choreographed by Groff, supported a cast of 20 dancers clad in brightly-colored T-shirts and black leotards. The piece was done in four parts and included a competitive duet between dancers Francka and Keyser-Shade.

Mary Martin, member of the Kansas State Repertory Dance Company, choreographed the modern piece titled "Idyll." Martin chose music by Lou Harrison for her piece. Dancers Groff, Keyser-Shade, Martin and Quirk performed the piece.

Before coming to K-State, Quirk danced for the Cincinnati Ballet Company and taught dance classes at the University of Cincinnati where she completed both her undergraduate and graduate degrees in dance.

Quirk didn't begin studying dance until the age of 17.

"I don't remember making the decision to do it," Quirk said. "When I did decide to do it, I worked hard."

Quirk recently published a book titled "The Stretching Book," along with Guy Smith, assistant student health physician and head of the Eriksen Sports Medicine Clinic at Lafene Student Health Center.

Quirk said the exercises in the book are for all types of athletes. It includes information on stretching and warm-up techniques.

Kim Kilpatrick, junior in pre-occupational therapy, performs a solo dance in "Kutana," choreographed by Luke Kahlich, associate professor of physical education, dance, and leisure studies.

Choreography, dancing make pieces successful

Color, dance style, choreography and music selection were excellently portrayed in Spring Dance '88.

Luke Kahlich's jazz piece "How I Feel" had quality choreography, which was obvious to the audience members who showed their appreciation with the loudest applause of the evening.

Dance Review

The dancers gave a commendable performance as well. The piece demanded not just good dancing, but the discipline to stay in character. Tammy L. Francka and Nancy Keyser-Shade were able to do this. Although they were hamming it up, they did it with style, which is necessary to make such a piece successful.

Judy Quirk's "Remembrance" also received a positive response. Quirk's ability to command the audience's attention fortunately distracted the audience from Jeffrey Groff's trouble with the lifts.

Choreography, dancing and lighting stood out in "Seek and Find." Gregory Alan and Francka gave an excellent performance as a duet.

The soft lighting and color change created the perfect atmosphere for the piece. Finally, Sharisse Horn's choreography is to be commended. The movement of the dancers in relation to each other was superb.

MTC flooded by lots of H20

By C.U. Later
Mall Reporter

The magnificent Manhattan Town Center was swept away Thursday when the Tuttle Creek Dam broke and water flooded the downtown area.

The mall is believed to be near Ogden, but at this point ... officials just don't know.

The dam crumbled to pieces, officials said, when an "incredibly large" school of piranha-like fish — referred to as glomchers — charged the dam simultaneously.

Officials are unsure of the school's motive, but they believe the ferocious fish could have been scheming to break themselves out of Tuttle for months. Conditions at the lake are said to have deteriorated rapidly ever since a school of notorious "preppy goldfish" were introduced to the water. Sources say that the rapid increase in BMW and Audi exhaust has clouded the water.

Meanwhile, back at the mall.... The dedicated shoppers, who chose to continue browsing even after the water was spotted rushing toward them in the distance, have shopped to their watery graves.

Some shoppers made it to nearby telephone poles and clung to them for hours as the tide tugged on their clothing until many were left naked.

Rescue teams took hours to deliver the half-drowned victims to safety, especially after discovering many of them were missing their wardrobes.

To the water-logged shoppers' dismay, a majority of the glomchers made their way to the mall and slowly began to nibble away at the victims' extremities.

One rescuer recalled the nasty scene: "Well, ya know, I was fixin' to get this lady to the rescue ship safely when all the sudden this oversized guppie attached to her toe and just wouldn't let go for the life of me. I had to holler clear over to the other side of the ship to get some help."

The only known survivors at the mall were the amphibians in Petland.

A car desperatly awaits its owner who had been shopping in the the mall before the dam broke. The owner, the car later found out, had been swept downstream with all of the mall's contents.

Co. probes home delivery of condoms

By U.R. Sleazy
Health Reporter

Express delivery has never been so good, cheap or appropriate.

All Hours, a home condom delivery service, is owned by Duit Rubber, senior in family planning. Rubber started the company — whose slogan is "Ohhhhh the Consequences" — as a class project two years ago.

"It was supposed to teach us about how things work in the real world," Rubber said. "I got an A on the project, but flunked the class. My girlfriend got knocked up — that kind of ruined it for me."

Despite his academic failings, Rubber was selected as the fifth most powerful entrepreneur by Fortune 500 last month.

"Yeah, I suppose it was an honor. But I'd rather have more money than a plaque. I've been having quite a few court battles lately," Rubber said.

All Hours recently won a lawsuit based on charges of the company selling holy condoms.

"Condoms? Holy? Hardly. It's not our fault people don't buy the right sizes. Think about it. It's like putting Dolly Parton in a training bra," he said.

Rubber said the condoms are available in three sizes: small, medium and oh my gawd. The oh my gawd size comes with analgesic cream and a shoe horn.

In addition, the company is expected to offer reusable condoms by this summer. Rubber said they are dishwasher safe, but only if placed on the top rack. The company takes no responsibility for misplaced condoms, he said.

The company grossed more than $1.2 million in its last quarter of business. Much of that profit, Rubber said, can be attributed to their increased staff over the noon hour and the removal of their delivery charge.

"You can't believe how many orders we get over the lunch hour. I don't quite understand why they're so demanding. That's the roughest time of the day. They always want it quick," Rubber said.

Despite the difficult customers, Rubber is planning to expand — so to speak — his business this summer.

"Right now we're looking at Ogden and Junction City. You know — places with class and dire need," he said.

Following attacks, frisky Toughy Wefald called campus terror

By Ig Norant
Administration Muckraker

President Jon Wefald's dog, Toughy, was finally found running with the squirrels in a weeping willow tree outside Wefald's home Thursday.

The tree has been Toughy's hideout for the past two months between his campus stalks for female students.

After Toughy's capture, he was tested positive for rabies and has allegedly been spreading the disease by violently attacking female students on campus since Christmas break.

The number of students bitten by Toughy's rabies-infested jaws is unknown, but is estimated at 263 — give or take two.

Ruth Ann Wefald said she was unaware of Toughy's condition because the dog didn't exhibit the usual symptoms signaling rabies.

"When I found Toughy he wasn't foaming at the mouth or anything gross like that," Mrs. Wefald said. "All that nutritious Sludge-brand dog food must be working miracles in that poor puppy's system."

Students who think they may have been a Toughy victim should go to Lafene Student Health Center as soon as possible to get tested for contamination. Anyone finding it difficult to attend classes or study for crucial exams should consider themselves possible victims and proceed to Lafene immediately.

One victim, who wants to remain anonymous, described the attack with tears in her eyes.

"It was a nightmare," she said. "I was walking peacefully to my studio in Seaton when out of nowhere a deranged, vicious beast flew out of the sky and gnawed at my neck. Needless to say, my art project was ruined and I flunked. It was scarier than 'Nightmare on Elm Street.'"

Toughy has been imprisoned in the Ogden City Jail and will be put to sleep Monday, sources said. Riley County Jail officials refused to accept Toughy, saying it would be too difficult for the staff to detain the hideous canine.

In case Toughy escapes, authorities advise to steer clear of the weeping willows near Wefald's home. The dog is described as an AKA-registered Heinz 57 mongrel with abnormally large, sharp teeth. In addition, Toughy has a large, fan-like tail that allows him to fly short distances at incredibly high rates of speed from the top of the weeping willows. The tail gives him a striking resemblance to a mangy Kansas peacock.

Authorities believe Toughy is a cross between a pit bull and a flying squirrel, although officials in the Veterinary Medicine Center have denied the possibility of such a cross-breeding.

Mrs. Wefald has organized a protest to keep the "innocent dear" alive to be treated at the Betty Ford Rehabilitation Center.

Van Zile Hall home of KSU art museum

By M. Bezzle
Improprieties Reporter

In a shocking announcement Thursday, the Campus Committee on the Preservation of Worthless and Dilapidated Buildings announced that Van Zile Hall, which is currently standing vacant, will be the new home of the Campus Art Museum.

To be called Hang It Here, the museum will house the University's extensive art collection, including impressive works by freshmen students in the Explore Crayon Sketching course. The announcement drew rave reviews from all over campus, particularly among the cultured community.

"This is a wonderful, lovely day for all of us," sniffed Daff Odill, local art aficionado. "Now if only we can plug up those damned leaking pipes."

Odill is referring, of course, to the renovation that will need to be done before the museum is opened next weekend. Included in that renovation will be the installation of floors, walls, plumbing, windows, a foundation and a ceiling.

"We're not talking anything too extensive here," said Gloss Itover, head of the University's maintenance department. "Just some minor sprucing up."

Although most view the new museum as oh-so-pleasing, some are upset, including members of a campus religious cult who had invaded Van Zile upon its closure several years ago.

"People are going to pay for this!" said Les Geteven, graduate student in the occult and member of the Satan R Us cult. Geteven said he will have no place to live now that oil paintings have run him out.

"Grrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrr," he said.

Following three intense days of consideration, a campus task force has given the go-ahead for construction of a $21 million, four-story parking garage that will accommodate about 50 cars.

"There's only one small drawback," said Getta Clue, freshman in community planning and task force chairman. "It'll be kind of a hike for students who want to use it."

In this case, "kind of a hike" will be about 10 miles from campus. The garage will be located atop K-Hill east of Manhattan.

"Hey, there'll be a hell of a view and maybe these slobs will lose a couple of pounds," said N. Sen Sitive, task force member and fifth-year senior undecided. "We think it's a beautemous site." Sitive said the K-Hill location was the best the task force had to consider.

"We coulda swung a tasty little piece of land out by Wamego, but we were pretty concerned about the fault line," he said, adding that earthquake insurance is too expensive for the University to consider.

"This way, the worst that can happen to the K-Hill Garage is for a tornado to sweep it up — and we'll have no problem getting insurance for that," Sitive said.

K-State officials expressed reservation Thursday at the task force's recommendation.

"I ... I just don't know," said associate assistant to the vice president's secretary Finda Reeljobb, who is also a practicing psychic. "I mean like, man, I've been getting some real bad vibes about this place. This hill has the holy (expletive deleted) scared out of me."

Local archaeologist Berreed Bones confirmed late Thursday that the K-Hill was an ancient Indian burial ground thousands of years ago.

"I can really see some dude's Subaru getting possessed rather quickly," Reeljobb said between drags of his cigarette. He was unsure how domestic autos would fare.

Students queried Thursday had mixed reaction to the parking garage.

"I can maybe see some inconvenience if I need to go to my car between classes," said Putme Outof-Mymisery, sophomore in gardening techniques. "But all in all I'll just be glad to get a parking space. At least it will be better than parking in D1-W."

But Ijust Wannabich, junior in hand-to-hand combat, said he's "damn tired" just thinking of the walk to campus.

"This really sucks out loud," he said. "I don't even want to think about it. I really don't. Get out of my life."

S. Sen. concludes five days of boring, round-the-clock debate last night

By Reporter's Name
Staff Title

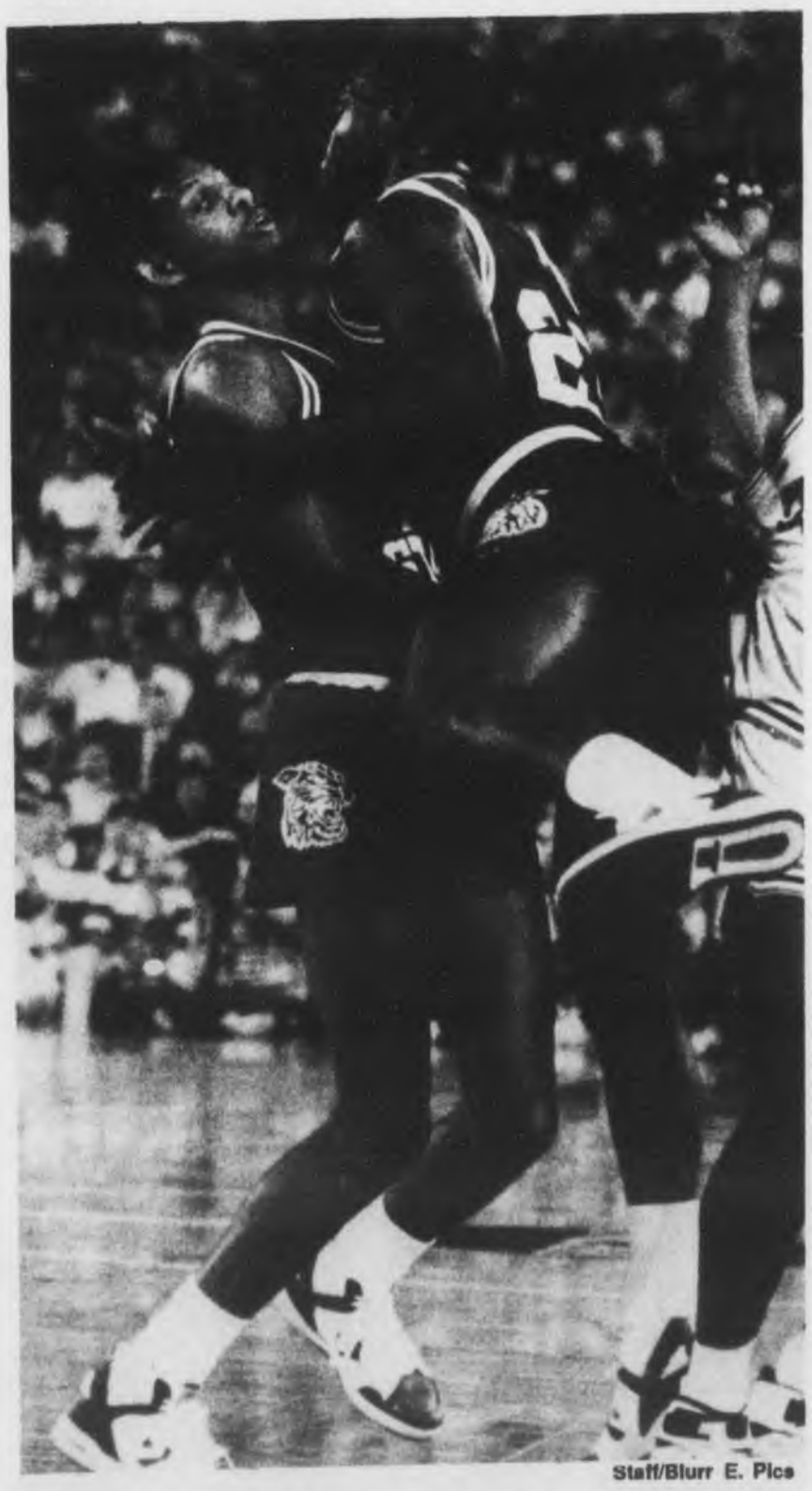
Student Senators concluded five days of round-the-clock debate at 3 a.m. today by approving a $60 per semester increase in student fees in an effort to keep men's head basketball Coach Lon Kruger at K-State following reports in the national media that Kruger was a top contender for the head coaching job at the Billville (Okla.) University.

The 27 for, 13 against roll call vote passed a proposal which will net Kruger $1,020,000 per semester.

"When (President Jon) Wefald got down on his knees, with tears in his eyes and begged us to please, please approve the bill, well that had me," said Senator Sally Simple, sophomore in social studies.

Wefald's dramatic appeal came at 1:21 a.m. today when the president appeared before senators in the Big Eight room of the K-State Union.

"Get the alumni off my back!" Wefald screamed as he entered the room. "They've been calling me for the past week threatening to give their money to Fort Hays if I don't keep Kruger here."



Unshaven and with his glasses falling from his face, Wefald fell to his knees and said, "I'm begging ... please, please approve this bill." Wefald then collapsed in a sobbing heap before the senators.

Following his collapse, Wefald was taken from the room by Vice President for Institutional Advancement Robert Krause, Athletic Director Larry Travis and Presidential Assistant Charles Reagan and is said to resting comfortably under heavy sedation.

Contacted at home shortly after the vote, Kruger said, "Jeez, I'm trying to sleep. Can't you people leave me alone for one minute? K-State is such a wonderful place. Do I have to kiss another pig?"

Kruger also complained about the approximately 150 students who have camped out in front of his house since the first reports surfaced two weeks ago about his possible departure.

Oh, Mitch! Oh, Will!

Oh, those raging milk bulls!

By Rowdy Yates
Mistake Reporter

Members of the K-State TV Western and Other Basically Bad Entertainment Club, as well as Gil Favor, dean of the College of Plants and Animals, were called from their beds around 11:45 Thursday evening after approximately 350 milk cows stormed a pasture fence and stampeded through the middle of campus, causing one injury.

William "Pecos Bill" Bunyan, captain of the K-State Police, said the police department was first notified of the breakout by an anonymous phone caller at 10:39 p.m.

"The first indication of the problem came from an hysterical woman saying her sex therapy lab final had been interrupted in the middle of nowhere by this herd of 'things'," Bunyan said. "She wouldn't leave her name or where she was, but a unit cruising near the dairy complex verified the herd's breakout."

Bunyan said that after a brief meeting in which the police decided they were unequipped to deal with apparent anarchy, they decided to contact the TV Western and Other Basically Bad Entertainment Club.

"We basically felt they were more prepared psychologically to deal with this unknown criminal element," Bunyan said.

Headed for Aggieville, the combined effort of the police department and the TV Western and Basically Bad Entertainment Club failed to hinder the storming hoard at the corner of Lover's Lane and Mid-Campus Drive. Reports on the progress of the anarchists had earlier indicated that the herd was being led by a two-bit, tough-old-broad matriarch of a milk cow only known as "Old Bag" to the employees of the dairy complex.

"Our intent was to stop Old Bag at the intersection and turn her back to the direction she came from, and hope the herd would follow her that way as well," Couch P. Tato, president of the TV Western and Other Basically Bad Entertainment Club, said.

"It should have worked," Tato said, trying desperately to defend his actions later. "According to everything we saw on TV, it should have worked."

But, tragically, it didn't. According to police reports the herd's momentum was slowed only momentarily, but Old Bag turned left, into a roadblock set up on Petticoat Lane where Dean Favor was shouting encouragements through a bull-horn. Favor started to run, but then realized he would be leading Old Bag and the herd straight across the President's lawn.

After a brief hesitation, he turned and grabbed the cow by the horns and tried to wrestle her to a stop. It was a valiant, but failed effort. Favor hit the mat in seven seconds flat, semi-conscious, and with the letters "OB" carved on his chest.

"What a brave man," Bunyan said with tears in his eyes after the tragedy. "Our prayers are with him in his recovery."

Badly shaken, bruised and continually muttering, "What a woman!!!" Favor was rushed to Humana Hospital, and today is reported in fair and sane condition.

After stopping to accept the gold medal and gracious applause of her pasture mates, Old Bag, smashed through the roadblock and drove on into Aggieville, only to stop abruptly at the Gay Bull Stable and Saloon, where an all-male review had filled the establishment for the evening's entertainment.

The violence of the herd turned into bawdiness as the patrons were shoved aside and out into the street. To the amazement of police afterwards, the show seemed to distract and appease the herd so that they could sneak up and put hock-cuffs on Old Bag, leading her and the herd peacefully away from the establishment.

"I came down here to party with my sorority sisters and this happened," said Missi Kitty, freshman in fashion marketing and member of the Oh Oh Oh sorority. "It was awful. they were doing such disgusting things. Their tongues kept whipping up into their noses and I was afraid to drink my beer.

"I hate to admit it, but I was scared for my life," she said.

No one was hurt, but Old Bag was shot at dawn this morning and will be made into Alpo. After a speedy trial, the rest of the herd has been put on parole.

Prez R -makes new plans

Pc ... writer

...GTON — Lame-duck President Ronald Reagan has announced his first plans for when he leaves office.

White House staffers said they thought his transition from public to private life would be a quick one when they tried to squelch his plans for inauguration.

"I guess Ron wanted to watch the new president get sworn in then make a brief statement, like, 'It's Miller time!'" said a White House source, who might be a K-State grad, demanding anonymity. "We're still trying to talk him out of it. After all that's a lot of words for him to remember without prompting."

Reagan is also planning to keep in the public spotlight though, even if he is a private citizen once again.

NBC sources say the soon-to-be former-Prez will host "Saturday Night Live."

Church Lady sins with Swaggart

By Jimntammy Bakker
Religion/Sex Editor

NEW YORK — The Church Lady, that Satan-spewing fountain of misinformation, has admitted to sleeping with preacher Jimmy Swaggart and agreeing to accept a bribe in order to keep quiet about her indiscretion.

In a statement released Thursday, the television cult heroine admitted that she, and not "a filthy prostitute with Satanic purposes on a mission to excite Swaggart's bulbous region," was the woman Swaggart paid to perform various sexual acts earlier this year.

The statement also said that Swaggart had promised to pay for several new pair of support hose for his mistress and a new dance floor for the set on which The Church Lady's television program, "Church Chat," is taped if his "partner in obvious sexual glee" were to keep quiet about the incident.

When confronted with the allegations outside an unemployment office in Baton Rouge, La., Swaggart said: "That brazen hussy. I ought to take those support hose and strangle the wench with them."

Swaggart appeared on "Church Chat" just over a month ago on an episode that included an interview with Republican presidential candidate Pat Robertson, and was grilled by the "hostess with the mostess" about the incident.

Throughout the interview, neither Swaggart nor The Church Lady made any indication that the incident might have involved the pair, now being dubbed "the Gary and Donna of the church world."

The Church Lady, contacted at her home in a suburb of Baton Rouge called Sinville, said that her actions had been provoked by one force and one force alone.

"Who could have caused such an obviously unladylike act on the part of the most faithful of women in the religious world?" she asked the group of reporters gathered outside her door. "I'll tell you who it was. It was the Prince of Darkness, that dastardly doer of evil....Saaatan!"

When the echo of the final word of her statement had died down, The Church Lady was told that Swaggart had referred to her as a "wench."

Her simple response: "Now isn't that special."

The revelation and the subsequent cancellation of The Church Lady's television program leaves the world of religious television without a standard bearer. Swaggart had the largest religious TV audience in the world and The Church Lady dominated late-night religious TV.

It was announced late Thursday that Dr. Ruth Westheimer and Robin Leach would be hosting a new religious talk show titled "Lifestyles of the Sexually Promiscuous Televangelists" that would replace "Church Chat" in the late-night time slot.

RC Commies decide to move dump here

By Stu Pidd
Waste/Catastrophe Editor

Riley County Commissioners late last night signed a multi-faced, multi-faceted agreement with K-State officials to move the Riley County Landfill to University property.

The selected site will be Memorial Stadium, according to uninformed anonymous sources close to the commissioners.

In an off-the-record interview after the meeting, County Commission Chairman Ohso Nasty said he was relieved the landfill was finding a new home after being shut down by the State Department of Health because some disgusting chemicals that escaped from the landfill had begun eating up people's houses in the vicinity.

"This is so exciting," said Nasty, requesting anonymity. "Now we probably won't even have to go to court. Since the landfill is being relocated, it should get these damned people out here off our backs."

A couple of pretty decent sources say K-State will be bringing in I.B. Contaminated, former manager of Love Canal, to take over the new dump.

When contacted at 3 a.m. early this morning, Contaminated confirmed the tip, saying he is full of exciting and innovating ideas for the new KSU-Fill.

"First of all, to prevent leakage, we're gonna put down two layers of plastic on the ground," he said. "Then we'll put this plastic dome over the top so when we burn the stuff, we ain't gonna be dangering nobody's lives."

University officials seemed elated about the new contract.

"All I can say is, 'Wow'!" said Sun O. Beach, K-State nuclear waste director. "This is gonna bring so much damned business to campus that we might be able to afford liability insurance."

When asked what measures will be taken to move the landfill from its present location south of town, Beach said he had it all figured out.

"It wouldn't bother me so much if they just sat out there," Kruger said. "It's the way they keep staring at me when I go to the car. They don't say much, they just stare. And whisper."

Kruger also complained about the campers' repeated use of the bathrooms in his house.

"It's hell getting into the shower in the morning," Kruger said.

Kruger said the Task Force on Overcrowding in the Kruger Home Bathrooms appointed by Student Body President Anderson Hall did little to alleviate the problem.

"What a bunch of clowns," Kruger said.

"To keep truck traffic down to a minimum, we'll be offering $5 per carload to every student who wants to haul in some stuff," he said.

But not everybody was happy about the announcement.

"I think it sucks," said current landfill manager Lacka Dasikle, who now finds himself out of a job. "Those jerks will pay for their indiscretions."

Switzer is coming

By I.P. Freeley

The latest installment of "Musical Coaching Changes" at K-State came to a close today as a crack reporting squad closed a two-minute investigation and confirmed the rumor that University of Oklahoma football coach Barry Switzer will leave Norman for the friendly confines of Manhattan.

Switzer will be an assistant to head coach Stan Parrish, who will enter his third year at K-State next season.

The rumor was confirmed when Switzer's babysitter was contacted by the Mistake staff.

"Yup, it's true," said the sitter, who wished to remain anonymous. "When I came in to sit with his three brat kids tonight, they told me this is probably the last time I'll have to watch those little demons.

"Shoot, I'm relieved."

When confronted with his sitter's statement, Switzer also confirmed the deal.

"To be quite honest with you, I'm damn sick and tired of national championships, Orange Bowls and all the media vultures hounding my teams all the time. I'm looking forward to coaching on a team that will play in front of about 300 people. I'm sick of the limelight," Switzer said.

Parrish said Switzer — who has coached for 14 years and has an overall record of 148-26-4 — will be in charge of waterboys, towels and making sure athletic supporters are washed in non-irritating detergent.

"It will take awhile for Barry to fit in up here," Parrish said.

"We're not really sure if he's a proven coach," Parrish added. "With all the money the Sooner alumni pours into that football program, that can buy a lot of officials and scorekeepers."

Switzer is expected to arrive at KSU Stadium at least two days prior to the opening of fall practices.

Parrish said there was no truth to the additional rumors that the official school fight song will be changed to "Boomer Sooner," or that Switzer will be chained to a fence at KSU Stadium when the Wildcats play at OU next fall.

A proposed bill would require all restaurants in Kansas to prohibit smoking by customers in at least 50 percent of the seating.

Restaurateurs contest smoking bill

Legislation may restrict reserved smoking areas

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — Opponents of a bill that would require Kansas restaurants to provide at least half their seating for non-smokers told lawmakers the proposal is discriminatory, while supporters say it would protect patrons from the habits of others.

George Puckett, representing the Kansas Restaurant Association, told the Senate Public Health and Welfare Committee that restaurant owners have been singled out as an example regarding the public smoking issue.

The bill would require all restaurants to prohibit smoking by customers in at least 50 percent of the seating.

"Laws are not capable of determining the individual needs of the customers in a restaurant at any given meal," Puckett said. "Sometimes more than 50 percent is needed for non-smokers, which the bill would allow. Other times less than 50 percent is needed, which the bill does not allow."

He also told the committee the bill could drive some restaurants out of business.

Steve Man, owner of Hunam Restaurant and Hunam Express, agrees.

"I think it should be left up to the owner," he said. "They know the business they do, the customers they have. They know the percentage of space that should be made smoking or non-smoking."

But Dave Pomeroy, who represents Kansans for Non-Smokers' Rights, said the provision would protect people from so-called passive smoking, which is the inhalation of smoke from another's cigarette.

"Kansans who have chosen not to smoke should be free not to do so," he said.

The restaurant owners have not responded to the demands of non-smokers, he added.

"For some unknown reason the restaurant industry in Kansas has opposed any mandatory smoking regulations," Pomeroy said. "The restaurant industry has continued to ignore the wishes of the majority of Kansans who do not smoke."

Gary Hulett, representing the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said the department supports the bill.

"It would help protect the non-smoker from the involuntary health consequences of exposure to tobacco smoke in public places," he said.

The Rev. Richard Taylor, a lobbyist for the Kansas Life at Its Best, a temperance group, played a tape recording of himself before one of his vocal chords was removed because of cancer to show committee members the contrast in his voice.

He attributed the loss of one of his vocal chords to second-hand smoke.

"I think I have a right to two vocal chords more than people have a right to smoke in restaurants," Taylor said.

Some committee members, however, were skeptical that the bill would control the problem.

"Anytime we try to do something about anything, we just make it worse, expecially smoking," said Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita.

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, said he thinks seating for smokers and non-smokers should be up to the discretion of the restaurant owner.

"I don't think we need this to control smoking," he said.

"I think I'd have some problems if I were a restaurant owner if they started telling me what kind of customers I can have," said Sen. James Francisco, D-Mulvane.

Jim Burnett of Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon believes he would have a problem dividing his establishment into smoking and non-smoking areas.

"It wouldn't really be feasible to make the place 50-50, smoking and non-smoking," Burnett said. "I don't think anybody would pay attention to it."

Brent Leland, manager of the Hardee's Restaurant in Aggieville, said his restaurant was already divided evenly between non-smoking and smoking.

"In our case it would be no problem," Leland said. "We're already 50-50 since our building was built that way."

Also, the committee, without discussion, endorsed a bill that would allow the Department of Health and Environment to develop rules to allow day-care centers for children to take in adults.

The bill would provide programs for older adults and youngsters.

Richmond scores 12 for West

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Notre Dame's David Rivers scored eight points and handed out nine assists Thursday night to earn Most Valuable Player honors as the East beat the West 97-91 in the NABC East-West All-America Game.

Rivers, a 6-foot guard, had a number of spectacular passes to finish off fast breaks as the East, coached by Jim Boeheim of Syracuse, took its largest lead of the game at 85-76 with 5:08 to play on a reverse by Georgia's Willie Anderson, who led the East with 17 points.

The West, coached by Jerry Tarkanian of Nevada-Las Vegas, closed within 90-89 on a dunk by Jeff Chatman of Brigham Young with 2:08 remaining, but a jumper by Randolph Keys of Southern Mississippi and a drive by Anderson clinched the victory for the East in the 25th anniversary of the all-star game played each year during the Final Four by seniors.

Byron Larkin of Xavier, Ohio added 15 for the East, while Shelton Jones of St. John's and Keys had 11 each and Kentucky's Winston Bennett added 10.

Michael Williams of Baylor and Fennis Dembo of Wyoming led the West with 13 points each followed by Mitch Richmond of K-State, who scored all 12 of his points in the second half. Gerald Paddio of Nevada-Las Vegas, Jerry Johnson of Florida Southern and Jeff Grayer of Iowa State each added 10.

Wildcats rally, beat Emporia State

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State's baseball team used a four-run rally throughout the final four innings to come from behind and take a 5-4 victory over Emporia State University Thursday at Frank Myers Field.

A sacrifice fly by designated hitter Bill Barnard in the bottom of the ninth that scored Sean Collins from third base capped off the four-run spurt by the Wildcats.

The ninth inning rally began with one out as Collins singled and stole second base. He continued over to third on Jeff Hulse's single, which was then followed by Barnard's sacrifice.

The winning pitcher for the Wildcats, 19-6, was Steve Scoville, who threw a perfect final two innings to run his record to 2-0.

Even though K-State added another victory to one of its best records ever, Coach Mike Clark was not totally satisfied with his team's play.

"We did some things that I didn't like seeing," he said. "We're not as far along as we were last year, and that could hurt us.

"Our record shows that we're winning, but we need to play like that when we start playing the Oklahoma States, Oklahomas, the Nebraskas and the other Top 20 schools."

K-State used seven pitchers on the day in preparation for the opening of Big Eight Conference play this weekend in Stillwater, Okla., against Oklahoma State, the top-ranked team in the country. The 'Cats will play single games today and Sunday, and will have a double-header with the Cowboys Saturday.

"We didn't want to throw anybody too hard today," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "We've got a big series this weekend. We just wanted everybody rested and ready to play."

Scott Spangenberg led the Wildcats' attack with three hits and one run batted in.

Emporia State opened the game with a run in the first inning and proceeded to increase that lead to 4-1 in the top half of the fourth. With a strong wind blowing in from right field, the Wildcats then scored the game's final four runs.

For Emporia State, 17-8, Jeff Hoover collected two hits and Mike Carlson had a double and two runs batted in. The losing pitcher for the Hornets was Alex Flores.

"Emporia is a good ballclub and they have a good program," Clark said.

Season of parity will soon be resolved

Atmosphere reunion-like for Final Four

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The ultimate season of parity comes down to a Final Four featuring three high-ranked teams, a local favorite and familiar faces.

Almost a reunion, if you will, complete with rematches and chances to capture championships missed.

All but one of the coaches have been here before and only one school is making its first appearance.

For the second straight year there are two teams from the same conference in the Final Four but unlike Syracuse and Providence of the Big East last year, Kansas and Oklahoma of the Big Eight are not meeting each other in the semifinals.

There really isn't much different about this Final Four than any of the previous 49, but the semifinals still present some interesting matchups. When Duke and Kansas start things off Saturday afternoon, it will be a rematch from the 1986 Final Four and one from earlier this season.

The teams are quite different from those that met in Dallas two years ago with Kansas' Danny Manning the only starter back from either team.

Manning, a two-time All-American, was in foul trouble quickly that game and finished with nine points on 2-of-9 shooting in 23 minutes as the Jayhawks fell 71-67. Current starter Chris Piper saw 13 minutes and scored two points.

Three members of this year's Duke team played in that game, led by Danny Ferry, who scored eight points in 15 minutes. Billy King and Kevin Strickland played nine and four minutes, respectively, and did not score.

Earlier this season, Duke, 28-6, beat Kansas, 25-11, 74-70 in overtime at Kansas.

Manning had 31 points as the Blue Devils snapped a five-game Kansas winning streak. Kansas led by six points in the overtime, but Duke outscored Kansas 13-3 over the final three minutes, six coming from guard Quin Snyder, who led the fifth-ranked Blue Devils with 21 points.

"We were in position to win that game," Manning said. "We have improved since than, but so has Duke."

Duke is considered an excellent defensive team and King is the man usually assigned to the opponent's top player. During the East Regional final against Temple, he held the nation's leading freshman scorer, Mark Macon, to a 6-of-29 performance.

"We've played man-to-man defense all year, but we'll need a lot of help," Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski said.

Royals opt to keep Quiz, send Thurman back to Omaha

By The Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. — Dan Quisenberry, who has struggled through the past two seasons, was told Thursday that he had won back his job as the Kansas City Royals stopper.

The Royals decided to keep both Gene Garber and Quisenberry, who had just eight saves as he fell into disuse last season. Jerry Don Gleaton was sent down to the Royals' Class AAA club at Omaha as Manager John Wathan decided to break camp with a nine-man staff.

"I told Quisenberry today that he's going to have the opportunity to close a lot of ballgames," Wathan said. "We feel that we need him, and he's the guy who can do it for us. He was very, very good for a lot of years. There's no reason that, with work, he can't be good again."

Later Thursday, the Royals got down to the 24-man limit by sending outfielder Gary Thurman to the Omaha. Thurman had come to camp with a good chance to become the leftfielder, but slumped badly at the plate and was beaten out by Bo Jackson.

Quisenberry had 161 saves from 1982-85, leading the league each of the four years. He had 45 saves in 1983 and 44 in 1984.

Quisenberry pitched just 49 innings last year, the lowest number of innings in his career. He had 12 saves the year before in 81 innings.

Both Quisenberry and Garber had pitched well during spring, and the Royals also had financial considerations on their mind.

Quisenberry has a guaranteed lifetime contract that includes a complicated real estate deal with Royals co-owner Avron Fogelman. Kansas City was required to pay Garber his full 1988 salary of $500,000 unless he was waived by Tuesday.

Garber, acquired from the Atlanta Braves last August, had a 1.00 earned run average in 18 innings going into a game Thursday.

Quisenberry, who suffered from back spasms early in the spring and was hit hard in his first outing, had a 3.86 earned run average in 16 1-3 innings. He gave up 17 hits and seven earned runs.

Sports Briefly

Track team to duel with NU

K-State's track and field men's and women's squads get the 1988 outdoor track season out of the blocks this weekend as they open the season in Lincoln, Neb. The Wildcats will be competing in a double dual with the University of Nebraska South Dakota State.

The meet is scheduled to start at 11 a.m. Saturday with field events. Running events will begin at 12:30 p.m. at the Ed Weir Outdoor Track.

K-State coach John Capriotti will be taking about 30-40 athletes to the opening meet of the season.

"It is our first outdoor meet," he said. "I've never been big on scored meets. We're going to compete hard and see what happens. We're looking for performances and not worried about the score until we get to the Big Eight meet."

The Wildcats' next action will be at the KSU-Pepsi Open in Manhattan April 9.

Netters to battle Missouri

K-State's women's tennis team will open the Big Eight Conference portion of its 1988 spring schedule Saturday when it meets Missouri in a 10 a.m. dual at the Washburn Complex tennis courts.

K-State enters league play with a 5-4 dual match record and has not been in competitive action since March 16 when the 'Cats finished play during a trip to Florida.

The Missouri match begins a hectic schedule for the squad in the month of April which will conclude with the Big Eight championships April 28-29 in Lake of the Ozarks, Mo.

"We will play seven duals and be involved in two days of tournament action over a month's period," Coach Steve Bietau said. "It is important for us to play consistently throughout the month. I am anxious for us to get started.

"Although Missouri is one of the weaker teams in the conference, it is very improved. We need to get off to a good start, not take them lightly and play consistenlty throughout the lineup."

Leading the individual performances in singles play thus far for K-State has been freshman Miste Bitner at the No. 6 slot with a 4-1 mark. Another freshman, Thresa Burcham, has combined for a 6-2 record in Nos. 4-6 singles action.

The Burcham-Bitner combination at No. 3 doubles has clicked for a 7-4 record. Marijke Nel and Sigrid Ivarsson have teamed up for a 5-1 mark at No. 2 doubles.

K-Staters split on Final Four victor

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Though Arizona and Duke are favorites to play in the NCAA's national championship game Monday night at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., those who play for, coach or broadcast K-State basketball are split on the outcome of Saturday's Final Four.

"Both are interesting matchups," K-State coach Lon Kruger said.

Kansas, 25-11, meets Duke, 28-6, in the first of two Final Four matchups. Oklahoma, 34-3, faces Arizona, 35-2, in the other semifinal.

"I think the winner of the Oklahoma-Arizona game might win it all, but nobody predicted Kansas to make it that far so you've got to watch out for them as well," said junior guard and forward Carlos Diggins.

"I don't know what to say about (KU-Duke)," Henson said. "They went into overtime the first one and KU is playing with more confidence now than they were then. With the 'home-court advantage,' I'd have to pick Kansas."

With Kemper just about 35 miles from the University of Kansas campus, many Jayhawk followers are hoping for a home-court advantage. But since KU was given only about 1,650 tickets to sell, that may not be the case.

"Once you get to the Final Four, it's not like the Kansas people can buy up extra tickets," Duke coach Mike Kryzewski said.

"I expect the atmosphere in Kemper Arena to be a lot better for Duke than it was in Allen Field House. They have a terrific following there, but all that is irrelevant now."

K-State's assistant sports information director Kenny Mossman, who also does color analysis for WIBW radio during K-State games, said KU would win — but the "home-court advantage" won't be a factor.

"I think everybody has plenty of incentive this time of year, but I think Kansas has a little more incentive because of the earlier losses to Duke," Mossman said.

Duke slipped past the 'Hawks, 74-70, in overtime earlier this season at Allen Field House. Duke also defeated KU, 92-86, in the semifinals of the 1985 National Invitational Tournament. And the following March came the 71-67 loss to Duke in the semifinals of the NCAA tournament at Dallas.

Mossman said the OU-Arizona matchup is a "tough one" to call.

"But I think Arizona will win because maybe they are a little more organized in their game plan. OU has had a great season, but I think Arizona has the athletes to match up with OU," Mossman said.

"I still say Oklahoma is the best team in the country," Kruger said.

"I thought OU was looking good all year, but after listening to the comentators about Arizona (it seems like Arizona) doesn't turn the ball over very much. That's going to make it tougher on OU," Henson said.

"If they try to run with OU, I'll pick OU by 13. If they try to play regular basketball, I couldn't pick either team."

Though Arizona averages 85 points per game, Wildcats' coach Lute Olson has said he didn't plan to run against the Sooners.

But all agreed that a Kansas-Oklahoma matchup in Monday's finale would have a positive impact on the Big Eight Conference.

"The conference has proved it's good, but there would be nothing that would surpass having two teams in the championship game," Mossman said.

"If you look at the long-term implications, K-State might be one of the teams on 'the bubble' that is marginal about making it to the tournament," he added.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

Kruger thinks Oklahoma best team in the country

Barry says 'Hawks deserve opportunity

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The last time Kansas appeared in Kemper Arena, Coach Larry Brown was asked an embarrassing question: "How did Scooter Barry do?"

Brown's Jayhawks had just been whipped by K-State 69-54 in the semifinals of the Big Eight Tournament. Barry, rushed into action because of an injury to guard Kevin Pritchard, had scored two points.

But that was about all that anyone expected from the 6-foot-1 senior and son of Hall of Famer Rick Barry. He had averaged 2.2 points for his Kansas career.

Brown smiled and reached for the box score.

Everyone sat politely while Brown studied the sheet.

"Scooter played hard. He played his heart out," Brown said. "And Scooter almost always plays tough defense."

Three weeks later, Brown's Jayhawks, 25-11, find themselves back in Kemper. They are the surprise team in this year's NCAA Final Four. And one major reason they're here is Scooter Barry.

There may be better players in this Final Four, and there certainly are better-known players. But it's doubtful that any player is happier to be here.

"This is so sweet, it's honey," Barry said. "We've shown so much character the entire tournament. We deserve this."

Given a second chance against K-State in the finals of the Midwest Regional last Sunday, Rick's son scored a career-high 15 points, including a dramatic 3-point goal at the end of the first half, to help key a 71-58 victory.

Instructor: Tax increases needed to help U.S. deficit

By The Collegian Staff

The federal budget deficit has reached its current level because of an "unwillingness to tax ourselves," Roger Trenary, instructor of economics, said at a forum Thursday night.

Due to recessions in 1980 and 1982, and a tax cut in 1981, the federal budget deficit reached a record high of $221 billion in 1986, Trenary said.

Prior to that, the highest budget deficit was $60 billion in 1980. The last year the federal government operated at a surplus was 1969, he said.

A federally appointed committee, the National Economic Commission, was created to suggest possible solutions to the federal budget deficit. Its finding, Trenary said, will be released in early 1989.

Trenary said the committee's possible solutions could range from raising income taxes to increasing energy taxes. Another possibility is to raise the Social Security tax and apply the generated revenue toward the deficit.

In a discussion on the international trade deficit, Patrick Gormely, associate professor of economics, said one way to ensure equal purchasing power among nations is to establish a "purchasing power exchange rate."

The rate would establish an accurate picture of a currency's buying power in other markets.

It might help the American economy, because it would stabilize the fluctuations in the value of the dollar. Therefore, exports may increase, Gormely said.

However, he said, this is not likely to happen in the near future, because it would be difficult to get all the countries to agree on exchange rates.

Another area for concern is the amount of petroleum imported and used by Americans, he said.

Currently, the United States imports 40 percent of its petroleum, and production in the United States has become stagnant.

Fire blamed on stereo

By The Collegian Staff

A short in a stereo receiver is believed to be the cause of an apartment fire Thursday morning at 1022 Moro St. that caused about $2,300 damage.

The fire, which occurred shortly after 7 a.m., was extinguished within about 10 minutes, said Larry Wesche, fire marshal of the Manhattan Fire Department.

Wesche said about $1,500 damage was done to the structure and about $800 damage to contents.

There was no one home at the time of the blaze, and no injuries were reported, he said.

In another matter, Wesche said investigation is continuing into the cause of an Aggieville fire Tuesday morning at His Majesty's Fish 'n' Chips Seafood Shoppe Corp. The fire, which destroyed the business, is being investigated as arson.

No suspects in the case have been identified, Wesche said.

Co-op

"The basic infrastructure of the quality of education at this University is in jeopardy. You could lay $100 million on this place and that still wouldn't take care of it all."

During one exchange between Krause and Peters, in which the discussion centered on the period in January 1987 when the co-op came under the Department of Housing's umbrella, Krause became visibly angry.

"At that point, the choice was shut it (down) or bring it under Housing," Krause said. "I should have shut it. I know a cooperative isn't a reality. It never has been."

Responded Peters: "I don't think it does any good to blame anybody. It doesn't matter that it was assumed to be a cooperative and that you and some other people said it would not be. It just doesn't matter anymore."

Krause agreed, but said many factors were overlooked when the co-op originally formed in 1985.

"In an effort to get it started, there were some hard, pragmatic things that did not get dealt with," he said.

Aruna Michie, member of the co-op's personnel committee, said many people believed the co-op had been mismanaged, and she asked Krause to acknowledge that it hadn't been.

"I've heard this term 'mismanagement' too often," Michie said.

"It's not coming out of my office," Krause replied.

Said Michie: "I think that the record somewhere officially needs to be set straight."

Although Michie raised the possibility that the co-op could be funded by potential Margin of Excellence funding, Krause said that is unlikely. He said even a "decent" MOE allocation would likely be earmarked for other purposes — including adjustment to a 13 percent increase in postal rates that takes effect Monday — and that such funding would only be a temporary solution.

"We're putting Band-Aids on top of Band-Aids on top of Band-Aids," Krause said, adding that the University is heading into the next fiscal year with a reserve of $101,000 in its Other Operating Expenses budget. The overall University budget is $209 million.

In comparison, Thomas Frith, director of housing, said his department has a budget of $10 million and is required to keep about $50,000 in its OOE.

"(The University OOE) is completely out of proportion to good operating procedure," Frith said.

In addition to the University's allocation, co-op officials discussed the new rate schedule that goes into effect June 1. The biggest change is that it doesn't allow for reduced rates for families that qualify for funding from Social and Rehabilitative Services.

According to Gray, that will affect 25 children currently at the co-op.

Even when the higher rates go into effect, Krause doubts they will have much impact on the co-op teachers' salaries, which are below the nation's poverty level.

"I would be reluctant to say right now that we'll raise everyone's salaries by even 10 cents per hour," Krause said, adding that it is a possibility if the co-op retains its current number of students. However, co-op officials don't think that will happen in light of the higher rates.

purchased. If necessary, FirstBank will assume the responsibility, Loub said. Attempts are now being made to find a buyer for the hotel.

"It's in no danger of closing. We have every confidence that a buyer will be found," Loub said.

University Inn is currently working in conjunction with K-State to provide internships for students studying hotel/ restaurant/tourism management. This program was instituted when FirstBank approved the funding for Kansas Partnership Inc. to lease the hotel.

"The bank saw an opportunity for the University to benefit from students interning in the restaurant/hotel management program. If the hotel were to close, all that good work would be wasted," Brokenicky said.

CELEBRATE THE RESURRECTION OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST WITH US!

26 And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cy-re-ni-an, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.
27 And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.
28 But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children.
29 For, behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck.
30 Then shall they begin to say to the mountains Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us.
31 For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?
32 And there were also two other, malefactors, led with him to be put to death.
33 And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left.
34 Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots.
35 And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God.
36 And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar.
37 And saying, If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself.
38 And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.
39 And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.
40 But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?
41 And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss.
42 And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.
43 And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise.
44 And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour.
45 And the sun was darkened, and the vail of the temple was rent in the midst.
46 And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.
52 This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus.
53 And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid.
54 And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on.
55 And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid.
56 And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment.

HOW TO ENRICH YOUR EDUCATION BY $1,000 A MONTH.

If you're a math, engineering or physical sciences major, you could be earning $1,000 a month during your junior and senior years.

This excellent opportunity is part of the Navy Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate Program. It's one of the most prestigious ways of entering the nuclear field – and rewarding, too. You get a $4,000 bonus upon entrance into the program, and $2,000 more when you complete your Naval studies.

You also receive a year of paid graduate-level training that's the most comprehensive in the world. And you'll acquire expertise with state-of-the-art nuclear reactor and propulsion plant technology.

As a Navy officer, you'll lead the adventure while gaining high-level experience that will help make you a leader in one of the world's high-tech industries.

In addition to the professional advantages, nuclear-trained officers get an unbeatable benefits package, travel opportunities, promotions and a solid salary.

Find out more about the Navy Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate Program, and make your education start paying off today. Call Navy Management Programs: 1-800-821-5110

OFFICER REPRESENTATIVES WILL BE ON CAMPUS APRIL 5 and 6, 1988. CONTACT THE PLACEMENT OFFICE FOR AN APPOINTMENT, OR CALL THE NUMBER LISTED ABOVE FOR MORE INFORMATION.

Easter worshipers look beyond world strife

By The Associated Press

Christians worldwide looked beyond global strife on Easter Sunday, braving unrest in the Holy Land and praying in England for an end to Northern Ireland's religious bloodshed.

In his traditional Easter address in Vatican City, Pope John Paul II told 100,000 people in St. Peter's Square and a broadcast audience of millions to remember people around the world who suffer from injustice and war.

"Pray for peace in the world, for justice, pray for the rights of man, especially for religious freedom," he said.

In Jerusalem, about 1,000 faithful joined in services at the site where most Christians believe Jesus rose from the dead.

But church officials said only about half as many people came as last year to the services at the 12th-century Church of the Holy Sepulcher. Many were deterred by four months of Palestinian protests and Israeli crackdowns in the occupied territories that have left more than 130 Arabs dead.

In Canterbury, England, Anglican Archbishop Robert Runcie likened the recent murder of two British soldiers at an Irish Republican Army funeral to Christ's crucifixion.

The two soldiers were shot to death in a predominantly Roman Catholic district of west Belfast on March 19 after they were beaten by mourners heading to the burial of an IRA guerrilla.

Runcie said in his Easter sermon that Christ's death was "a dark death, as dark in the cruelty and hatred which attended it as were the deaths of those two young soldiers in Belfast a fortnight ago."

But he said the joyous memory of Christ's resurrection should give hope for an end to Northern Ireland's sectarian violence.

In Belfast, thousands marched peacefully to mark the 1916 Easter uprising against British rule in what is now the neighboring Republic of Ireland, where most people are Catholic. Mainly Protestant Northern Ireland has remained under British control.

Police mounted heavy patrols at the main march of about 5,000 people through the Catholic ghettos of west Belfast. The security represented a break from recent police policy of avoiding gatherings involving the outlawed IRA, which is fighting to wrest Northern Ireland from the British and unite it with the Irish Republic.

In Vatican City, a cold rain forced worshipers to attend the traditional Easter Mass inside St. Peter's Basilica, Christendom's largest church.

Among the participants were U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, an Episcopalian, and his wife, Helena, a Catholic.

Shultz left later Sunday for Israel on the first part of a new Middle East peace shuttle. The pope had given Shultz his blessing for the mission Saturday in a private audience.

Angry man kills three at church

By The Associated Press

EDNEYVILLE, N.C. — A man apparently angry over a land dispute involving his former in-laws opened fire on mourners gathering for an Easter Sunday funeral, killing three and wounding three others including his ex-wife, authorities said.

The shooting occurred in the parking lot of the Mountain Home Baptist Church, where family and friends gathered for a funeral service for Effie Collins Justice, 79. The service had been scheduled to begin at 3 p.m., officials said, and the shooting took place shortly before that.

"It was just a really horrible experience, nothing I could ever have imagined," said Lester Justice, a nephew of Effie Collins Justice. Like most of the mourners, Justice was already inside the small, brick rural church when the shooting began but could hear the gunfire.

Michael Leslie Rainey, 41, was charged with three counts of first-degree murder and three counts of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, according to a release from the Henderson County Sheriff's Department.

The three, Wilford Owensby, 61, of Fletcher; his wife, Ponnelle, 60; and Scott Bowles, 24, were all pronounced dead at the scene.

Waiting for Spring

A student is silhouetted against the clear evening sky Sunday as he sits on top of East Stadium. After several days of cool, rainy weather, skies gave way to sunshine and higher temperatures Sunday afternoon, bringing people outside to enjoy the mild weather. Today's conditions are expected to be even more spring-like, with clear skies and high temperatures in the upper 70s to low 80s.

Small towns losing populations

'Triage' helps determine cities to survive, develop

By Lori Siegrist
Managing Editor

Many K-Staters hail from small towns. Traveling home is often a welcome vacation from the traffic, noise and hassle of living in a city — a vacation that future generations of K-Staters may not be able to enjoy.

Small Kansas towns are losing their populations to bigger cities, said Tom Daniels, associate professor of regional and community planning.

"You are seeing greater populations congregating around major metropolitan areas. The concentration may not be in those cities, but may be around those cities," he said.

Daniels completed a study titled "Small Town Triage" which reported on the future of the American Midwest. Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, and John Keller, professor of regional and community planning, helped with the study.

The authors posed the question of which communities should be helped and how they should be helped.

Since the number of communities in need of help is increasing while government funds seem to be decreasing, policymakers will have to decide which to support with government funds and, essentially, which to let "die."

"Faced with a decline in federal government money...individual communities will have to become self-reliant," Daniels said.

Of the state's 105 counties, 70 have a population of less than 15,000. Of the 632 communities in Kansas, 527 have populations less than 2,500.

The triage idea reflects the plan implemented by French medical personnel during World War I to treat wounded soldiers. The moderately wounded were treated first, in the possibility that their lives might be saved. Thus, the mortally wounded and the slightly wounded were denied immediate attention.

The small town triage policy suggests that government funds be given to small, growing towns which could sustain their growth if given assistance. Priority would be given next to larger growing towns which may need state funds to revitalize economic activity. Lowest priority would be given to small towns with no possibility of growth in sight.

Wolf Creek pipes may crack, endanger plant's operation

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Some water and steam pipes at the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant may be chemically tainted and may someday crack and endanger the plant's safe operation, according to allegations contained in confidential files obtained by The Topeka Capital-Journal.

In a story published Sunday, the Capital-Journal reported other allegations by Wolf Creek workers in confidential files that are the subject of a lawsuit.

The allegations include that trash was welded into pipes and stuffed into the plant's drains; that workers were harassed for whistleblowing; that some workers were told to stay long hours and earn overtime even if no work was being done; and that the plant's commitment to quality was a superficial public relations game, the newspaper reported.

A Wolf Creek spokesman said such safety concerns raised by workers have been investigated and resolved to the satisfaction of plant officials and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Lyle Koerper, manager of corporate communications for KG&E, said a more in-depth response would have to wait, since he's had no opportunity to view the files given to the newspaper or to prove their authenticity.

The Capital-Journal said it obtained some of the secret files from Wolf Creek's "Quality First" program, in which workers building the plant near Burlington in the early 1980s were encouraged to register any concerns they had about work on the facility.

Copies of the files were leaked from the plant several years ago to the Lawrence-based Nuclear Awareness Network. When NAN officials revealed that fact in 1985 during Wolf Creek rate hearings before the Kansas Corporation Commission, the plant's principal owner, Kansas Gas & Electric of Wichita, sued NAN to keep the files secret and get them back.

A trial was held in January and lawyers are briefing Shawnee County

Dennerll campaign seeks big break

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

With more than half the state primaries completed, Norbert G. Dennerll Jr. has not given up his hope to win the Democratic presidential nomination. In fact, Dennerll thinks his chances have improved.

"Now that (Rep. Richard) Gephardt and (Gary) Hart have dropped out, and with (Sen. Albert) Gore and (Sen. Paul) Simon maybe dropping out, we believe that we are a viable alternative to Jesse Jackson or Michael Dukakis. This is the time we have been waiting for," Dennerll said.

Dennerll, a 58-year-old former Cleveland city councilman, is concentrating on the upcoming West Virginia primary.

"We have just sent a large mailing out to the state of West Virginia to show them that we are a good alternative to those running," Dennerll said.

Though Dennerll describes his showings in the primaries so far as "slow," he remains optimistic.

"Results have been slow from the primaries, and as a result we hope that we can get something accomplished now," Dennerll said.

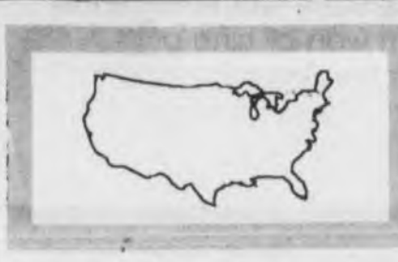
"If we make that one break, then we will get that national coverage," he said. "I just can't make it without national coverage.

"We have to work hard for what we get, just like anyone else," Dennerll said.

Dennerll is currently the superintendent of the Freedom Academy, a private non-denominational school, and of Griswold High School, also a private school. He held political office as a Cleveland city councilman for three terms from 1957 to 1964.

He said he believes his political experience is what makes him a better candidate than Jackson.

"First of all, I believe that I have more public experience than Jesse Jackson," Dennerll said. "Second of all, I believe that if I would have the opportunity to debate Jackson, then it will be the one break that we need."



Dennerll said his campaign is aimed toward the college student.

It is time for students to elect somebody who understands their situation, he said. He also plans to emphasize housing for college students and for people on welfare.

"I still think that with people dropping out, that we have a chance," he said.

Pet pig wins surfing contest

HONOLULU — A pet pig named Chop Chop has become the animal kingdom's surfing champion, doing a porcine version of a "hang ten" as he rode through the waves with his owner and garnering a perfect score.

A dozen surfers paired up with dogs, geese and even fish in an aquarium Saturday at the "Wet Pet" exhibition at the Rell Sunn Menehune Surfing Championships. Riding tandem on longboards, human and pet surfers competed before a crowd of 2,000 at Makaha Beach on Oahu.

Professional surfer and lifeguard Brian Keaulana, 26, and 3-month-old Chop Chop came in first with their perfect score.

Ohio oil spill disappears

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A diesel oil spill disappeared Sunday from the Ohio River as mysteriously as it had appeared, a U.S. Coast Guard spokesman said.

"We can't find a trace of it," said Lt. Eric Mosher, who was part of a team that conducted a land search along a 50-mile stretch of the river from Louisville to Madison, Ind., where the slick was spotted Saturday.

Mosher said the oil seen the previous day was light and tends to evaporate.

The search team checked out banks on both sides of the river and "nothing was found. We still don't know where the slick originated," Mosher said.

Barges, towboats and holding tanks had been checked but provided no clues, he said.

Chinese army drops Mao suits

BEIJING — Chinese army officers will trade in their Mao suits for Western-style jackets and ties this summer, the army newspaper said Sunday.

The Liberation Army Daily said Wang Yingbo, one of the designers, described the new uniform as a Western-style jacket nipped in at the waist, with a white shirt and black tie.

Wang said it follows the style used by most other armies in the world.

Army officers currently wear olive-green Mao suits with red trim.

Human Ecology receives grant

Paraguay to benefit from college's help

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

When mutual interests meet, hings usually happen.

That's exactly what happened when the College of Human Ecology and the National University of Asuncion, Paraguay, got together.

With the help of a $986,967 grant from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, Mich., K-State will be working with and educating rural professionals in Paraguay. The W.K. Kellogg foundation funds programs dealing with agriculture, health and education.

"It's a program to help (educators in Paraguay) identify the needs in rural areas and then build programs to meet those needs," said Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Human Ecology.

"This (program) is built so the people of the country identify their own needs and then we will be of assistance in helping them design the educational programs to meet those needs," she said.

Some of the programs K-State will be helping to develop in Paraguay include helping educate teachers for the primary and secondary schools and train agency workers.

K-State will also help start seminars and programs to help people who are already professionals working in the country. And there will be a new School of Human Ecology to train future teachers, Stowe said.

The new school will be located in the Faculty of Agronomy at the National University of Asuncion, the capital of Paraguay.

"Kansas State University was chosen because we have been working in other ways with rural development in Paraguay and with other agencies in that country," Stowe said.

Kansas — through the Partners of the Americas, a national volunteer organization — has a partnership with Paraguay under that program, Stowe said. In this program, states in the United States have sister countries or regions with which they work.

Meredith Smith, professor of foods and nutrition, will be the project's director from Kansas, and she will work with a co-director from Paraguay.

"The goals on the Paraguayan side are to improve the quality of education and programs for people in the rural section," Stowe said.

This might include improving the nutrition of the people, improving their economic base and improving the relationships within the family, she said.

From the Kansas perspective, the value of cross-cultural experiences for the faculty and students at K-State will be important, Stowe said.

"Whenever you learn more about how someone else does things, you understand better your own way of thinking. So that's going to be a real value to this college," she said.

Through this program, students from Paraguay will be able to come to K-State to earn graduate degrees. Known as Kellogg Fellows, these students will be supported by the Kellogg Foundation while they are earning their graduate degrees.

In addition, K-State will have some faculty who will go to Paraguay as consultants or short-term instructors.

Brice Hobrock, dean of KSU libraries, has already been to Paraguay to help assess the library of the Faculty of Agronomy in Asuncion.

"One of the most serious problems in that country is that there are no books," Stowe said. "Libraries are very meager and students do not have textbooks.

"We are very pleased to have this opportunity to work on a targeted particular project with another country, particularly a Spanish-speaking country, because we think that that will be an enrichment for the faculty and students at Kansas State."

Police unearth skull in Kansas City yard

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Police unearthed what they believe is a human skull Sunday in the backyard of a house where a 23-year-old man says he was held captive and sexually abused for five days.

The resident of the midtown home was arrested Saturday and charged with seven counts of sodomy. He was being held without bond and was scheduled to be arraigned Monday, said Sgt. Laura Mulloy, a spokesman for the Kansas City Police Department.

The victim, who fled Saturday to a neighbor's house wearing only a dog collar, was in stable condition at a hospital, police said.

"He was all scratched up and couldn't walk very well. His leg might have been broken," said the neighbor, Felix Duran Jr. "The skin on his shoulder was all worn out and scraped as if someone had taken sandpaper to it."

The victim told police he had been sexually abused in the basement of the house. Mulloy said the man was picked up as a hitchhiker early Tuesday morning in the midtown area.

"He said he had been tied up since Tuesday and that he had escaped," Mulloy said. She said the man had suffered abrasions.

In life's scheme, breaking things much more fun than making things

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

Breaking is easier and more fun than making.

That is why people bowl.

Bowlers work all day. They study or make radios or deliver boxes or check tax forms. They make things.

Making things must be done right, and so making is hard and we do it only for money. There are wrong ways to make things, but are there wrong ways to break things? Bad bowlers can keep bowling, but bad welders cannot keep welding. Work also has pressure.

But bowling has no purpose. No one cares if people bowl or not. People bowl for themselves. People make radios because other people want radios. Making things is done on demand, but breaking things can be done on whim.

Also, anyone can bowl, but not everyone can weld. Bowling takes little skill. Handicapped people can bowl with ramps. Bowling is not healthy or constructive in any way, no matter what Mary Lou Retton says. The air in bowling alleys is not clean, and the snacks available are not granola snacks.

Bowling at least seems like breaking. That is why it is fun. I mean, you get to throw a heavy ball and make a lot of noise, and a lot of pins fly around. It has all the fun of breaking without the work of first building something to break.

Fun things are like that; you get the effect of something without having to do the actual work. You can feel like you defeated the villain in the movie, when it was really the hero who did it — and it was all made up anyway. Buying a shirt makes you feel like you wove the cloth and then sewed it into a shirt, when all you really did was hand over a few pieces of paper.

Fun also comes from making a change — and making that change fast enough so you can see it happen. Life is a search for the maximum of the derivative. Dusting is boring because you move particles you can barely see. Programming computers is boring because you move magnetic patterns you cannot see at all.

Studying is hard because a few facts fixed in your mind is not something you can see or touch.

Driving fast is more fun than driving slow because there is more wind rushing past, more rattling of the dashboard and more squealing of tires. It is also more dangerous, and danger is fun.

Sports are more fun than board games because of the danger of physical hurt. Sports are more fun than studies because sports are not required. The bowling ball could land on a toe. The pitch could bean the batter. The wide receiver could get paralyzed. The horse could buck. The ankle could twist. The roller coaster could jump the tracks.

But the biggest danger in school or at a desk job is paper cuts. My desk is not going to break. The teacher will not chop off my toe if I do not listen.

This means that the best jobs require you to break things. These jobs are not work. Wrecking-ball operators get paid to play. Every kid knows that digging holes is fun. Digging ditches or running jackhammers is more fun than teaching students or supervising workers.

Work and play are both actions and so are basically the same except that play usually produces more changes faster. We like changes, even if they do not mean anything. Breaking is more fun than making because it changes things faster.

Nice things are nice only because they can break. Good-looking people look good only because a knife or a well-aimed pie would ruin them. High heels and long nails and collars and cuffs look good only because they are unneeded, awkward or can break or get crooked easily. Thin people look good because thinness often signals sickness. White stains.

Hand-painted china vases are better than plastic cups from Hardee's for holding flowers because china breaks. Flowers themselves are nice because they die fast.

Human life is precious only because it ends easily. What took years to build up and maintain could end with one mad second of turning the steering wheel the wrong way. Death is the ultimate kick because it is the biggest and fastest change possible.

Fire changes things fast and is much harder to stop than to start, and so it fascinates us. Why else do kids play with fire? Why else does everyone play with fire?

Tepeeing is easier than removing the toilet paper. Gaining weight is easier than losing it. Ripping a book from its binding is easier than writing an essay. Crumpling papers and shooting baskets is more fun than studying because we have something we can see and touch to show for our time.

If I take three hours and glue some pop cans together into a useless pillar, I have more to show for my time than if I spend three hours building a real wooden table. Making a pop can pillar is useless, but the effect comes quickly and all at once.

Breaking is easier and more fun than making because breaking changes things fast. Knocking pins down makes more motion and noise in a shorter time than does setting pins back up.

KanWork will only work if given adequate funds

Can KanWork work?

The Kansas Legislature certainly seems to think so after the House and the Senate Ways and Means Committee both passed the proposed bill unanimously.

This bill would require some women on welfare with dependent children to move back into the work force. Supposedly, this would mean that there would be fewer people on welfare and more people working in the economy.

This sounds like an OK idea, but the bill has some glaring problems. Foremost is the lack of any funding for vocational training. Thus, the bill will only complicate matters by throwing more untrained people into the work force when entry-level positions are already scarce. The reason for not using training? Money, of course.

That seems to be the real problem with the whole program. The Senate Ways and Means Committee says that funding for the program cannot be taken from existing programs. However, the House insists that the program must be financed within the proposed Social Security budget, which allocates $400,000 for the program.

However, according to advocates of the program, including Sen. Ross Doyen of Concordia, the state will need to spend between $1 million and $5 million in the next year just to start the program in a few counties. A statewide program would take $20 million.

And from where will the extra money come if the program goes over the $400,000 budget? From the budget of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, as if it isn't short enough on money as it is.

Unless the state is willing to make KanWork a priority and thus give it the money it needs to actually get on its feet, it is going to be an economic drain on the social rehabilitation system. We need to avoid these shortsighted panaceas and concentrate on long-term benefits like training and education.

Swaggart so fortunate to have forgiving god

How nice it must be for Jimmy Swaggart to be able to talk with such a merciful and forgiving god as the one he claimed to have communed with last week — a god who is not bound by the decisions of national church bodies.

Last week, Swaggart's attorney announced that the New Orleans evangelist would follow "the will of God" and not adhere to a punishment meted out by the Executive Presbytery of the Assemblies of God to Swaggart for his moral failure.

That punishment included Swaggart's suspension from the ministry for two years and banishment from the pulpit for one year. That banishment also disallowed the Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries from using videotapes of Swaggart's preaching in its national and foreign broadcasts.

The Executive Presbytery's action was more severe than the decision made in February by the Louisiana District Presbytery of the Assemblies church. The Louisiana body said Swaggart should undergo counseling for two years and be banned from the pulpit for three months.

During the three-month suspension, Swaggart's ministry could have used videotapes of Swaggart's past sermons or of those he taped for broadcast which were made prior to his confession of paying a prostitute to pose naked for him.

But, a year out of the pulpit would mean the Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries — which made $150 million last year — would be without its star attraction for too long.

Yes, how nice of Swaggart's god to side with the Louisiana District Presbytery, which included two people who have leadership roles in the Swaggart World Ministries.

Yet Swaggart's god is a just god. When the PTL Club's Jim Bakker admitted to an affair with Jessica Hahn last year, Swaggart said Bakker should be banned from the ministry for a year. How just of Swaggart's god to require a financially strapped competitor of Swaggart's to be out of the pulpit for so long.

Jesus once said a person could not serve both God and Mammon. Apparently, Swaggart does not have such a problem serving his god. Swaggart's god must be the one with the longer name.

Keep PE class

Editor,

In response to the Concepts of Physical Education course currently being evaluated by Faculty Senate, I don't feel the one-hour credit course should be dropped as a requirement. According to the K-State general educational objectives, we as students are to be taught to "develop a well-adjusted personality, good character traits and a sound philosophy of life."

In order to develop a sound philosophy of life, we need to be able to take care of ourselves as well as our bodies. This course teaches us how to make intelligent decisions concerning our bodies.

It is not designed to punish our bodies, but rather to enhance them. We should take advantage of this opportunity and not let this course be omitted from our education.

Economic drain

Editor,

The proposed renovation of the 62-year-old Van Zile Hall would be a great mistake. The Department of Housing's director, Thomas Frith, said, "We do not need Van Zile; we could maybe use, but we don't need it." We could build a new residence hall cheaper than renovating Van Zile. Due to its small size, Van Zile would be an economic drain on the rest of the housing department if renovated.

We don't need a $1.5 million mistake. We don't need Van Zile.

Policy works

Editor,

A few weeks ago, the Kansas House defeated a bill that, in my opinion, could have destroyed K-State. I am, of course, speaking about selective admissions. Although it has been argued that selective admissions could make the University even better than it is today, I must disagree.

After all, I don't think the loss of thousands of students, not to mention millions of dollars, can help the University or the city of Manhattan. The fact of the matter is open admissions works well at K-State. The University is at a high point right now. So why change what works?

Public Speaking I helps students with fears

Small groups used to aid anxious class members

By David Hartman
Collegian Reporter

Quick — think of some of the things people name as their worst fears.

Heights? Yes.

Snakes? Probably.

Public speaking? Most definitely, said Harold Nichols, head of the Department of Speech.

However, Nichols said speaking in front of other people is a fear most people will have to face at some point in their lives.

"One of the skills everyone is going to have to have when they get out of school is the ability to speak in public," he said. "You can't get around it — whether you are formally presenting a speech or whether you are just speaking in front of a PTA meeting or a business group."

Fear of speaking to a group of people is a major problem that instructors of Public Speaking I deal with every semester.

"If there are people who have a lot of apprehension and are willing to to admit it, the instructors will work with them on an individual basis to help them overcome it," Nichols said.

Students must to be willing to admit they have that problem before the instructor can help them, and a lot of people have trouble admitting it, he said.

People who have a fear of public speaking are called "communication apprehensives," said Tom McLaughlin, graduate student in speech and teaching assistant in the speech department.

It is not uncommon to have at least a couple of such people in each Public Speaking I class, he said.

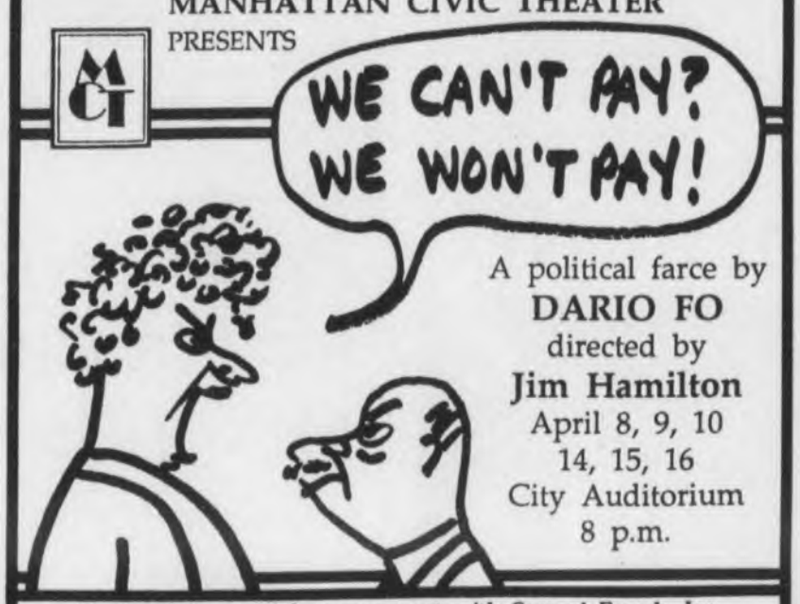
"I wouldn't say there are a lot of problems, but the problem exists and there are ways to deal with it," McLaughlin said.

Two of the best ways are to have the speech instructor work with the student one on one and then put the student in a small peer group of four or five people to practice speaking, he said.

"By the end of the semester in an ideal sense the 'communication apprehensive' will be able to get up in front of the class," McLaughlin said.

This is good because the ability to speak in front of a group of people improves a person's ability to form and develop a strong means of communication, he said.

"Right before my speeches I felt hopeless," said Bob Dixon, sophomore in engineering technology and another class member, said, "I think it's a good idea (to have to take public speaking) because you need to know how to speak in front of other people. I felt pretty calm because I had drama and chorus in high school and that prepared me."



The requirement to take public speaking is not the same at all universities, but it has been required at K-State for many years, Nichols said. The Department of Speech offers about 50 sections of Public Speaking I each semester, with 23-35 students in the two- and three-hour sections.

The speech department is currently trying to drop the maximum number of students in each class of Public Speaking I to 25, Nichols said.

'Hawks, Sooners set to decide nation's No. 1

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The last time two teams from the same conference met for the national championship in college basketball, the underdog won and matched the mark for most losses by a champion.

Tonight, Kansas and Oklahoma of the Big Eight meet for the title with Kansas an eight-point underdog and enough losses to set the record for most by an NCAA champion.

When Villanova beat fellow Big East member Georgetown in 1985, the Wildcats were 10-point underdogs and the only unranked team in the Final Four. Ditto Kansas this year.

"You have to be lucky, get some breaks, win a game or two you're not supposed to win," said Kansas coach Larry Brown.

Brown should know. He coached the 1980 UCLA team that reached the championship game as a heavy underdog.

"That team had nine losses when we started the tournament and we were 8-6 at one time during the season and we came a layup short of winning it all. I just hope the results this time are different."

Kansas, 26-11, and Oklahoma, 35-3, will meet for the third time this season. Oklahoma won both the first two meetings, 73-65 and 95-87, and while the Jayhawks have changed a lot this season because of injuries and academic problems, the Sooners and their vaunted pressure defense have remained constant.

"I don't know if you can compare their press to any other," said Kansas point guard Kevin Pritchard. "They have the greatest press in the world and they showed that against a great ballhandling team like Arizona."

Oklahoma beat the second-ranked Wildcats 86-78 in the semifinals, forcing Arizona, which had committed just 12 turnovers per game, into nine turnovers in the first half and 15 in the game.

"The pace at which we play is hard for some teams to adjust to," Oklahoma forward Dave Sieger said Sunday.

Pritchard, who had five assists and seven rebounds in the 66-59 semifinal victory over No. 5 Duke, has seen the press twice this season, and it's tougher on him than most point guards because he began playing that position midway through the season.

Pritchard has been successful. When he moved to the point from his shooting guard position, the Jayhawks were 12-7 and the next opponent was Oklahoma. Pritchard played 33 minutes, and although the Jayhawks lost, the game was a turning point.

Kansas has gone 14-4 since then with Pritchard running the offense, and one of the losses was to Kansas State in the Big Eight tournament, a game Pritchard missed because of a knee injury.

"I didn't realize Pritchard had such an impact on that team, but the game they played without Pritchard they just weren't the same," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said.

Tubbs doesn't care what other people think about the game; he knows what his team will do.

"I don't care who's the favorite, it doesn't matter when the ball is rolling down the floor and the players never think about that," Tubbs said. "You play the game for what's at stake. That's what's important.

"We play the same whomever it might be. Our game plan stays the same, we'll check them out. We've played teams with good guards this year who we couldn't get to turn it over, but there's some place on the floor where we can."

Track teams split double dual at NU

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State's track and field teams not only had last year's conference champions to contend with Saturday, but they also had to deal with cold, damp weather as they opened the 1988 outdoor season in a double dual with Nebraska and South Dakota.

The Wildcat men's squad lost to Nebraska, 111-37, and defeated South Dakota, 69-67. The women were beaten by Nebraska, 92-42, but defeated South Dakota, 75-31.

The men had three first place finishes and took the top four spots in the javelin. On the women's side, K-State came away with five first place finishes.

"The weather was not real good, but we had some decent performances," K-State coach John Capriotti said. "I thought Felicia Curry and Jeff Reynolds did a good job. Ron Stahl, Anne Stadler and Kim Kilpatrick competed real well.

"A lot of our athletes didn't have a lot of intensity. Therefore, we had some let downs in some areas. And we need to pick up our intensity in these next couple of weeks. Hopefully, we will have a lot better weather through it."

Pritchard's efforts key in determining tonight's champion

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

Unless Danny Manning and Milt Newton combine to score 60 points, Oklahoma will win the NCAA's national basketball championship tonight in Kansas City, Mo.

Not a really bold prediction, huh?

Well, I might just be inclined to pick those hotter-than-a-firecracker Jayhawks. In fact, I probably would if it wasn't for one personnel deficiency in the Jayhawk lineup — KU's scoring from the guard position comes from the point guard, not the off guard.

I'm not going to get too technical in my explanation, but here goes.

Kevin Pritchard is the Jayhawks' point guard and their best scoring threat from the guard position.

Against Oklahoma's patented pressure defense, the point guard — the ball handler — is forced to work hard the full 40 minutes to get the ball across the half-court line against that tenacious defense.

Pritchard, as KU's point guard, gets that assignment tonight.

The sophomore playmaker has been a key in the KU resurgence since he made the move from the off or "shooting" guard slot to the point guard slot midway through the campaign.

He suffered a knee injury in KU's opening round Big Eight tourney win over Oklahoma State, however, and still is working with basically just one sound leg, though he has done an admirable job of playing through the pain.

A man that is subjected to breaking OU's tough full-court defense on just one sound leg can't possibly also be expected to generate 15 points in the same game, can he?

I don't think so, but Kansas coach Larry Brown has to be hoping he can. If he doesn't, KU doesn't stand a snowball's chance in purgatory of stopping the Sooner juggernaut.

Pritchard, a three-point shooting ace who is KU's version of Will Scott, is basically being asked by Brown to do all by himself the job K-State got each game from Scott and Steve Henson combined.

Pardon me for a moment if I have some serious doubts as to whether he can pull it off.

Pritchard has gained my respect as one of the conference's top sophomores, and his duals with Henson over the next two seasons are bound to be classics. But expecting him to do a lion's share of the work tonight against a Sooner team that will be favored going in is asking too much.

Simply put, if Pritchard can somehow score 15 or more points and take care of his ball handling responsibilities, KU will give OU all it can handle and I'll pick KU to win. If the 'Hawks don't get that kind of production out of Pritchard, Oklahoma could win in a cake walk.

Manning's 'supporting cast' respects star on, off the court

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Danny Manning show will play for the final time tonight and the supporting cast would like to say thanks for the memories.

Manning, the 6-foot-10 senior who has carried the Kansas University basketball team all season, will try to take the Jahawks to the top when he leads them against Oklahoma in the championship game of the NCAA basketball tournament.

And as the other Kansas starters looked ahead to that game Sunday, they also looked back on the experiences they shared playing alongside a superstar. Not only are they in awe of his considerable skills, but they respect his work habits and the way he handles himself off the court just as much.

"Sometimes I don't realize it, but I'm playing next to a guy who'll make a million dollars someday," senior forward Chris Piper said. "But you'd never know it. Danny is just the same as he's always been.

"Obviously we wouldn't be here today if it weren't for Danny."

Indeed. Manning leads the Jayhawks in scoring (24.6 points per game), rebounding (8.7 average), blocked shots (65), steals (61) and minutes played (35 per game). His field goal percentage is the best among the regulars, 58.6 percent, and he has been a first-team All-American the past two seasons.

There's no statistic for leadership, but when the Jayhawks look for guidance, they turn to Manning.

During his four years at Kansas, the Jayhawks are 111-34 and have been to the Final Four twice. If he gets them one more victory, the school would would have its second national championship.

"It's tough knowing this will be the last time I play with him," sophomore guard Kevin Pritchard said. "It's something you don't want to see end. He's going to go down in history as one of the all-time greats — pro, high school, college, you name it."

Piper, who sat out the 1984-85 season, had been on the team a year when Manning arrived as a highly acclaimed recruit out of Lawrence High School, just across town from the Kansas campus.

From day one, he could see that Manning was something special.

"The first time he dribbled the ball the length of the court at 6-10, wow, he's just an incredible player," Piper said. "And he's such a great guy off the floor. He's an amazing individual."

Pritchard was similarly impressed when he reported to his first Jayhawk workout two years ago. No matter what the drill, he said, Manning stood out.

But Pritchard said the memory of Manning that outshines all others was an incident off the floor.

K-State had just beaten the Jayhawks, 72-61, on Jan. 30 to end their 55-game winning streak at Allen Fieldhouse. The Kansas dressing room was as quiet as the library on a Saturday night. Then Manning walked in.

"He came in and we were all really down and he gave us an emotional lift," Pritchard said. "He told us that even though we lost, we shouldn't get down on ourselves."

Tubbs proving he can coach

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Billy Tubbs can stalk the sideline with any college basketball coach around. He more than holds his own when it comes to berating officials; he's ahead of the pack when it comes to sly remarks.

And now the coach of the Oklahoma Sooners is proving he can do just that: coach.

That's right, coach. Tubbs has brought his team to the NCAA championship game after losing three starters from last year and being picked in the preseason to finish no better than third in its conference.

He's done it with a talented group of athletes who, he says, work harder on the defensive end of the floor than any of his previous seven Sooner teams. On offense, it's run, baby, run, but isn't nearly as helter skelter as it might appear.

"I think any time you start running up and down the floor and taking a lot of shots, people think it must be the players who are making all the decisions," forward Dave Sieger said Sunday. "That's not the case."

Instead, what is rehearsed over and over in practice is carried onto the court during games. Sieger said that by game time, Tubbs doesn't have to say much to get his point across.

"It's kind of a mental communication," he said. "You know when to look over at him, so he doesn't wear out the soles of his shoes stomping on the floor to get our attention. Just by the look on his face and the signals he gives, you know what he wants you to do."

Tubbs' record at Oklahoma, and before that at Lamar, reflect a highly successful coach. Twice in four seasons at Lamar he won 20 games, and this is his seventh consecutive 20-victory season at Oklahoma. Twice he has topped 30 victories.

Tubbs' flat-out delight in stomping opponents has not won him any popularity contests with his peers. That, along with Oklahoma's wide open style of play, tend to cloud the job he is doing as a coach.

"I think he doesn't get recognized because he's different," point guard Ricky Grace said. "He doesn't do things the way they lay it out for you to do it, and I think if you go away from a majority, you have a harder time being accepted."

Coach Larry Brown of Kansas said Tubbs' success has as much to do with his style as with his X's and O's.

"To me, coaching is allowing your players to be the best players they can be and put them in a situation where they can be successful," Brown said. "From the day I got into this conference, and competed against Oklahoma, I've always recognized that.

"He makes light of himself and sometimes I get mad when he does, because I don't think he gets the credit. You look at his record since he's been there, you look at his success in the tournament prior to this year and you look what this team has accomplished ... I wish more people would focus on that."

Tubbs sites his coach at Lon Morris Junior College, O.P. Adams, as his greatest influence in coaching. Adams' teams averaged 100 points per game in Tubbs' two years there, and were successful.

Tubbs said he also followed John Wooden's great UCLA teams closely, and that he has picked up bits and pieces from dozens of other coaches during his career.

Tennis team beats Missouri, 9-0

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's women's tennis team improved its record to 6-4 by beating Big Eight Conference opponent Missouri Saturday in Manhattan.

The Wildcats won every singles and doubles match to tally a score of 9-0. None of the matches went to three sets, as the Widcats won every set of the afternoon.

K-State coach Steve Bietau said the match was one "where (K-State) had little to gain but a lot to lose." He also said he thought the matches at No. 1 and No. 2 singles would be a little closer.

Bietau said one point standing out for K-State was the play of the doubles teams.

"We spent a lot of time over the past 10 days trying to get some things improved in our doubles," he said.

He also said K-State's No. 1 and No. 2 singles players — Marijke Nel and Annika Emtell — played "extremely well."

Nel handed her opponent, Tracy Jones, her first loss of the year.

"Marijke is a very talented player and is capable of great things on the court," Bietau said. "She did a great job of keeping her opponent out of the match."

The tennis team will be in action again Tuesday when it takes on the University of Kansas in Lawrence.

Staff/Neal Hinkle

Annika Emtell returns the ball during a doubles match Saturday at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Center. Emtell and Valerie Rive won, 6-2, 6-3, helping the Wildcats beat Missouri 9-0 in dual play.

Singles Results

No.1—Marijke Nel (KSU) defeated Tracy Jones 6-1, 6-0
No.2—Annika Emtell (KSU) defeated Amy Snook 6-1, 6-4
No.3—Valerie Rive' (KSU) defeated Meredith Heineman 6-2, 6-0
No.4—Sigrid Ivarsson (KSU) defeated Cortney Elliott 6-0, 6-0
No.5—Thresa Burcham (KSU) defeated Christine Ehrhard 6-0, 6-1

Doubles Results

No.1—Emtell/Rive' (KSU) defeated Snook/Jones 6-2, 6-3
No.2—Ivarsson/Nel (KSU) defeated Ehrhard/Elliott 6-2, 6-1
No.3—Burcham/Bitner (KSU) defeated Heineman/McClung 6-3, 6-1

OSU sweeps 'Cats in three contests

From Wire Reports

A pair of disastrous first innings by K-State spelled a doubleheader sweep by No. 1 Oklahoma State in Big Eight Conference baseball action Sunday afternoon at OSU's Allie Reynolds Stadium.

OSU won the first game 15-9 and capped the sweep with a 13-3 victory in the second contest.

In the opener, O-State struck for seven first-inning runs and was never threatened.

Robin Ventura opened the scoring with a three-run homer and Wildcat starter Jim Haller was shelled for six hits in two-thirds of an inning.

K-State did not pick up a hit until the fourth inning when third baseman Jim Donohue started the inning with a single. The Wildcats went on to touch OSU starter Mike Gardella for four runs in the frame. K-State scored a run in the second inning without a hit as Gardella walked three batters.

Ventura, while only playing three innings, drove in five Cowboy runs. He added three more RBI in the second contest.

David Chadd picked up a three-run homer for the 'Cats in the sixth inning of the opener.

In all, K-State went through four pitchers in the seven-inning game.

In the second game, K-State's first-inning woes continued, this time without much help from OSU. The Wildcats allowed three unearned runs in the first inning to help send Oklahoma State to its 18th straight win.

The 'Cats' starting pitcher, Zack Kimbell, was the tough-luck loser in the nightcap. He allowed only three earned runs against the powerful Cowboy attack.

The Wildcats had pulled to within 3-1 on the strength of Kent Gleason's fifth home run of the season, but OSU scored single runs in the third and fifth innings to maintain control of the final contest.

Any doubt about the outcome of the game was removed with a two-run homer by Ventura in the bottom of the sixth that spelled the end of Kimbell's impressive outing. In all, the Pokes scored eight runs in their final at bat of the afternoon. Brad Beanblossom finished the inning with a grand slam.

The doubleheader sweep by OSU leaves K-State at 19-9 overall and 0-3 in league play, as they were beaten by the Cowboys, 11-7, in the opening game of the series Saturday. In that game, the 'Cats came back from a 7-1 deficit to pull to within 4 runs before being retired in the ninth.

Jeff Peterson, 3-1, picked up the loss, while Jim McClellan and David Hierholzer pitched in relief.

The series will conclude with a single nine-inning game this afternoon.

Detroit, Boston begin season at 1:05 EDT

Warm weather, sell-out crowds expected for openers

By The Associated Press

Olympic hero Bonnie Blair, Texas tot Jessica McClure and Final Four fanfare highlight the festivities while Roger Clemens, Dwight Gooden and Jack Morris are the feature attractions today when the 1988 baseball season begins.

Sold-out crowds and nice weather are forecast for many of the nine openers. Detroit at Boston starts the year at 1:05 p.m. EDT and St. Louis is in Cincinnati an hour later for the traditional National League opener.

Bob Horner, back from Japan, Kirk Gibson, Dave Parker and a bunch of other All-Stars in new places are causing optimism across the major leagues as hope springs eternal. All teams are even for now and pressure of pennant races may be a half-year away.

"Things have to break as well for us as they have to break for anybody to win it," said Milwaukee manager Tom Trebelhorn, whose Brewers open in Baltimore. "We're going to have to keep everybody in there and everybody is going to have to have a decent season."

Clemens, trying to become the first to win three straight Cy Young awards, will throw the first pitch of the season. He will be opposed by Detroit's Morris, the biggest winner this decade, as the American League East champion Tigers face the Red Sox at jammed Fenway Park.

Riverfront Stadium is also sold-out for the Reds' opener against the NL champion Cardinals, who signed Horner in the off-season. Mario Soto, trying to overcome two years of injuries, will start for Cincinnati against Joe Magrane of the Cardinals.

"I don't know if they'll remember about me," Soto said of the home crowd. "They haven't seen me pitch in so long."

Blair and McClure also will make their best pitches.

Blair, a speedskater who won the gold medal in the 500 meters, will throw out the opening ball at Comiskey Park before California plays in Chicago. Blair is from Champaign, Ill.

Down the California coast, the Los Angeles Dodgers, who revamped their lineup by acquiring Gibson, Jesse Orosco, Alfredo Griffin and Mike Davis, play NL West champion San Francisco. Fernando Valenzuela starts at Dodger Stadium against Dave Dravecky and the Giants, who signed free agent Brett Butler to be their leadoff hitter.

In domed Olympic Stadium in Montreal, where New York plays the Expos, Gooden opposes Dennis Martinez .

Filipino troops seek fugitive

Navy personnel help in 'daring escape'

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Troops went on nationwide alert Sunday for the fugitive leader of an August coup attempt, and the military warned that extremists may try to exploit the confusion generated by his daring escape.

Military Chief of Staff Gen. Renato de Villa said former Lt. Col. Gregorio "Gringo" Honasan, who escaped from a prison ship Saturday with 14 guards, may still be in the Manila area.

Troops were also dispatched to the nearby provinces of Cavite and Batangas following unconfirmed reports that Honasan may have fled there.

The military is "taking every possible action to bring him (Honasan) back... ."

Fidel V. Ramos, Defense secretary

De Villa also ordered troops on alert in central and southern Philippine islands in case disgruntled officers and politicians try to exploit the volatile situation in Manila and stage attacks against government installations.

Trucks blocked all entrances to military garrisons in the capital, and troops refused to allow reporters and other civilians to enter the compounds.

Police set up checkpoints on the outskirts of Manila and placed homes of Honasan's friends and associates under surveillance. Extra troops were deployed around the presidential palace.

Defense Secretary Fidel V. Ramos said the military was "taking every possible action to bring him (Honasan) back and to minimize or neutralize any further damage that he can make."

Honasan, 39, escaped from a prison ship before dawn Saturday with 14 elite navy personnel who were supposed to be guarding him. He had been confined there since his arrest Dec. 9 for the Aug. 28 attempted coup, which left at least 53 people dead and hundreds wounded.

His escape was a blow to the prestige of the armed forces, already facing threats from communist and Moslem rebels.

Three Arabs killed on West Bank

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — An Arab was electrocuted Sunday after Israeli soldiers forced him to climb a utility poll to remove a Palestinian flag in the West Bank in one of three deaths in the occupied territories, the army said.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz, arriving on a new Mideast peace shuttle, told Israel to act on his plan for negotiations for Palestinian self-rule.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin announced a new army policy to go on the offensive and teach rioting Arabs a lesson.

Sunday's deaths brought to 136 the number of Arabs who have died in four months of protests against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, according to U.N. figures. One Israeli soldier has been killed.

The months of rioting cast a pall on Christian celebrations of Easter.

About 1,000 worshipers, half of last year's number, attended services in the 12th-century Church of the Holy Sepulcher, marking the site where Christians believe Jesus rose from the dead after being crucified.

Shultz said the Palestinians must be included in peace talks and negotiations must be based on a 1967 United Nations resolution that calls on Israel to give up territory in exchange for Arab recognition.

"For everything there is a season ... a time to love and a time to hate; a time for war and a time for peace," he said. "This is the time and the season to move decisively towards peace."

His remarks appeared aimed primarily at Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who told reporters during a visit to a West Bank settlement Sunday that Shultz had yet to convince him of the need for an international peace conference.

The American peace proposal calls for an international conference on the Middle East. Under the proposal Israel would give land to the Palestinians in exchange for peace.

Shultz's third Middle East shuttle since October began after a sharp escalation of bloodshed in the past week in which 20 Arabs were killed and scores more shot by Israeli soldiers.

District Judge James Macnish Jr. on whether the files should remain secret. In the meantime, NAN officials are under court order not to release any files.

The Capital-Journal said it recently obtained copies of several of the confidential files from an anonymous source.

The names of the workers making the complaints were blacked out on the forms obtained by the newspaper. Their positions were listed, and included such things as quality control inspectors and startup engineers.

The authenticity of the documents obtained by the newspaper was confirmed by two independent sources, including Owen Thero, former head of the Quality First program at Wolf Creek, the newspaper reported.

The files contain allegations that water and steam pipes — some that are critical to plant safety and others that are not — were installed at the plant in the early 1980s without sufficient care for their cleanliness, and may now be contaminated.

Several of the secret files say "halogen" contamination on the pipes "could induce stress cracking" and "could have affected adversely the safety of operations of the nuclear power plant at any time throughout the expected lifetime of the plant."

NAN president Stevi Stephens says she wants the court order against her lifted so she can forward the files to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for possible investigation of the allegations.

Stephens and Topeka attorney Robert Eye alleged at Wolf Creek rate hearings in 1985 that the files' allegations could have bearings on the costs of the plant and therefore the rates that Wolf Creek customers will pay.

KCC member Keith Henley testified at the January trial that the agency was allowed complete access to the more than 200 Quality First files. Testimony indicated the agency found only three of the more than 200 files that might contain information bearing on what rates Wolf Creek should be allowed to charge.

A former Wolf Creek quality control official contacted by The Capital-Journal said the pipe cleanliness questions could ultimately mean a costly replacement of the pipes or, in a worst-case scenario, cause a rupture that leads to radioactive water and steam escaping.

Towns

Promoting places that have a population of 2,500-5,000, some employment opportunities and services is the first goal of the triage strategy. The second goal is to slow regional out-migration by helping towns with 5,000 people to 15,000 people that have growth potential.

Daniels said this won't wipe out all small towns. A positive aspect is that the bigger cities will be able to support small communities within a 30- to 40-mile radius.

As for communities beyond this radius, Daniels said, "There's not a heck of a lot of hope."

The study outlines four basic types of towns as growing, declining, independent or dependent.

Cities that are surviving, expanding and independent have a diversified economic base. Often they are county seats which are successful in attracting small, specialty manufacturing plants because they have a greater capacity to offer tax breaks and a larger labor force, Daniels said.

Another fast growing area is the former rural communities that lie just outside of larger cities and are dependent upon them.

Compared to the cities in which the people work, these bedroom communities — centers where city workers commute home to — have "a nicer environment, less crime, nicer place to raise kids and lower property taxes. People don't mind commuting up to an hour each day," Daniels said.

Remote communities, usually with a high proportion of elderly people, are independent and declining. The prospect for growth doesn't exist, Daniels said.

With the spread of mass communications, the young people in these towns have realized what is available to them beyond the confines of their towns, he said.

Small communities that are dependent on natural resources such as agriculture, mining and forestry are also declining. For every three farms that go out of business, he said, one main street business fails. In turn, he said, rural town banks fail because of the business failures, not because of the farms which go in debt.

A steady downhill trend can be seen in the last 50 years to 75 years with the consolidation of retail businesses and service enterprises, he said. This includes the development of malls in key regional cities such as Topeka and Manhattan.

To survive, small communities will have to either become commuting centers or develop small-scale, specialty manufacturing plants, he said.

Daniels stressed that the issue is controversial and completely a political decision. It will be up to the Kansas Legislature to weigh the social and cultural sacrifices, he said.

"The final decision would have to be a political decision," Daniels said.

against K-State this season, and Scooter Barry, the senior guard who has been a postseason terror as of late, could also figure into the equation, though neither has shown he's a great scoring threat over the long haul.

With a backcourt tandem of Mookie Blaylock and Ricky Grace on the other side of the ball, KU will need all it can get from every guard it puts on the floor tonight if the game isn't to degenerate into a rout.

Kevin Pritchard, however, is the key. He's KU's key to the national title, and Danny Manning can't do his two tough jobs for him.

If Pritchard can somehow gut it out and have a great game — the game of his career — KU will win the national title.

It's as simple as that.

HE IS RISEN

CHAPTER 24

NOW upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them.

2 And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre.

3 And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus.

12 Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass.

13 And, behold, two of them went that same day to a village called Em-ma'us, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.

14 And they talked together of all these things which had happened.

15 And it came to pass, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them.

20 And how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him.

21 But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to day is the third day since these things were done.

29 But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.

30 And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.

31 And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight.

32 And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?

33 And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them,

34 Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

35 And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

36 And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

37 But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit.

38 And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts?

39 Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.

40 And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet.

41 And while they yet believe not for joy, and wondered, he said unto them, Have ye here any meat?

42 And they gave him a piece of broiled fish, and of an honeycomb.

43 And he took it, and did eat before them.

44 And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me.

45 Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures,

46 And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day:

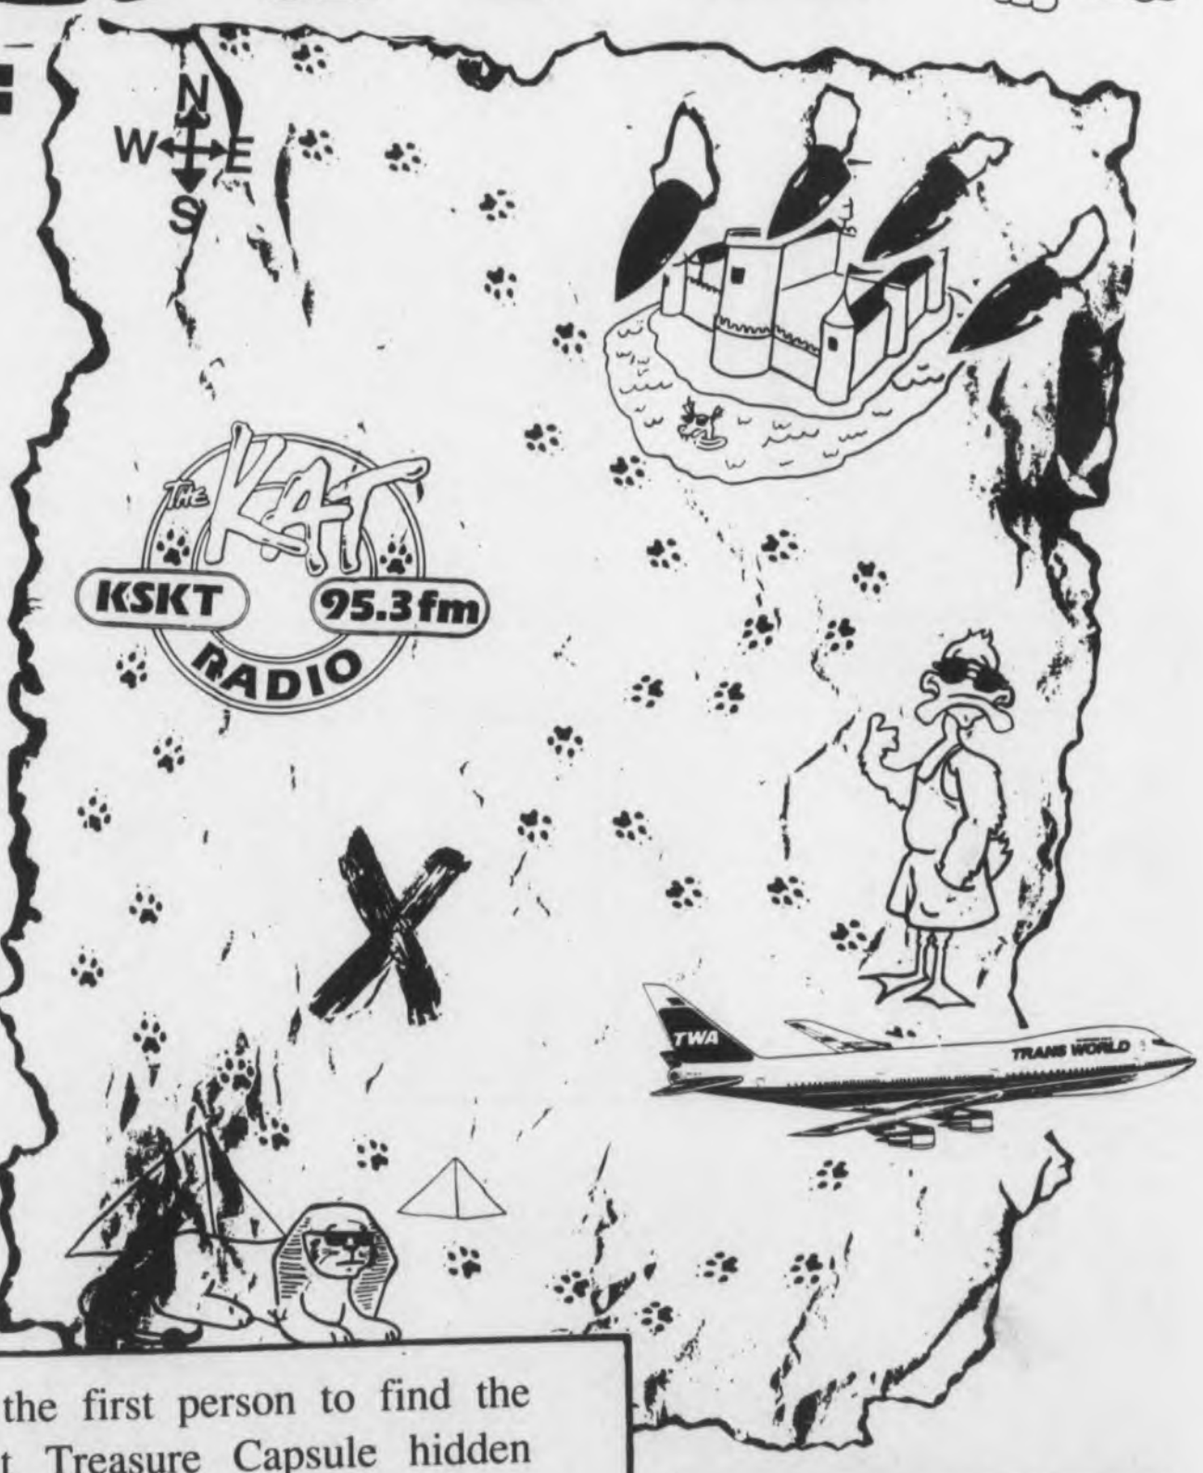
47 And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

John

6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying,

7 And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power.

8 But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in Judæa, and in Sa-ma'ri-a, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.



9 And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.

Luke

After this I (John) looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice ... said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels ... Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, ... all ... heard I saying, Blessing and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever.

Lawrence fans celebrate win

'Hawks national champs

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — Shouting "We're No. 1!" amid the crackle of fireworks and the blast of car horns, thousands of fans swarmed over the University of Kansas campus Monday night in celebration of the Jayhawks' national championship.

"It was the best script Danny Manning could have ever written," Don Robertson, a Kansas senior from Kansas City, Kan., said during the impromptu celebration. "They were underdogs, they pulled together, decided they wanted to win and won it all."

Manning led Kansas with 31 points in the 83-79 victory over the fourth-ranked Oklahoma Sooners, who beat the unranked Jayhawks twice in regular-season play but couldn't make it three in a row.

"What does it mean to beat Oklahoma?" said KU senior Scott Vickers of Kansas City, Kan. "It means they're No. 2."

"It was sweet," said Amy Gentz of Topeka, a freshman. "It was such an emotion-packed game."

Jayhawk Boulevard, the main street on the KU campus, was closed by police after revelers began pouring into the area shortly after the game. One police officer estimated that more than 8,000 people were on the scene.

Staff/Jim Dietz

A crowd of between 3,000 and 4,000 University of Kansas students jam Jayhawk Boulevard in front of Wescoe Hall on the KU campus Monday night after the NCAA championship game.

In nearby Kansas City, Mo., police closed off the trendy Westport area when thousands of patrons of bars and clubs streamed into streets after the Kansas victory.

The celebration in Lawrence, located only 40 miles from the site of the championship game at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, continued into the night. University officials announced that today's classes were canceled.

"We congratulate Coach (Larry) Brown and his basketball squad," Judith A. Ramaley, executive vice chancellor for the Lawrence campus, said in a statement. "We are delighted with their success and we appreciate the fine way they have represented the University of Kansas."

A rally welcoming the Jayhawks back to Lawrence is scheduled for 1 p.m. today at Allen Fieldhouse. A parade through downtown Lawrence was planned by officials for April 13.

Arizona Senators impeach Mecham

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — The Arizona Senate convicted Gov. Evan Mecham on Monday of attempting to thwart a death-threat investigation and misusing funds, making him the first U.S. governor impeached and removed from office in 59 years.

Acting Gov. Rose Mofford, a Democrat, became governor the moment the gavel fell to close the 21-9 vote to convict on the first charge, obstruction. Two-thirds of the 30-member, GOP-controlled Senate was needed for conviction.

The Senate then convicted the first-term Republican 26-4 on a charge he misused $80,000 from a protocol fund by loaning it to his auto dealership.

Mecham, who took notes in the Senate chamber as lawmakers voted, showed little emotion.

"Well, they don't like my politics. So we've finished a political trial," said the 63-year-old Mecham, smiling as he left the Senate chamber. Asked what he intended to do next, Mecham said, "We'll decide tomorrow."

A motion to bar Mecham from ever holding state office in Arizona received 17 votes in favor and 13 against, falling three votes short of the required two-thirds majority.

"The citizens of this state will not tolerate this evil insensitivity," said Democratic Sen. Jesus "Chuy" Higuera, who voted to convict the first-term Republican.

Republican Sen. Jan Brewer said she felt Mecham "made a serious error," but she added, "I do not think it is sufficient to remove him from office."

The ringing last words of final argument from Paul Eckstein came moments after Mecham's lawyer demanded acquittal, telling the 30 senators, "There are not sufficient facts or law to find that Evan Mecham is an evil man."

"Let the people decide," said attorney Jerris Leonard, urging senators to acquit Mecham and let him defend his office in a May 17 recall election. Mecham also faces a trial on criminal charges.

The arguments by both sides addressed two specific charges — an allegation that the governor attempted to obstruct an investigation of an alleged death threat by a staff member and a second that he misused $80,000 from a protocol fund by loaning it to his car dealership.

The vote ended a year-and-a-half of controversy that shook staunchly Republican Arizona and brought ridicule and criticism from politicians, comedians and the comic strip "Doonesbury."

Mecham, a former auto dealer who was elected in 1986 on his fifth try in a three-way race with 40 percent of the vote, had offended blacks, Jews, women and others with offhand remarks and official actions.

Mofford, in a statement, declared "the end of some difficult times in Arizona," and urged residents to purge "our hearts of suspicion and hate."

"Today none of us are Republicans, none of us are Democrats," she said. "We are all Arizonans. Let us go forward together as Arizonans."

Error forces Planning Board to table two petitions

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

Members of the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board tabled two controversial rezoning petitions Monday night after it was discovered a mixup had occurred in the rezoning process.

The mixup could have resulted in legal problems, said Board Chairwoman Eleanor Brent.

Tabled were petitions to rezone tracts of land along McDowell Creek Road southeast of Manhattan from a general agricultural district to a heavy industrial district.

The first petition was a request by Lazelle and Virginia Guliford to rezone a .87-acre tract of land. The plot, upon which their house is built, is sandwiched along the Kansas River between Shilling Construction Inc. and Manhattan Concrete Services.

The second petition was a request by Michael Oppy, owner of A-1 Auto Parts, located north of the Guliford residence, to rezone the tract from agriculture to heavy industry. Since the two petitions were related, both were tabled because of information revealed at the meeting.

Several residents living near McDowell Creek Road attended the hearing to speak out in opposition to the rezoning. They complained that the company that would be buying the Guliford property — Shilling Construction Inc. — was polluting their air and should not be allowed to expand.

"The noise is intolerable and the smell is intolerable," said Susan Mermis, who lives up the hill from Shilling.

"It's gotten to where we can hardly stand it," said Alice Fina, who also lives uphill from Shilling. "(Mike) Shilling promised us in 1985 that he was a small company and wouldn't expand, but he has."

Lou Fina, professor of microbiology, showed board members a recent study prepared by a Kansas City, Mo., firm that stated "the land should be used for agriculture or similar unintensive uses because of its location in the 100-year floodplain."

A 100-year floodplain is an area along a river which may be covered by floodwater on the average of once every 100 years.

Fina asked Riley County Planner Monty Wedel how much the survey cost. Wedel said $40,000.

"Are we going to take that $40,000 and put it into a sinkhole?" Fina said. "I think there should be a clear signal to any developer from this survey — paid for by my tax dollars and yours, too — that the area should be kept as agriculture."

Fina said his real estate property has been devalued twice by county assessors because of the noise and pollution from Shilling's

Head-on crash kills local motorcyclist

By Erwin Seba
Staff Writer

Riley County Police expect to conclude today their investigation into Manhattan's first traffic death of the year.

Thomas Vinyard, 31, of Manhattan, died at 3:27 p.m. Monday at The Saint Mary Hospital from injuries received when the motorcycle he was driving collided head-on with a car in the southbound lane of Seth Child's Road.

Vinyard was traveling north on Seth Child's Road when he swerved into the southbound lane to avoid a three-car accident at the intersection of Shuss and Seth Child's roads, said Capt. Nick Edvy of the Riley County Police Department.

In the southbound lane, Vinyard crashed head-on into a car driven by Regina Hopwood of Milford, Kan., Edvy said.

Hopwood was also injured when her windshield was shattered in the collision. Hopwood's condition was not released by Irwin Army Community Hospital at Fort Riley, where she was transferred following treatment at The Saint Mary Hospital.

Edvy said no charges have been filed in the case, but that RCPD officers would confer with Riley County Attorney William Kennedy today to determine if charges are warranted.

The three-car accident began when a car driven by Mineous Maxley stopped in the northbound lane to turn left from Seth Child's Road onto Shuss Road, Edvy said.

The second car, driven by Cynthia Kufahl, stopped behind Maxley's car, he said. The third car, driven by Sara Hansen, braked and moved to the right hand shoulder of the northbound lane, Edvy said.

Vinyard, driving behind Hansen, swerved to the left in order to avoid hitting Hansen's car. As he was swerving, Hansen's left front fender struck the right side of Kufahl's car, causing it to move into Vinyard's path, Edvy said.

Vinyard's motorcycle glanced off the left front fender of Kufahl's car before colliding with Hopwood, Edvy said "a lot" of traffic violations and accidents have occurred in the section of Seth Child's Road where Monday's crash took place.

Business resumes in Panama

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Hundreds of shops and stores reopened to little business in Panama City on Monday, ending a two-week strike that failed to remove Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's grip on this tense nation.

As the capital began regaining a semblance of normalcy, the United States prepared to send an additional 1,300 military personnel to Panama. The Reagan administration said the troops, scheduled to start arriving today, would help safeguard the lives and property of American citizens.

The U.S. State Department said U.S. Ambassador Arthur Davis suffered "deliberate harassment" when his limousine was chased for two miles Sunday by a Panamanian military patrol car.

The Panamanian government denied the charge, but did admit that the ambassador's car had been tailed in "strictly a police matter."

Justice Minister Rodolfo Chiari de Leon said the incident occurred when a patrol spotted "an exaggerated display of automatic arms carried by civilian elements traveling in three vehicles" that followed the ambassador.

Bargain hunters race to mailbox

BOSTON — The jump in postal rates brought bargain hunters out in force to take advantage of their last chance at mailing 22-cent first-class letters.

Officials said letters that show up Monday with 22 cent stamps will probably get a day of amnesty because of the cost of returning them all to senders.

"It's just not feasible to do something like that," said Central Square Superintendent Edmund Powers.

Large lobster returning home

PORTLAND, Maine — A 25-pound lobster with claws the size of baseball mitts that was saved from becoming an Easter dinner arrived in Maine on Monday on the final leg of a roundabout journey back to the sea.

Maine marine officials gently placed "Shirley," a male estimated at 40 to 125 years, and a 19¾-pound companion lobster into a 600-gallon tub of icy saltwater after their flight from Philadelphia. Freed from their ice-packed travel boxes, the lobsters immediately began moving their giant claws around.

"Very good, he's moving around already. That's a good sign," Col. Robert Fogg, chief of the Bureau of Marine Patrol of the Maine Department of Marine Resources, said of Shirley. "A real weak lobster would be very lifeless."

State may require drug testing

TOPEKA — The House Federal and State Affairs Committee endorsed a bill Monday that would allow the state to mandate drug testing for the governor, the attorney general, cabinet officials and all state employees authorized to carry firearms.

A Senate committee had removed the governor and other high-ranking officials from the bill, but the House committee put them back.

The bill, requested by Gov. Mike Hayden, is part of the state's effort to stop drug use among state employees.

It would allow the state director of personnel services to test all people applying for "safety sensitive" jobs and to test current employees if they're suspected of using illegal drugs. "Safety sensitive" positions include prison guards and law enforcement officers such as Kansas Highway Patrol troopers.

Galen Davis, the governor's special assistant for drug and alcohol abuse, has said the state should test employees in "safety sensitive" positions because they can endanger other people if impaired by drugs. Hayden requested that he and his staff be included to set themselves up as an example of a drug-free workplace, Davis said.

The bill would allow the testing but doesn't set any guidelines how it should be done.

However, Davis has recommended that the state inform job applicants they will be tested, keep test results confidential and offer rehabilitation programs for employees who test positive.

Louisiana roaches win race

For the past two years, Louisiana contenders have taken two of the top three places in the Bundy 500 race, named for the Earlham College dormitory where it takes place and the Indianapolis car race.

The roaches started moving north from this southeastern Lousiana area in 1986 when a local dentist began shipping them to his daughter, Marcy Wood, 19, then a freshman at the Richmond, Ind., college.

"We have steam tunnels that run all under the campus. That's where most people catch their roaches," said Wood.

Farmers plant less acreage

TOPEKA — Kansas farmers have planted, or intend to plant, less acreage to all major crops this year than last year, Kansas Agricultural Statistics said Monday.

Wheat acreage planted last fall totaled 10.2 million acres, down 5 percent from the 10.7 million acres planted for the 1987 crop when Kansas harvested 366.3 million bushels of wheat.

That is Kansas' smallest wheat acreage since 1971, KAS said.

State farmers also are expected to plant 3.9 million acres of sorghum, a 5 percent reduction from 1987; 1.25 million acres of corn, down 4 percent, and 2.0 million acres of soybeans, down 7 percent.

Correction

Due to a reporter's error, a quote was incorrectly attributed in a story about the KSU Childcare Cooperative in Friday's Collegian. The quote, "I would be reluctant to say right now that we'll raise everyone's salary by even 10 cents per hour," should have been attributed to Tom Frith, director of the Department of Housing, instead of Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

Shultz, Shamir keep U.S. peace plan alive

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Secretary of State George P. Shultz on Monday sidestepped differences with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir on a Middle East peace conference and kept a U.S. peace plan alive by focusing on Palestinian self-rule.

"We do have a sense of movement," a senior U.S. official told reporters after Shultz met separately with Shamir, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

A senior Israeli defense official, however, said the government remained deadlocked and the only way to gain acceptance of the plan would be for Shultz to persuade King Hussein of Jordan to accept it.

Shultz will hold talks with Hussein in Amman today, return to Jerusalem with a report for Israeli leaders and shuttle back to the king on Wednesday.

The U.S. plan calls for three years of self-rule, but not statehood, for the 1.5 million Palestinian living in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. Negotiations on an overall settlement would open in December.

Although Shultz set a mid-March deadline for a reply, Israel, Jordan and Syria have all held back — neither accepting nor rejecting the U.S. plan.

After Shultz met with Shamir for two hours, a spokesman for the prime minister said they were still in disagreement over a Middle East peace conference and talks Shultz held with two members of the Palestine National Council in Washington nine days ago.

But the spokesman, Avi Pazner, said there was "more convergence" between Shultz and Shamir on Palestinian self-rule and an overall settlement.

Similarly, Peres said after his two-hour session with Shultz that he believed "we moved forward even if the road is still long. We went beyond the international conference."

Peres told reporters: "We talked about the substance and form of an interim agreement."

Shultz, meanwhile, said he was encouraged that "we have now engaged in this initiative in the important aspects of its content, namely direct face-to-face negotiations."

Despite reassurances from Shultz that the United States would stand by Israel, Shamir contends an international conference would offer a dangerous opportunity for the Soviet Union to get in the way of direct negotiations with the Arabs and impose an unacceptable settlement.

Shultz, on his second visit to the area in a month, also offered assurances the United States would oppose a Palestinian state and counter efforts to force Israel to retreat to its pre-1967 borders.

However, he emphasized Sunday that negotiations must be based on U.N. Security Council Resolution 242, which calls on Israel to yield West Bank and Gaza territory.

In Amman, meanwhile, more than 500 Moslem fundamentalist students, chanting "Shultz the devil should go home," burned U.S. and Israeli flags in a protest rally Monday on the Jordan Unversity campus.

There were other demonstrations in the Arab kingdom, where Palestinians are in the majority. Shultz's plan would include Palestinians approved by the Palestine Liberation Organization in a joint delegation with Jordan.

Syria, the PLO and Egypt have called for a direct role for the PLO in the negotiations, while Hussein's position is fuzzy. According to some U.S. accounts, he has accepted the idea of a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation.

But reporters traveling with Shultz last month to Amman were told Jordan wanted PLO participation.

Reagan administration overturns Meese's choice

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration on Monday scuttled Attorney General Edwin Meese III's plans to designate a Justice Department deputy as the new head of the criminal division, department sources said.

James I.K. Knapp, 45, a deputy assistant attorney general in the department's tax division, had been designated by Meese last week to be the new replacement for Assistant Attorney General William Weld.

Weld resigned out of concern that the 11-month-old criminal investigation of Meese was hurting the Justice Department's operations and image.

The criminal division oversees almost all federal criminal investigations. The Meese probe is being conducted separately by an independent counsel.

The White House on Friday held up Meese's plans to announce the replacements for Weld and at least one other aide, pending completion of background checks.

It could not immediately be determined why Knapp's name was being removed from consideration, and a reporter's telephone messages left at Knapp's home were not immediately returned.

Separately, a Justice Department source said that a possible replacement for Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns also was having second thoughts about taking the position. He is Arlin Adams, a Philadelphia lawyer who stepped down last year from the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals after 17½ years on the federal bench.

Some of Adams' associates were trying to talk him out of accepting the post, said the source.

Senate to discuss allocations

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will meet at 6 tonight in the Union Big Eight room to continue consideration of tentative allocations for the upcoming year.

Doug Folk, junior in electrical engineering and Senate chairman, said Senate would finish with U-LearN allocations and move on to four more organizations scheduled for tonight's agenda.

Senate will also consider allocations for Legal Services, the Mexican American Council of Students, the Association of Adults Returning to School and Students Against Driving Drunk.

Legal Services had requested an increase in the salary for Dianne Urban, student's attorney.

Urban, who is also head of Legal Services, said, "The big cut was in the salary. The salary has really been seriously under-funded for many years," and that is the main reason we asked for an increase, she said.

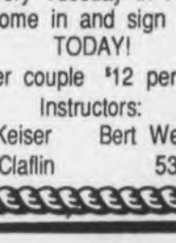
Legal Services requested a salary of $26,940 and the Senate Finance Committee's recommendation is for a salary of $24,828.

The Mexican American Council of Students sought an allocation for honorariums of $1,000. The Finance Committee is recommeding MACS receive $600.

"Our group has expanded in the past couple of years, so we need to increase our monies to effectively work," said Judy Wolf, senior in marketing and president of MACS.

The Mexican American Council of Students requested an operating budget of $456.20 and the Finance Committee has recommeded a budget of $225.

The Association of Adults Returning to School requested $519.67 and the Finance Committee has recommended AARTS receive $267.95.



It also doesn't appear that Students Against Driving Drunk will receive the monies they had requested. SADD had originally requested $1,156.67 and the Finance Committee's recommendation is for $276.80.

Confusion over holiday leaves students stuck

The discussion of whether or not to cancel classes Monday was a controversial one among many people. Many students who had classes that could not be missed Monday didn't go home for Easter and opted to remain in Manhattan.

Unfortunately, there were students and faculty who did not know until late last week that Monday was not a University holiday despite previous announcements that it was. It is logical, then, that many of them stayed in Manhattan last weekend.

For those who did stay, it must have come as quite a surprise that most of the student-oriented facilities on campus were closed even though no official University holiday existed. University officials did not set any policy or criteria for keeping student-oriented services open. Therefore, managers of these services were forced to decide this for themselves.

The K-State Union opened its ground floor Sunday so students returning early would have a place to study. It's a good thing it was open, because Farrell Library was closed.

A library official said Farrell always closes on Easter weekend but opens the night before classes resume as a service to returning students. The fact that the library was closed Sunday evening was an oversight.

If the Union had to plan this weekend over again, an official said it would still close the Stateroom but would open the ground floor on Saturday.

A library official said Farrell would have had limited hours on Saturday, and opened late Sunday afternoon.

These facilities should have had some input from University officials as to the number of students expected to stay on campus over the weekend. Even if University officials had no idea how many students would be here, they were certainly aware that because Monday was not a holiday there would be some students unable to make the trek home for Easter.

It seems a lack of planning helped to unnecessarily complicate some students's weekends.

Mecham circus finally halted by state Senate

The Evan Mecham circus has finally ended in Arizona.

Following an impeachment trial, the Arizona Senate voted Monday to impeach Mecham and make him the ex-governor of the state. He became the first U.S. governor impeached and removed from office in 59 years.

Mecham was convicted of attempting to thwart a death-threat investigation and misusing funds. After being convicted on that charge, the GOP-controlled Senate then convicted the Republican on a charge he misused $80,000 from a protocol fund by loaning it to his auto dealership.

In what will likely go down as one of the greatest political understatements ever, Mecham declared: "Well, I guess they don't like my politics."

You're right, Ev.

But objections to the first-term governor went beyond not liking his politics. Mecham probably managed to offend more people state- and nationwide than any other governor in recent memory.

Among those victims of Mecham's careless and vile tongue have been blacks, women and homosexuals. The Arizona Senate's vote was a victory for all of them and those Arizonans who have had to live as laughingstocks of the rest of the nation for the past 1½ years.

Although the Senate's vote was commendable, the body did make one error when it struck down a motion to bar the 63-year-old Mecham from ever holding state office in Arizona again.

But suffice it to say that if Mecham is ever voted back into office in any state, those who put him there deserve whatever he will surely do.

Comfortably apathetic

Americans want to avoid world's horrors

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

Watch the 6 or 10 p.m. news and you'll see scenes of public expression met with violent repression in countries all over the world. Whether in South Africa, South Korea, Haiti or Israel, the situation is sickeningly similar: men, women and even children beaten or killed for openly disagreeing with governmental authorities.

And what is the reaction of the American television-viewing public? In general, reactions can be grouped under two distinct labels: apathetic or horrified.

The apathetic ones are those who yawn and crack open another Coors Light as Dan Rather narrates the scene of a West Bank or Soweto riot. Why should they bother to care? A couple of dozen people dying in some remote country halfway around the world is not going to affect their lifestyle in the least.

A subdivision of this group is those people known as the hypocrites. They are the ones who may seem to care a bit but who quickly forget the issues when asked to defend their views or explain their opinions. This subgroup usually includes cynics, younger Republicans and closet Democrats. Both the larger group and the subgroup show little concern when evidence is presented that our government collaborates with repressive military regimes.

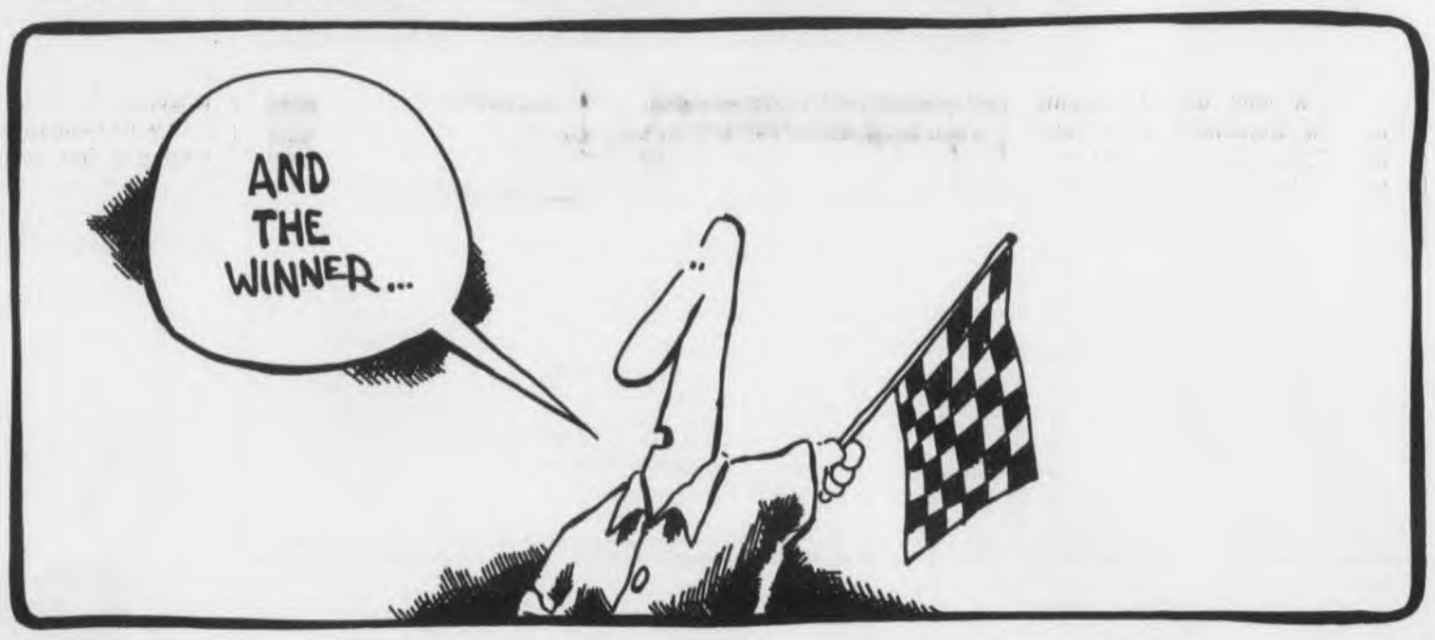
Then there is the second group: the horrified ones. These are conscientious citizens who gasp and shudder at the sight of police and army brutality on the news, shooing their children off to bed and unable to believe such a thing could ever happen. These people, like the apathetic ones and the hypocrites, usually associate such tacky displays of violence with backward Third World countries and thank God the mighty U.S. of A. isn't like that. And when told that the United States in fact supports many of these authoritarian regimes, they either shrug in disbelief or admit to knowing very little about politics, leaving "complicated" matters to those whose job it is to take care of such problems: their elected representatives in Washington D.C..

But what of those who fit neither category — people who actually care enough to voice their complaints to the media and government? What about those who are not afraid to show their contempt for disastrous government policies, no matter how unpopular that may be? Unfortunately, this third group must be almost microscopic in comparison to the first two. How else could one justify the mass acceptance of American foreign policy, although it shows a blatant disregard for the condition of human life in many developing countries?

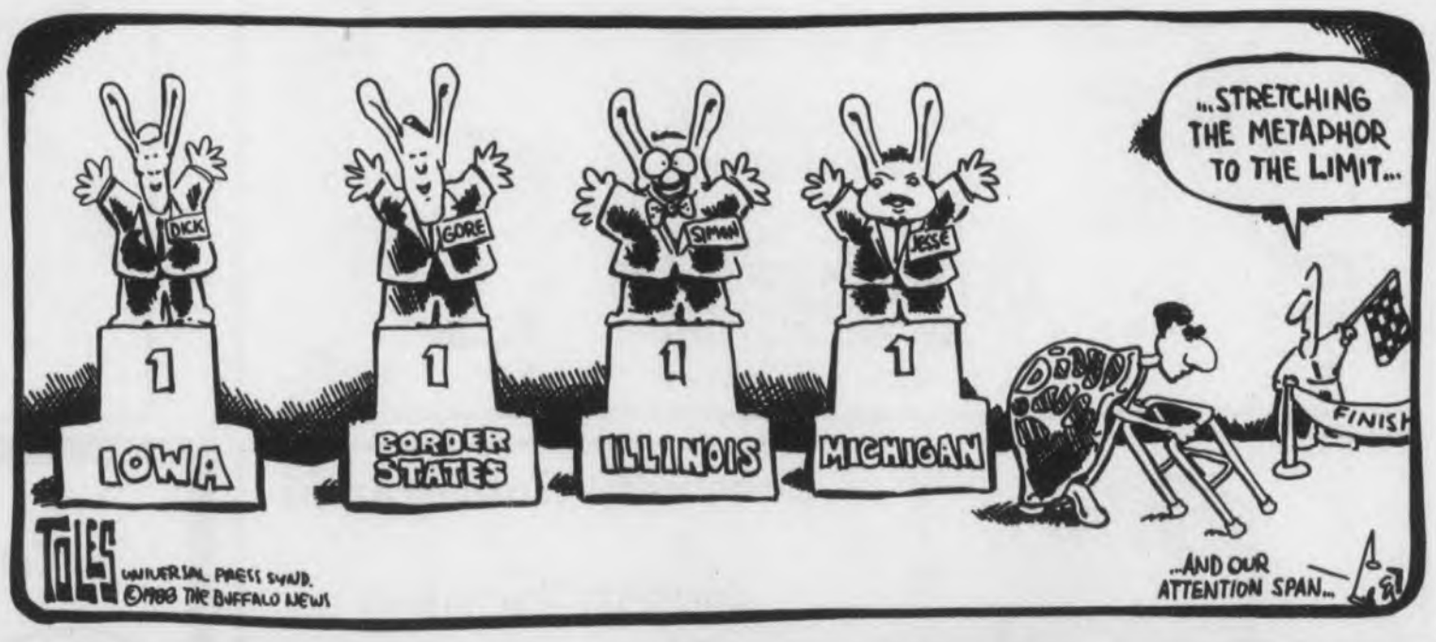
There are many who would contest the above views, terming them radical or offensive to the feelings of the many who actually do care that our tax dollars are contributing to the torture and death of thousands worldwide. Many would even argue that our government does not ever consciously intend to assist repressive governments. Politics are just awfully complicated and cannot be broken down into good and bad, black and white — there are a lot of gray areas with which only well-informed politicians are supposed to deal.

In the minds of these people, the United States is the only true democracy, the only country fit to preach its personal formula for freedom, justice and equality for all. If our foreign policy is not perfect, it is also not designed to harm anybody.

How then can we justify sending arms to Central American terrorists and others around the world? Or what about arms, economic assistance and credibility to racist governments — like South Africa and Israel — that deny ethnic or religious groups their basic human rights? Does a government that really cares about the welfare of foreign peoples back a cocaine-smuggling millionaire as the ruler of Panama for years, only dropping support after he becomes too embarrassing to stomach?



The list of blunders our government has committed in the name of democracy is very long indeed. From Marcos to Botha to Noriega, our foreign policy has almost always had as its main objective protecting the status quo, regardless of what form of slime was in power. Strengthen the military, pay it well and make sure it controls the government, and the situation will remain the same. Communists won't crawl up to our borders, and our private companies can comfortably reap their profits in foreign countries.



But what about the people in these countries? What about the unfortunate millions who have to live under tyrannical dictators or authoritarian racist regimes? Do they weigh nothing on the scale of priorities of our foreign policy?

Despite the cynicism inherent in the above paragraphs, not all hope is lost for America or the methods with which it deals with foreign nations. However, certain changes in the priorities of our foreign policy must be made.

Perhaps we could take profits and stability off the top of the list and, instead, replace them with basic human rights and equality. Maybe we could forget about producing and exporting more weaponry and concentrate instead on feeding starving children. Maybe we could even work on producing fewer weapons for ourselves and make this planet a place where humanity doesn't have to worry about being extinct in one stupid day.

Would that be too much to hope for?

Save co-op

Editor,

In reference to the administration's decision concerning the KSU Childcare Cooperative, I can only say that the attitude of Juli Kramer seems to have infected Anderson Hall. Once again, the view that low-income parents should not expect quality child care has been voiced.

Concurrent with the denial of adequate funding was the release of a new version of the fee schedule to go into effect June 1, 1988. Handed to KSUCC by the department of Housing, it dealt a stunning blow to those in the low-income group, doubling the amount of increase which was originally announced. In the case of infant care, the fees have risen so drastically they have become prohibitive.

It seems that this is exactly the purpose of the new schedule. To the best of my knowledge, at least 102 and possibly as many as 124 of the almost 200 families at KSUCC will be adversely affected. However, the bearing this will have on enrollment will be largely unknown until the fall semester.

I'm quite sure Mr. Robert Krause was sincere in wishing he had shut the co-op down in 1987. Perhaps that is still the intent of the administration in a back-door sort of way. But I urge everyone concerned with the issue of quality child care to support KSUCC in its struggle to continue.

Students especially should heed this plea, because contrary to some opinion, not only the minority of students with children would benefit. The wider issue of child care in this country is one that most will face in their future. When a university publicly states the low value it places on child care, it certainly sends a clear message to the private business sector, which is now facing the demand for quality child care for employees.

Here at K-State, the demand exists and the KSUCC could serve a great deal more students, faculty and staff if funding were provided to lower the fees to an affordable level. Let's act as a role model for child care rather than try to make the problem go away.

Co-op referendum

Editor,

The Student Senate and administration of our University has dealt with one of the hottest issues it will face this semester, and possibly this year. That is, who should fund our childcare cooperative? Both have basically shown no or little support. I believe there is one last step to be taken before such a vital issue to our campus gets placed in its casket. Let's press for a referendum and allow the student body a chance to voice support for the issue. After all, don't you think an issue that concerns and benefits our students in the end should be decided by them? I think so.

Lack of break

Editor,

I am writing this letter in concern of the lack of an official K-State Easter break. My family lives 300 miles from Manhattan, and although there was no break for Easter, I did go home to be with my family for this important holiday. We attended church on Sunday, and our pastor gave a sermon on the importance of Easter. I do not mean to preach, but to make my point I will use what he said in his sermon.

Our pastor told us that Easter is a very important event because this is the time Jesus actually forgave us for our sins. I realize that some people do not celebrate Easter as a holiday, but if one were to take a poll of the campus population, I presume a significantly larger amount of people would opt for an Easter break.

I have an idea: For those who wish to observe Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, why can't we satisfy both? Why don't we have a day reserved for King's birthday and a day reserved for Easter? The University could simply prolong the semester one more day, and instead of the last day of classes being May 4, it would be May 5. Think about this. Doesn't it make sense ... a compromise?

Act to protect safety 'whistleblowers'

By Chad L. Sanborn
Staff Writer

Four committees in the U.S House of Representatives are expected to begin consideration of a bill introduced by Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., which would further protect nuclear power plant employees reporting safety problems from retaliation by plant management.

If passed, the bill would extend the time limit for employees who feel they have been harrassed or fired for reporting safety problems to file a complaint with the secretary of labor.

Titled the Nuclear Whistleblowers Protection Act Amendments of 1988, it proposes extending the filing time limit from 30 days to one year.

"With this legislation, Rep. Slattery wanted to create an environment where employees feel they can come forward to report safety problems," said Cynthia Rapp, a spokeswoman for Slattery's Washington D.C. office.

When reporting safety or procedural problems, employees have three options. They can report to the plant management, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission or the secretary of labor, she said, adding that reporting problems to other institutions, such as the media, is not a breech of security.

The bill, which Slattery introduced on March 2, has been sent to the Energy and Commerce, Armed Services, Science and Technology and Interior committees. Although no hearings on the bill have been scheduled yet, Rapp said she expects the committees to put it on their calenders later this spring.

Rapp said the bill, if it becomes law, would protect and strengthen the employee's right to file not only with the Labor Department, but also in state courts for civil action against the power plants.

"Before, this was not clear," Rapp said. "Federal judges have not ruled consistently on (the right to file for civil action in a state court)."

Rapp cited the case of Ron Masters, a former welding inspecter at the Wolf Creek Nuclear Power Plant in Burlington.

Masters was fired after he reported safety problems with some welding at the plant to management officials. Thinking he was just being laid-off until plant managmers could complete an investigation into the problems, Rapp said Masters failed to file in either a state court or with the Labor Department within the 30-day time limit.

Although the NRC confirmed Masters' claims, his case was never brought before the secretary of labor due to his failure to file within the time limit. Furthermore, he could not file in a state court because his case was not brought before the Labor Department, she said.

A U.S. District Court judge has since ruled that Masters can take his case to a state court, Rapp said.

Before proposing the bill, Slattery toured the Wolf Creek plant. Although there were some safety-related problems at the plant in the fall of 1987, Slattery said he believes it is "one of the safest nuclear power plants in the country."

Some of the problems included an employee's error causing the plant to shut itself down, mistakenly sending radioactive trash to a county landfill and failure to use correct clean-up procedures.

Ronn Smith, spokesman for Wolf Creek, said the problems were of a managerial and procedural nature, not safety.

"None (of the problems) had a direct threat on public safety. For instance, the amount of trash sent to the dump was so small that it posed no threat," he said.

Although Smith said Wolf Creek management shares Slattery's concern for assuring safe operations, it thinks the extended time limit could do more damage than good.

"Employees are encouraged to point out problems," he said, "but I'm not sure if the extension would encourage people to report them in a timely manner."

However, Rapp contends that the one-year time limit is necessary to ensure a safe working environment in nuclear power plants.

"Workers are the first to be aware of violations or safety problems," she said. "Their being able to come forward is essential to keeping power plants safe."

Police uncover third skull in Kansas City back yard

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Police sifted through the yard Monday of a man charged with sexual abuse following the discovery of three skulls and photographs depicting torture and a young man who appears to be dead.

Police said a skull believed to be that of a human was found Sunday buried in the yard of Robert Berdella, 39. Two other skulls, one believed to be human and the second described by an archaeologist as an artifact, were found in Berdella's three-story house Saturday.

Berdella was arrested Saturday after a naked 23-year-old man wearing a dog collar fled from the midtown Kansas City house and asked for help from people in the neighborhood, police said. He said he had been beaten, tied and gagged in a bedroom.

Sgt. Laura Mulloy, a police spokeswoman, said a variety of pictures, including some showing the captive hitchhiker being tortured and another showing a young man who may have been dead, were found in the house.

But a long day of digging through Berdella's back yard, about 25 feet wide by 50 feet long, produced no new remains, Mulloy said. Clusters of onlookers lined the quiet residential street as a dozen policemen and recruits used shovels and a backhoe to dig up the yard.

"The neighborhood is in shock over this," said Astrid Bebuhr, who lives across the street from Berdella. "There was no indication that somebody was being tortured in his home."

Police found a white metal box filled with feathers buried in the yard. But Mulloy said officers did not know the significance of the discovery or the type of feathers in the box.

While Berdella was waiting in a Jackson County courtroom to be arraigned Monday, a man whose son has been missing for four years rushed into the room and began beating Berdella with his fists before police subdued him, said Jackson County Prosecutor Albert Riederer.

Paul Howell, 44, told a reporter after police let him go that his son, Jerry Howell, was reported to have been seen with Berdella before disappearing in July 1984. His son was 19 years old at the time.

Howell said he has been following the case for years but lacked proof of any connection with Berdella.

Berdella was not seriously injured in the attack and later pleaded innocent to seven counts of forcible sodomy, one count of felonious restraint and one count of first-degree assault, Riederer said.

Staff/Brett Hacker

Michael Finnegan, professor of social anthropology and social work, leaves the house of Robert Berdella Monday afternoon in Kansas City, Mo. Investigators called on Finnegan to help identify human remains uncovered Sunday in Berdella's back yard.

Gunmen kill 33 in Colombia

By The Associated Press

BOGOTA, Colombia — Hooded gunmen encircled about 500 people at a Easter festival in a village plaza and fired for half an hour at the screaming crowd, killing 33 and wounding eight, a survivor said Monday.

Right-wing death squads in Colombia usually wear hoods. The attackers at the small village of Mejor Esquina in northern Colombia also were wearing army uniforms, frequently used by death squads.

A survivor, Segundo Benitez, said he counted the dead and wounded in the Sunday massacre. He said a brother, two nephews and a cousin of his were among the dead. Benitez said there were 10 to 15 attackers.

"The one in charge shouted 'Kill everyone you can!'" Benitez said in an interview.

"They just shot at everybody, at those who were dancing and those who tried to run away.

"They made a lot of the people lie down on the ground and then shot them in the head."

Benitez said men, women, old people and children were among the victims.

"AIDS is a serial killer that strikes men and women" is one of many metaphors used to describe Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

Four K-State instructors will address the impact of AIDS on American culture at a pre-convocation forum at 7:30 tonight in Union 212.

The forum is a prelude to Wednesday's convocation to be delivered by Susan Sontag on "Illness as Metaphor: Society's Response to Disease, Including Cancer and AIDS."

"Susan Sontag is first and foremost a writer," said Leland Warren, professor of English.

Sontag's primary value as a public figure is her concern with the use of language, he said.

"I will essentially discuss what her writing is like, what her concerns have been, and what unifies her work," Warren said.

"She brings a sensitivity toward language as a way to define ourselves," he said.

The way metaphors dealing with disease are applied have the effect of distorting them. This in turn has harmful effects on those who have the disease, Warren said.

Sarah Merrill, assistant professor of philosophy, said she will discuss Sontag as a philosopher, the structure of metaphor and its meaning in our culture.

Sontag said disease is encumbered by metaphor, Merrill said. But "metaphors also keep our interest in things," she said.

The problem may lie in the emotional response to metaphor, rather than the metaphor itself.

"(Metaphor) may invoke such a deadly dread that our response to AIDS may be harmful or counterproductive," Merrill said.

The metaphor "may be preventing someone who could be tested ceropositive for the HIV virus from getting tested because of the fear of the disease," she said.

Al Hamscher, professor of history, will discuss Sontag as a research scholar. He will also examine how AIDS doesn't fit the criteria of what society normally associates with an epidemic, he said.

Hamscher will make a few general observations about why people in the 20th century are so frightened and distressed by diseases thought to be incurable, he said.

Jana Hesser, associate professor of anthropology, will raise some issues about how AIDS is different and similar to other infectious diseases.

She will also discuss how those differences and similarities relate to today's response as compared to how people have responded to infectious diseases in the past.

Hesser will not only look at the characteristics of the disease itself, but how people respond to it.

"You can't just look at the characteristics themselves because obviously society is very different today" than it was with past diseases, she said.

Hesser will examine the nature of the disease by discussing its historical, social and environmental factors, she said.

The same speakers — Hamscher, Hesser, Merrill and Warren — will be at the workshop "Responding to Disease: Past and Present" Saturday, sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education.

A videotape of Sontag's convocation will be shown at the workshop.

FDA requests ad changes

Cosmetics promoted erroneously

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration told cosmetic companies Monday that they had 30 days to stop claiming their over-the-counter creams can reverse or retard aging of the skin.

In letters to 22 companies, the FDA effectively cut off discussions that started last spring when the agency warned the manufacturers that some of the claims they were making for their products might subject them to the same kind of regulation applied to drugs.

The latest letter said the time for talking had passed.

John Taylor, associate commissioner for regulatory affairs, said the agency did not believe "that a detailed review or a prolonged discussion regarding individual product labeling is necessary. We hope that you will make the changes in your labeling that are necessary to bring it into compliance with the act and with FDA's stated views."

The Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act defines cosmetics, which can be sold without pre-approval by the FDA, as products intended to cleanse or to beautify superficially.

When the FDA started questioning some claims being made for so-called anti-aging creams, the cosmetic companies said they wanted to work out a cooperative solution. The agency then agreed to a series of time extensions.

Some companies modified their labels, but the FDA said last November it could not accept the labeling claims continuing to appear.

The latest letter said the agency will examine the labeling and promotions of the creams in 30 days and that a product still in "substantial violation" may be subject to immediately regulatory action.

Census Bureau releases report; size of households shrinking

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States has more than 90 million households for the first time, but each contains fewer people than ever, the Census Bureau reported Monday.

The 90,031,000 households in the United States averaged 2.64 members each as of last July 1.

"The reason is, in effect, changes in the age structure," explained Campbell Gibson, a population specialist for the bureau.

Most Americans born in the post-World War II Baby Boom are now in their 20s and 30s, ages during which they are most likely to set up households on their own, he said.

The fact that many are doing so boosted the number of households from 80.4 million in 1980 to 88.8 million in 1986 and past the 90 million mark last summer.

At the same time, the average number of people per household declined from 2.75 in 1985 to 2.65 in 1986 and then to 2.64, Gibson said.

By comparison, the 1970 census found the average household contained 3.14 people. Households averaged more than four people in 1930 and more than five in 1880.

The growing number of ever-smaller households continues a trend, but Gibson pointed out that household growth isn't outpacing population increases as fast as in the 1970s.

The same age factors that are increasing the number of households also occurred then, Gibson said, but in the 1970s the proportion of households in each age group was also growing.

Career fair to inform students about various job opportunities

By The Collegian Staff

Representatives from the fields of sociology and criminal justice will meet from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. today in the Union Ballroom to answer students' questions.

Sponsored by the K-State Society and Criminal Justice Association, the fair is a way to inform students of the jobs available in their fields and what qualifications are necessary.

"There are many different job opportunities in the field, and this will help give students areas to investigate for different jobs they can pursue," said Kirby Daetwiler, junior in sociology and secretary of the Society and Criminal Justice Association.

About 17 agencies, including the FBI, U.S. Customs, Federal Bureau of Prisons, and Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms will have booths during the fair to talk with people interested in employment in the field, Daetwiler said.

This is the first time a job fair for criminal agencies has been scheduled at K-State. Daetwiler said the association modeled today's fair after ones conducted at the University of Nebraska and other universities.

The Society and Criminal Justice Association was started by a group of criminal justice students wanting to organize the students in the department, Daetwiler.

The club has about 20 members and meets once a month.

Union concessions cater to campus demand

Department operates 210 vending machines with budget of $825,000

Staff/Greg Vogel

The vending machines in the Union are some of the largest money-makers of the approximately 210 revenue-producing machines operated by the K-State Union concessions department. The department contributes about $125,000 annually to the Union's revenue.

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

You reach deep into your pocket and, groping, find some lint and a couple of quarters.

Without much thought, the quarters are placed into a familiar slot, where they begin a rattling journey through the innards of a vending machine. A button is pressed, and a satisfying snack is on its way.

This very scene happens hundreds of times daily on campus, where the K-State Union concessions department operates approximately 210 revenue-producing vending machines.

"If it's coin-operated, it's mine," said Bill Wisdom, Union concessions manager.

The concessions department is responsible for all vending machines in residence halls and campus buildings, he said.

The department operates on an annual budget of approximately $825,000 and contributes about $125,000 back into the total Union operation. Since many expenses that are directly involved with the concessions department are figured from the total Union budget, the contributing figure is not a net revenue.

The department had tremendous growth between 1978 and 1982 and peaked in the last few years, Wisdom said.

Much of the department's competition comes from convenience stores, and Wisdom said he hopes that prices on campus are below the stores' prices.

However, the concessions department can't compete with discount stores, he said.

"When you can go down to Wal-Mart and buy a 12-pack (of soda) for $2.50, you can't blame (the students)," Wisdom said. "But I do think we compete well with the (vending machine) industry."

Wisdom sees vending machines and concessions as a necessary service.

"They are obviously used, so we are providing for the need," he said.

Wisdom said he has often been accused of being a junk-food distributor.

"It's been a real good year in terms of (the lack of) vandalism. K-State has a very good situation here, and it says something for the quality of the student."

—Bill Wisdom

"But when we provide something more nutritious, it doesn't sell," he said. "You have to give the consumers what they want."

With people becoming more health-conscious, snacks of a more nutritious sort are being considered as a possible future growth area for the department, he said.

"Finding products (of this kind) hasn't been easy," he said.

He said the department is always searching for potential products and services that it doesn't currently provide. However, he doesn't believe new products will ever threaten pop sales — which constitute about 46 percent of total sales — and candy sales.

"I don't think they'll ever dethrone Snickers," he said.

The department purchases much of its merchandise supplies from Vendors Supply of Denver, Colo., a supplier of nearly everything a vendor needs, Wisdom said. Supplies are also purchased directly from manufacturers.

No massive growth is predicted for the department, but enrollment increases and a higher occupancy rate in the residence halls should help, he said.

The department has eight full-time employees: five delivery people, a mechanic, a secretary and the director. Four to six part-time workers are also used for various jobs.

The delivery people — also known as route workers — have assigned routes. Each is responsible for stocking and collecting the money from the machines on his or her route.

In addition to snack and beverage vending machines, the department operates bill changers, microwave ovens and coin-operated copy machines for public use. However, it does not manage the coin-operated copy machines in Farrell Library.

One of the main problems Wisdom is facing, although minor in nature, is use of the microwave ovens. The concessions department provides the ovens for the vending customer's use, but the equipment is also used by individuals to heat food not purchased from the machines, Wisdom said. He gets complaints from people who purchase products from the machines but can't use the ovens because the other people are using them.

"I haven't figured out how to handle this," he said.

Security of the machines and protection against vandalism have not been a problem, Wisdom said.

"It's been a real good year in terms of (the lack of) vandalism," he said. "K-State has a very good situation here, and it says something for the quality of the student."

He said few complaints are received from customers.

"We have a low refund percentage. The department doesn't have to refund (much) money because the machines operate properly, telling us that equipment does work," Wisdom said. "We also respond to service calls quickly."

If people lose money in one of the machines, they can call the concessions department at 532-6588. The department does not refund the money on the spot, but the patron should receive it within one week.

Video stores avoid hassles

By Jackie Brazzle
Staff Writer

It might seem that most video stores would have a problem with people bringing merchandise back late or not at all, but for Manhattan video stores, this hasn't proven to be the case.

Most Manhattan video stores have similar late-return policies. Many also have a policy for items which are not returned at all. However, several area video stores have not found it necessary to invoke either policy very often.

Rentway Inc. has a simple late-return policy: People who return videos, videocassette recorders or videocassette players late are charged the daily rental price for each day they are late.

Heidi Roberts, a saleswoman for Rentway, said the only major problem with late returns are the videos.

"It is not so much a problem with VCRs, but for the videos, 25 percent are late," Roberts said.

The Rentway policy for items not returned at all is slightly different from that of other video stores.

"We usually have a guy who will go to the person's house to get the merchandise if we cannot get them to return the merchandise otherwise," Roberts said.

Cinemagic has a similar late-return policy. If a video or VCR is late, the store will call and remind the person. But Mary Franz, manager of Cinemagic, said late returns are not a big problem for Cinemagic.

"For the most part, people bring in their merchandise on time," Franz said.

If merchandise is not returned, Franz said, certain steps are taken.

"After a certain amount of time," Franz said, "and after we have called, sent letters and done everything we can, we contact the police and report the item(s) as stolen merchandise."

Home Cinema charges the customer 99 cents for late videos and a day's rental price of $4.78 for late VCRs. Linda Ferguson, owner of Home Cinema, said late returns are expected but that Home Cinema has no real problem with non-returned items.

"We have the typical late (returnees), but we don't have too many items which are not returned at all," Ferguson said. "About 99 percent of our customers return their merchandise."

Ferguson said the policy for unreturned items is "pretty well set by the state."

"We have to send the customer a registered letter, and we call several times," she said. "If that doesn't work, we can then report the merchandise as stolen to the police."

Video Exchange charges another day's rental on both videos and VCRs if they are late. However, Diane Heinly, manager of the Video Exchange, said this seldom happens.

Heinly said the problem of unreturned merchandise "has only happened once or twice" at Video Exchange.

Merchandise not returned can mean a lot of lost money for non-members of the store's video club. Non-members are required to pay a $300 refundable deposit on each VCR and a $40 deposit on each video, she said.

In addition to the extra day's rental, customers are not allowed to rent again until they have paid their late charges, Heinly said.

Heinly said she believes all video stores take the risk of late returns or people refusing to pay late charges.

"All video stores are going to run into the problem of someone not returning merchandise, bringing something in late or not paying their charges," she said.

Another video store, National Video, carries policies similar to the others. Joe Johns, owner, said all merchandise is due back by 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday and Sunday by 5 p.m.

Johns said if merchandise is a little late, no charge will be put upon it.

"If it is a few minutes late, we tend to be reasonable about it."

Senate tax bill amended, exempts farm machinery

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate advanced a bill to final action Monday that would exempt manufacturing machinery from the state's 4 percent sales tax after amending the measure to include farm machinery as well.

Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, chairman of the Assessment and Taxation Committee, warned lawmakers that the bill could be in trouble because of all the additional exemptions that have been tacked on, includng the farm machinery exemption.

The Senate also gave tentative approval to a bill that would make organizations meeting a "demonstrated community need" exempt from local property taxes.

The bill might not provide an exemption to certain organizations that had been previously exempt, however, such as the Topeka YMCA.

The bill to exempt manufacturing machinery from the sales tax is designed to make Kansas more competitive with other state's in attracting businesses and to encourage expansion of existing companies. The proposal would cost the state about $16 million in sales tax revenue.

"We know we can't be the lowest tax state in the nation," Kerr said. "But we're trying to avoid areas where we stick out like a sore thumb."

He said only about eight states collect a tax from the sales of manufacturing equipment.

Sen. Dan Thiessen, R-Independence, successfully amended the bill, 22-14, to include farm machinery, which would cost the state another $5.5 million in tax revenue.

"We're one of the few states that still tax farm machinery despite problems in agriculture," Thiessen said.

He added it was unfair to grant manufacturers the exemption but not the farm industry, the state's largest.

"Are we going to treat the biggest industry in Kansas the same way we treat the other ones?" Thiessen asked.

Kerr opposed the amendment, saying the the bill is intended to encourage the expansion of the manufacturing sector in the state and the creation of jobs. He also said farm machinery already is exempt from local property tax, a break the state has given the economically depressed agricultural industry.

Sen. Don Montgomery, R-Sabetha, also amended the bill to ensure that the sale of dogs from commercial kennels would continue to be exempt.

Montgomery said the Department of Revenue mailed several letters to commercial kennels last week seeking audit information. The senator said dogs had been considered agricultural products in the past and thus exempt from the sales tax.

But since the passage of the so-called "puppy mill" bill that requires the state to regulate commercial dog and cat kennels, these animals apparently are considered pets and not farm animals, he said.

Kerr criticized other exemptions tacked on the bill by Senate and House tax committees. Those include exemptions for materials used to prevent soil erosion of agriculture land, drill bits, dynamite, and unrecoverable pipes used in oil and gas production and educational materials purchased by certain non-profit organizations for free distribution .

"I do think the bill is in some jeopardy," Kerr said.

Kerr also amended the bill that would provide a property tax exemption for organizations that offer humanitarian services. His amendment broadened the definition of a tax-exempt service organization, but Kerr warned that some organizations, such as the Topeka YMCA, might not be eligible.

"Tax exemption is a privilege," Kerr said. "We have to draw a line somewhere and that's what this bill does."

Declining dollar a mixed blessing for U.S. economy

Commentary

STEPHEN P. HARRISON
Business Columnist

A factor becoming increasingly important to U.S. investors is international monetary and economic systems. At one time, we could limit our thinking and planning to this country. Today, however, with the United States borrowing capital and consuming goods from foreign countries, particularly Japan, we're finding ourselves coupled with excessive trade and budget deficits as well as decreased savings.

As a debtor nation, we are increasingly finding our economy more and more influenced by other nations. The connection between world markets was made abundantly clear when our stock market plunged last October. Markets around the world felt its impact.

Because of this connection, one of the most publicized international questions today concerns the U.S. dollar's decline in value. What does it mean, and how does it affect us?

Perhaps the clearest analysis of the U.S. dollar was reported by the Associated Press in an interview with David Lund, a trade analyst in the Commerce Department, and David Wyss, an economist for Data Resources Inc.

In simple terms, as the dollar falls, foreign imports cost Americans more money — which hurts U.S. consumers. However, it does help U.S. workers.

For example, according to the figures quoted by the AP, if you wanted to purchase a popular Japanese import auto at the beginning of the 1986 model year, it would have cost $5,448. By the end of the year, that price rose to $5,798, and at the start of the 1987 model year it cost $5,848.

On the other hand, as foreign imports become more expensive, American-made goods become more attractive, both in this country and abroad. This makes our exports cheaper for foreigners and increases demand for U.S. goods, stimulating production and employment in this country.

Lund estimates that for every 1 percent increase in our exports, 39,400 more U.S. jobs are created. Wyss expands this idea by pointing out that if the cheaper dollar could eliminate our trade deficit entirely, about 3.5 million jobs could be added in this country, dropping our unemployment rate to the 5 percent range.

The general feeling among economists is that the dollar had to fall. The disagreement is over how far it had to drop. With a depressed dollar, if import demand in this country continues to rise, even at higher prices, a new surge of inflation could result.

With this dollar/economy relationship in mind, what should we hope for in the future? Economist Don R. Conlan, president of Capital Strategy Research in Los Angeles, Calif., thinks the answer is "a period of slowdown, characterized by a very weak consumer demand partially offset by expanding exports to other countries." If this does happen, Conlan believes any increase in the price of imports could be absorbed by the U.S. system "without causing our hard-won battle against inflation to be lost." Plus, such a condition would help our trade deficit shrink more rapidly.

The conclusions, of course, are economic theory, but they do make sense in light of the dollar and its effect on world markets. The important thing to remember is that the United States is no longer the undisputed leader in the world economies and financial markets.

Consumer archives added to Farrell

By The Collegian Staff

A major addition has been made to the Farrell Library archives with the addition of the Consumer Movement Archives.

The addition, located on the fifth floor of Farrell Library, has been compiled from seven collections donated to the library. The collection consists of tens of thousands of documents, books and tapes.

The collection was started about one year ago with the acquisition of papers written by Richard L.D. Morse documenting consumer activities over the past 30 years.

Morse, who retired last May, contacted the library about accepting his collection and establishing a national repository for consumer movement material. He was a professor of family economics and former head of the Department of Family Economics which has since been merged into two other departments in the College of Human Ecology.

With the acquisition of the Morse papers, Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, sent letters to other consumer organizations asking them if they would like to add their papers to the collection.

The collection gets some of its funding from a $10,000 grant received from the Family Economics Trust. This money is being used to get the collection started and print brochures to inform people about it.

"By creating this consumer movement archives, it creates a central location for consumer movement materials in the nation," said Antonia Pigno, specialized collections archivist at Farrell. "Any serious research done by researchers will have to be done with us."

This is also the only centralized consumer movement collection in the nation and it is expected that inquiries for information in the K-State collection will come both nationally and internationally as the collection grows.

Students plan center's expansion

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

Several fifth-year architecture students have drawn up plans for expanding the Seniors' Service Center to help it provide better services for senior citizens in the community.

The students worked under the direction of Gary Coates, professor in architecture.

"We had to find out what the Seniors' Service Center did, then evaluate what their space needs are," Coates said. "What we learned is that their space is so inadequate we feel they are just limping along in terms of what they need."

"When the building was completed in 1982, we had only three parking spaces," said Marguerite Carlson, director of the center. "We have now acquired 17 more parking spaces but we have an average of 150 people coming to the building every day."

"All the architecture work is very helpful and very stunning," she said.

Coates said the expansion of the center, according to the plans drawn up by the students, would cost anywhere from $1.2 million to $2 million.

One of three student research teams worked on the sociological aspects of the senior citizens.

"They gave their vision looking through an elderly person's view — from the inside looking out — and they created an image of the building," Coates said.

Alternative sites were looked at by the students and the expansion committee at the center. Two sites were finally decided upon as possibilities — the J.C. Penney building and the site where the center was originally built, Coates said.

"It seemed for many reasons best to keep the center where it is. You don't want to duplicate staff and you may begin to have segregation," he said.

The building expansion committee at the center was appointed a year ago and began making plans with Coates at that time, Carlson said.

"The preliminary work is completed, but the demands on funds, both city and county are very great," she said. "They can't provide funds for several years."

Both Carlson and Coates agree a feasibility study needs to be conducted before action can actually be taken to expand the center.

"The main actors in funding the feasibility study would be the city, county and the center," Coates said.

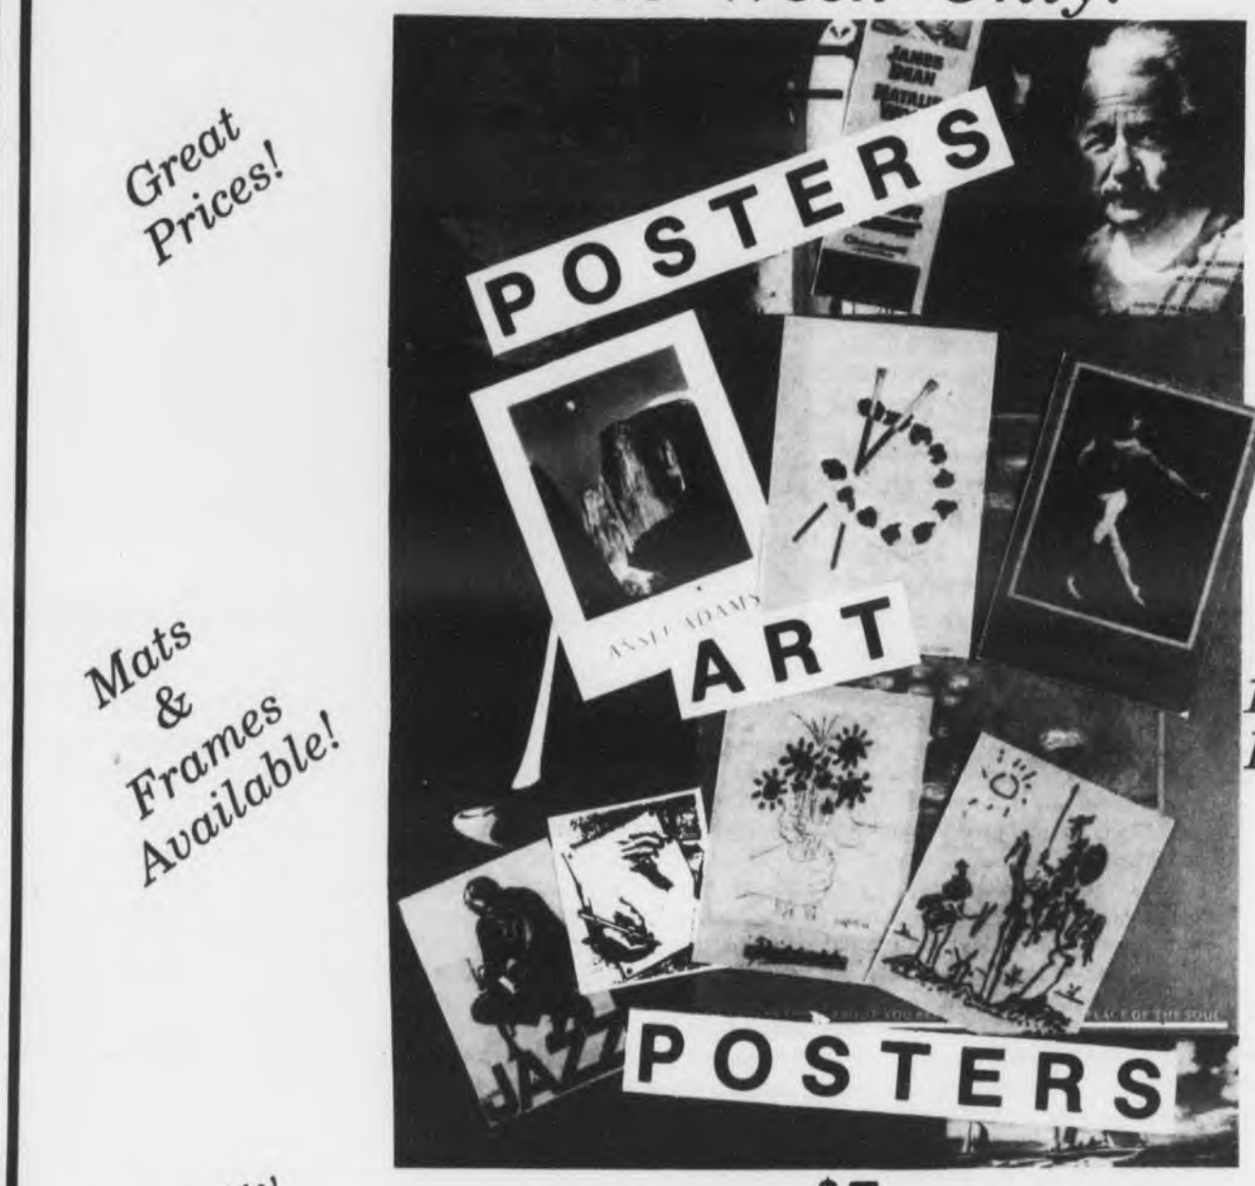
"We're just making a committment to go in for the long haul," he said.

Marathon to aid abused children

By The Collegian Staff

The Kappa Delta sorority will be teeter-tottering today and Wednesday in front of the Union for the prevention of child abuse.

The teeter-totter marathon will raise funds to support the sorority's philanthropy, the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse, said Kay Garvert, senior in bakery science and management.



"Seventy percent of the proceeds will stay in Riley County and 30 percent will go to the national office," Garvey said.

Some of the uses for the funds include sponsorship of programs that provide information on child abuse, distribution of fliers, recruitment of speakers and establishment of homes for troubled children, she said.

"We have asked different living groups and various organizations to contribute $35 for a one-hour teeter-totter ride," Garvey said.

"We have also gone to Aggieville and (Manhattan Town Center) merchants to contribute. Many of them have provided coupons for those who choose to donate," Garvey said.

The goal for the event is set at $1,200. Garvey said $700 of that has already been made.

Art and reason

When Mark and I decided to spend the weekend at his mother's house, I never imagined I would be walking into a mouse's nightmare. There were cats everywhere.

Cat plaques, cat statues, cat clocks, even a cat mat. I couldn't begin to duplicate her collection of kitty litter if I spent a year at a garage sale. Conspicuously absent, however, was a real cat. Strange, I thought, and began to fear that a weekend with cat woman could be a lot less than purr-fect.

But then she came home, and Mark introduced her. She was dressed surprisingly well—no leopard pants. In fact, you could say she was the cat's meow, but I'd rather not.

She offered me a cup of Dutch Chocolate Mint. Now that was something I could relate to. Then she brought it out in the most beautiful, distinctly unfeline china I'd ever seen. As we sipped, I found out that Mrs. Campbell has my same weakness for chocolate, loves the theater as much as I do, but, incredibly, never saw "Cats." So Mark and I are taking her next month.

KU brings down OU with victory in title game

Staff/Brett Hacker

Oklahoma's Stacey King tries to block a shot by the University of Kansas' Danny Manning during the second half of Monday's NCAA championship game in Kansas City. The Jayhawks beat the Sooners, 83-79.

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The one-man team is No. 1.

Danny Manning, the two-time All-American who carried his team all season, scored 31 points and grabbed 18 rebounds Monday night to lead unranked Kansas to its second national championship.

The 83-79 victory over No. 4 Oklahoma made the Jayhawks the losingest champions in NCAA history and gave Manning one last chance in a college uniform.

He responded like a champion.

"It's great to be able to finish my career as national champion in front of the home fans in Kansas City," said Manning, named the tournament's outstanding player.

"I don't think he ever played a better game," said his father, Ed, a Kansas assistant coach.

"It happened because we have great seniors and one super player," said Kansas coach Larry Brown. "I don't even know how to say the words 'national champions,' but I'm going to learn how. I thought if we could get into the last five minutes we'd have a chance."

The Jayhawks, 27-11, played fast and slow and withstood a record-setting 3-point performance from Oklahoma's Dave Sieger to avenge two losses to the Sooners, 35-4, during the regular season.

This was the third championship game played between two teams from the same conference and it was the third this decade in which a heavy underdog managed to win the title.

Kansas, who won the NCAA championship in 1952, was an 8-point underdog. In the first half, the Jayhawks ran with the Sooners, the nation's second-leading scoring team and the Big Eight's regular-season and tournament champions. In the second half, they showed patience, running down the 45-second clock before taking good percentage shots.

The Jayhawks shot 64 percent for the game, 35 of 55, and they cooled off after a first half in which they made 17 of 20 at one point.

In all there were 13 lead changes and 11 ties.

"We were trying to take 20, 25 seconds every time we came down the floor," said Kansas guard Jeff Gueldner. "We tried to slow it down. The first half we played right into their hands and let them score 50 points."

But for all the strategy of Coach Larry Brown it was Manning, the same player who led the Jayhawks all season, through injuries and academic problems.

Milt Newton added 15 points for Kansas, while Kevin Pritchard had 13. Sieger led Oklahoma with 22 points, while Stacey King had 17 and Harvey Grant and Mookie Blaylock 14 each. But King and Grant, the two leading scorers, had just four each in the second half.

Kansas took the lead for good at 69-68 on a hook shot by Manning with 8:50 left in the game. It was the last of seven straight Kansas points scored by the 6-foot-10 center and the play started with Manning standing at midcourt with the ball waiting for Oklahoma to come out and apply pressure.

Manning handed the ball off, cut to the basket and hit the hook.

Chris Piper then hit a jumper to give Kansas a four-point lead. The Sooners tied the score on a free throw by Sieger and a turnaround jumper by Grant with 5:55 left.

Pritchard hit a baseline drive with 5:34 left and the Jayhawks were on the way to the first national championship for a team from west of the Mississippi since UCLA won in 1975.

Manning, who had five steals, sealed the victory with four free throws in the final 14 seconds. He gave Kansas an 81-77 lead with the first two. Scooter Barry had missed the second free throw of a 1-and-1, but Manning tapped the rebound and was fouled by King.

Sieger made seven 3-pointers, six in the first half, to tie the championship game team and individual record set last season by Indiana's Steve Alford.

The game was played in Kemper Arena, site of the Big Eight tournament and just 35 miles from the Kansas campus.

Manning picked up his third foul just 25 seconds into the second half but he never got his fourth.

Sieger made his seventh 3-pointer of the game on his 10th shot from that range but then he went cold.

Sieger missed two in a row on one possession and seemed ready to take a third when the ball bounced back to him. But he hesitated and passed the ball inside to King who scored for a 65-60 lead, Oklahoma's largest of the game.

Brown called a timeout just before King's basket. The Jayhawks scored five straight points to tie the game, the last three coming on a three-point play by Manning.

Kansas made 22 of 31 shots in the first half, 71 percent, including 17 of their first 20.

Sieger was the hot hand for Oklahoma as he made six of eight 3-point

Lovelorn's problems, not baseball, should occupy Dear Abby's column

Commentary

TOM MORRIS
Sports Writer

Move over Brent Musburger. Take a hike John Madden. You're washed up — finished.

Not even the legendary Grantland Rice could stack up to the latest entry into sports journalism: Abigail Van Buren, a.k.a. Dear Abby.

With the approach of opening day of the major league baseball season, "Barbara in Ohio" recently wrote to the syndicated columnist and suggested baseball coaches and managers shouldn't dress in the team's uniforms.

Her reasoning? Most managers and coaches look disgusting in the tight-fitting uniforms with their "potbellies hanging out."

Sandra Day of Bloomington, Ill., wrote in to say: "Baseball would do well to follow the example of other sport team leaders by wearing more dignified apparel. If not a business suit, perhaps some type of identified leisure wear. But, please, lose the tight pants."

Being some sort of a personal expert on the beer belly, I had to laugh at this letter. I wasn't aware that personal appearance had a great deal of influence when selecting a manager or coach.

Martin Shonk of Annapolis, Ill., wrote to Dear Abby and said: "They manage with their brains — not their bellies!"

And I thought the big issue in baseball these days was the hiring of minorities as managers.

Yes, I would have to agree with some of the readers who wrote in and said it would look strange if other coaches wore their team's apparel. Picture basketball coach Lon Kruger in shorts and a tank top, or football coach Stan Parrish in shoulder pads on game day.

But baseball is the only sport where coaches and managers go out on the playing field during the game. The uniform makes it easy for

Kansas next foe for tennis team

By The Collegian Staff

Striving to improve from match to match is a goal K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau has set for the team during the spring season.

After opening up the Big Eight Conference season by trouncing the University of Missouri, 9-0, Saturday, it may be difficult to play much better today against the University of Kansas.

The match with Kansas is set to start at 2 p.m. in Lawrence. It is the first road trip for K-State, 6-4 overall and 1-0 in conference play.

Bietau is hoping the confidence and enthusiasm from the Missouri match carries over into today's match and on through the Big Eight season as every match is important and a letdown during the season can be very costly.

"Each match is important to us," Bietau said. "When you look at how the conference standings are determined — it's a combination of the dual matches and the tournament and all the points are put together between the two."

'Cats fall to OSU, play Tarkio today

From Wire Reports

The Oklahoma State Cowboys completed a four-game sweep of K-State by pounding out an 18-12 victory over the 'Cats in Stillwater Monday afternoon.

The victory was OSU's 19th straight and the loss was the fourth in a row for the Wildcats, 19-10 overall and 0-4 in league play.

The Cowboys, as they did throughout the series, jumped on the Wildcats in the first inning. Travis Law opened the game with a home run, and two batters later, Robin Ventura hit his third in the series.

K-State's starting pitcher, Darryl Rowley, lasted only two-thirds of an inning and allowed four runs.

K-State, however, retaliated immediately afer the big first by OSU. The Wildcats scored four themselves in the top of the second by stringing together six hits off of OSU starter Bryan Gore.

The top-ranked Cowboys erupted again in the bottom of the third. After Ventura's second homer of the game had given O-State a 5-4 lead, Law's second homer of the game, a grand slam, put OSU up 9-4. It was the second grand slam of the series by the Cowboys and the first of two on the day, both of which broke open would-be close games.

K-State continued, however, to battle the defending Big Eight champs. K-State knocked Gore from the game in the sixth inning and closed the gap to 9-7, but left the bases loaded when Law made a diving grab of a line drive off of the bat of second baseman Sean Collins.

Ray Ortiz's three-run homer in the bottom of the sixth inning padded the Cowboys' lead.

K-State made its final run at the Cowboys in the eighth by scoring four runs, including three on a two-out home run by catcher Jeff Hulse, but the Cowboys' Monty Fariss slapped OSU's second grand slam of the game to clinch the victory. The sixth homer came after a two-out error by Collins kept the inning alive for the 26-1 Pokes.

K-State will be back in action today in Manhattan and will play a 1 p.m. double-header with Tarkio starting at 1 p.m. at Frank Myers Field.

Brown 'great coach'; Normore on cloud 9

Manning gives 'Hawks winning edge

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Ed Manning felt like a coach, Darnelle Manning felt like a mom and Jeff Gueldner felt like a champion when Danny Manning went to the free-throw line to decide the NCAA championship.

Manning, the tournament's Most Outstanding Player, made four free throws in the final 14 seconds Monday night, giving Kansas an 83-79 victory over Oklahoma and making everybody in Kansas feel like champs.

"I was whispering for him to take his time and relax," said Darnelle, Danny Manning's mother. "I almost felt as if he could hear me."

On the bench as Manning's brilliant career played out its final seconds was father Ed Manning, a Jayhawks assistant, who made a mighty effort in the postgame frenzy to act like a coach and not a proud father.

"I just wanted Danny to make those free throws," said the elder Manning, who played professionally for Kansas coach Larry Brown in the American Basketball Association. "I guess I felt like a coach at that moment. Everything we planned, everything we dreamed about, was right there and Danny got it done for us. About halfway through this season, we didn't even think we would be in the tournament. Now, look at all this."

One major reason the Jayhawks won was reserve guard Clint Normore, who had seven points and four assists as Kansas negated what everybody thought would be a strong Oklahoma edge at guard.

"We knew they had great guards in (Mookie) Blaylock and (Ricky) Grace," said Normore, a defensive back on Kansas' football team. "But we rotated our guards and got the rhythm of the game right where we wanted it. We didn't discount their guards, but they discounted us, and so did the media.

"I'm not on Cloud 9. I'm way beyond that. This is beautiful."

Gueldner said Brown's strategy worked to perfection in the decisive final moments.

"Coach Brown is such a great coach, I wish I could play for him forever," Gueldner said. "Coach Brown told us they had never been in a close game with five minutes left and if we could get them to that point, anything could happen."

Gueldner said the Jayhawks were not insulted to be eight-point underdogs, especially since the Sooners beat them in both regular-season games between the two teams.

"People said they had better athletes and I guess they probably do. But that doesn't mean they have a better team. One thing they didn't have was Danny Manning."

Cop killer escapes; 2 given police protection

By The Associated Press

MOUNDSVILLE, W.Va. — A judge and a witness were given police protection Monday after a vengeful cop killer described as "educated and cold-blooded" broke out of a maximum security prison along with two other murderers.

Bobby Stacy, 35, and two other inmates serving life sentences without chance of parole escaped from the West Virginia Penitentiary on Sunday.

"My fear is that some police officer is going to get killed, because that's this guy's method. He has nothing to lose, plus it's his history," said Charles Hatcher, the assistant Cabell County prosecutor whom Stacy had threatened.

Stacy, formerly of Columbus, Ohio, was convicted of murder in the 1981 killing of a Huntington police officer. At the time of the slaying, he was free on bail on charges that he shot an Ohio patrolman.

Police immediately assigned protection to some of those who helped convict Stacy. Stacy repeatedly threatened at the 1982 trial to kill the judge and the prosecutor, according to Huntington police Lt. Joe Walker.

"He is educated and cold blooded. That's the worst combination there is," Hatcher said in Huntington, 160 miles south of the prison. He said he had no plans to ask for protection for himself.

Roadblocks were set up on routes leading into Ohio and Pennsylvania, which borders Marshall County, where the prison is, to the east.

State police in West Virginia, Ohio and Pennsylvania, as well as sheriff's deputies, combed the countryside, said warden's secretary Jerrie Clutter.

Circuit Judge Alfred Ferguson, who asked that an extra sheriff's bailiff be assigned to him, said he was concerned about his safety. "I'll be more worried if he is out for awhile," Ferguson said in Huntington.

Also under protection was an unidentified Columbus, Ohio, woman and former friend of Stacy's who had testified against him, said Columbus police officer Clarence Ward.

"If anyone has to fear, she does," Hatcher said. Her car was torched and she received death threats during the trial, he said.

Hatcher said he was offered police protection but turned it down.

"Let's face it, if somebody wants to kill you, they're not going to announce it and swing into town," he said. "They're going to do it at a red light, or through your kitchen window."

Huntington police officers, who usually patrol alone, worked in pairs Monday.

"A suspect is less likely to shoot that way," said Lt. Toby Shy.

Stacy, David Williams, 28, and Tommie Mollohan, 45, were discovered missing during a routine check Sunday night, officials said.

The men apparently jumped from the window of an unused administration building and hid behind a ventilation unit, where they changed into street clothes, said Corrections Commissioner A.V. Dodrill.

Mollohan was convicted of robbing and then killing a Brounland grocer in 1973. Mollohan at the time was an escapee from a Florida prison.

Williams was convicted of murder, arson and robbery in the 1980 slaying of a Marytown resident found bludgeoned in his burned home.

Movie offers laughs

'Beetlejuice' addresses death

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reviewer

Death.

It is the ultimate unknown. It is the ultimate unknowable. It is the subject of Michael Keaton's latest comedy: "Beetlejuice."

In this movie, adjusting to death is no different than adjusting to a new school, a new neighborhood or a new job. One just has to get the hang of it.

Movie Review

The show opens with Adam and Barbara Maitland (played by Alec Baldwin and Geena Davis), a quiet, home-loving couple, who find their lives change considerably when they die.

Death gives them one challenge after another.

First, it takes them awhile to figure out that they are dead. Once they do, an obnoxious family moves into their house and immediately begins to remodel it into a new-wave structure that is so ugly, it makes the Wildcat mobile in the Union look attractive.

At this point, the Maitlands realize that since they are dead, they are also ghosts. Consequently, they try to turn their home into a haunted house and attempt to scare the "intruders" away.

Fun and frolic result. Scared people do not.

So against the advice of every other dead person they meet, the Maitlands seek the help of Keaton's character — Beetlejuice — who calls himself a "bio-exorcist" of the living.

Keaton provides a hilarious performance, but leaves the audience wondering why he is billed as the star when he appears on the screen so little.

If you want to know if he succeeds in exorcising the obnoxious living — you'll have to see the movie for yourself. Something I suggest doing.

Don't go to "Beetlejuice" expecting any serious comment on life. The writers attempt to throw in a remark on the relationship between parents and attention-starved children, but it is lost in the process.

The reason to see the movie is strictly for laughs — especially the laughs that Keaton creates.

He is larger-than-life, in the traditional vaudeville sense when the actor comes into the audience and brings them into the picture. Too bad his time on the screen is not as large.

This film is definitely worth the price of a matinee, and probably worth full price. I give it a "B," because Keaton appears so little. I still suggest you judge it for yourself.

Speech rights upheld

Court denies airport ban in terminals

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Monday refused to let public airports ban all demonstrations, soliciting and distribution of political and religious literature from their terminals.

The justices let stand rulings that the terminal at Lambert Airport in St. Louis, like a city street or sidewalk, is a public forum where free-speech rights must be accommodated.

The court's action, taken without comment, sets no national precedent and therefore carries no direct impact for airports in most states. The action also does not preclude the possibility that the justices will study the issue some day.

But to date, every federal appeals court to rule on the issue has said a government-run airport is a public forum where travelers sometimes may be inconvenienced while others exercise their freedom of expression.

The court's action in the St. Louis airport case follows by 10 months its decision striking down a sweeping ban on free speech at Los Angeles International Airport.

In other matters Monday, the court:

■ Let stand a $3 million award, one of the largest libel verdicts ever upheld on appeal, won by the maker of Viceroy cigarettes against CBS and a Chicago television anchorman.

■ Agreed to review rulings that limited Korean Air Lines' financial liability for a 1983 disaster in which 269 people died — the shooting down of a KAL passenger jet.

■ Reinforced the right of hospitals to challenge federal regulations limiting the amount of money they are reimbursed for treating Medicare patients. The unanimous court was led by Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, writing his first opinion since joining the court Feb. 18.

■ Rejected a challenge to New York City's rent-control law that limits yearly increases for affected apartments to 7.5 percent.

■ Agreed to decide whether New York's powerful Board of Estimate — the city's mayor, city council president and comptroller and the president of each of the city's five boroughs — must be reapportioned to meet equal-voting standards.

State may collect $89.4 million more in taxes

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Consensus Estimating Group said Monday state government should collect $89.4 million more in taxes than anticipated during this fiscal year and next, likely setting off a battle in the final days of the legislative session on whether to spend it.

Gov. Mike Hayden told a news conference he wants to put about $70 million of the anticipated revenue increase into a "shock absorber fund" to ease the impact property reappraisal is expected to have on school finance next year.

However, some legislators quickly urged using the money to increase funding for education and social programs and others said more money ought to be used for tax relief.

The Consensus Estimating Group, made up of a dozen state government budget experts and university economists, forecast the largest increase in state revenue in nine years.

In March of 1979, the estimators predicted state revenues would increase by $98 million over a two-fiscal year period.

In recent years, the estimators have reduced the estimate several times, and a year ago Hayden and the Legislature had to reduce state spending by $60 million to meet an unexpected revenue shortfall.

This year, the group raised the estimates made last November because of a generally improving state economy and a consensus that the nation no longer faces the threat of a recession — as many economists predicted following the stock market crash last October.

"We reviewed the assumptions made last November, and basically held with them," said Revenue Secretary Harley Duncan, the unofficial chairman of the Consensus Estimating Group. "In fact, we feel more certain about those assumptions now than we did then.

"Despite the drop in the stock market, we don't see a recession, and we decided to stick with our assumptions of last November that we would see a modest 5 to 5½ percent growth in personal income and a 4 to 4½ percent growth in the rate of inflation.

"There was a fair amount of uncertainty last November. Most economic forecasts out there now don't show a recession coming."

The group's major changes from last November were to increase the estimate on corporate income taxes to be collected by the state by $39 million in the current fiscal year and by $10 million next fiscal year; raise the estimate on individual income taxes by $10 million each fiscal year; increase the sales tax estimate by $8 million each fiscal year, and raise the severance tax estimate by $6 million each year.

Duncan cautioned that the $39 million corporate income tax increase in the present fiscal year should be considered a one-time jump. He said most of it results from two companies having to make special payments totaling $35 million by April 15, and that money won't be coming in next year or in years beyond.

Both companies must make the big payments this year, Duncan said, because of the effects of federal tax laws. One had delayed payments on recognized earnings for several years and now must pay up, and the other used a federal investment tax credit but had to pay the state on those earnings since Kansas has no such tax credit.

Duncan said about $10 million of the increased corporate income tax revenue could be considered on-going.

The sales tax estimate was increased by $8 million each year, Duncan said, to reflect the improvement in those collections in the last six months. A slowly improving state economy is responsible for that rise.

Likewise, the estimate on individual income tax revenue was bumped up $10 million each of the two fiscal years, reflecting increased money coming into the state as a result of federal tax law changes. Duncan said the state is paying out less money in state tax refunds than had been anticipated.

The improvement in severance tax revenue was attributed to an expectation that natural gas sales from the Hugoton field increase.

While increasing the estimates on all of the state's four major tax sources, the Consensus Estimating Group lowered the estimates on some smaller taxes. It trimmed the forecast on the financial institutions tax revenue by $13 million over the two fiscal years, and lowered the insurance premium tax revenue estimate by $2 million.

attempts while the Sooners made 48.7 percent as a team, 19 of 39.

The first half was played at Oklahoma's tempo as the teams finished tied at 50-50.

There were eight lead changes and neither team led by more than six — and and that was when Pritchard hit a 3-pointer to give the Jayhawks a 31-25 lead with 9:35 left in the half.

Sieger, who finished 7-of-13 in 3-pointers, answered with his third 3-pointer and King added a baseline drive and the Sooners were within one again.

Manning picked up his second foul with 10:44 remaining in the half and with the two-time All-America on the bench, the Sooners couldn't capitalize as they outscored Kansas 12-10 with Manning out of the game.

Oklahoma had beaten Kansas twice during the season, 73-65 and 95-87.

Villanova in 1985 and North Carolina State in 1983 both won the national championship with 10 losses each.

Those teams were also the heavy underdogs, Villanova beating Georgetown and North Carolina State beating Houston.

Villanova's victory was the second meeting of two conference teams for the title. Indiana and Michigan of the Big Ten met for the championship in 1976.

Manning picked up his third foul just 25 seconds into the second half but he never got his fourth.

"It was eight against five," King said of the officiating. "That's all I've got to say. They were letting Manning do anything he wanted to. I like Danny and I'm happy for him but he knows in his mind he fouled out. It was bad calls all around."

company.

"We just can't afford to ruin the area," he said.

Brent said while she was not in favor of sending out a signal that the board wanted more industry in the area, she thought it was "terribly unfair" to the Gulifords to be caught in the middle of the issue.

"It's terribly unfair to the Gulifords to be in the middle," Fina said. "But the county should do something about it."

Fina was referring to a unanimous decision by Riley County Commissioners in January 1985 to rezone the Shilling site from agriculture to heavy industry.

Before the board could vote on the Guliford matter, however, Fina said a mistake had been made in published notices and letters sent to area residents about the petitions. The correspondence had insinuated that A-1 Auto Parts was south of the Guliford residence. Because of that error, Fina said, not all residents affected by the possible rezoning were notified.

The board is required by law to notify all property owners within a 1,000-foot radius when a rezoning request is made.

To avoid legal complications because of the mistake, board members decided to table the petition and reconsider it at the April 18 meeting.

Dukakis, Bush triumphant in Wisconsin

Jackson, Robertson finish second in race

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Michael Dukakis won the Wisconsin primary Tuesday night, quelling Jesse Jackson's momentum in the Democratic presidential race and reaching for control in their struggle for the party's 1988 nomination.

"A great victory for us," Dukakis said. "I hope it's a sign of things to come." He was already in New York where the next primary is set for April 19.

The Massachusetts governor also celebrated a narrow victory in Colorado caucuses marked by a slow and controversial count and added to his slender lead in the competition for delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. ran a distant third in Wisconsin — despite a costly effort in search of an elusive breakthrough outside his native South — and pronounced himself "extremely pleased."

Illinois Sen. Paul Simon was a poor fourth and seemed likely to suspend active campaigning later in the week.

Jackson, campaigning in Arizona, said "I feel good. After 40 contests, I've come in No. 1 or No. 2 in 30 of them. I'm proud of that." He said that after two months of primaries and caucuses, "I'm leading by 300,000 votes" in the overall tabulation.

Jackson campaigned hard here as a follow-up on his Michigan caucus victory late last month. He was on the cover of Time and Newsweek and drew large and enthusiastic crowds in a state where whites make up more than 95 percent of the electorate.

The polls indicated that Jackson won the black vote overwhelmingly, as he has all year. They indicated he captured between 20 and 25 percent of the white vote in Wisconsin, far more than the 7 percent he claimed in 1984 but not enough to produce a victory in an overwhelmingly white state.

ABC polls said he won 22 percent of the white vote in a strong finish in Connecticut last week and 32 percent in liberal Vermont on March 1.

"We may be looking at his ceiling here," said analyst Doug Muzzio.

Despite the Dukakis victory, the network polls indicated that the governor's support was softer than Jackson or Gore.

Vice President George Bush won an overwhelming Wisconsin victory over former television evangelist Pat Robertson in the Republican race. He won handily in Colorado, as well, as he continued his grand march to nomination at the Republican convention this summer.

Bush won Wisconsin's 47 delegates to bring his total to 888. He needs 1,039 for the nomination and ought to have enough sometime this month.

Wisconsin had 81 Democratic delegates at stake, with Dukakis leading for 42 and Jackson for 28 and Gore 11. Going into the evening, Dukakis led Jackson, 692 to 683 and Gore had 382 delegates. Simon had 171 and 517 were uncommitted. It takes 2,081 to claim the Democratic nomination.

Returns from 45 percent of the precincts, the Democratic vote was:

Dukakis, 276,850, or 47 percent.

Extra U.S. troops arrive in Panama

Increased security to aid American citizens, soldiers

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — The first of an extra 1,300 U.S. troops arrived in Panama on Tuesday to increase security for American soldiers and citizens in the face of a political and economic crisis.

An C-141 Starlifter carrying the first contingent of soldiers from Fort Bragg, N.C., touched down at Howard Air Base, just outside Panama City. Nearly 50 flights were expected.

The reinforcements and a squadron of 26 helicopters were intended by the Reagan administration as a signal to Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, the de facto ruler whom Washington has been urging to step down.

The buildup, ordered last week to counter what the Pentagon called Noriega's "heavy-handed tactics," will push American troop strength along the 50-mile-long Panama Canal to 11,800 officers and men. Noriega is head of the 15,000-man Defense Forces.

The action followed reports of harassment of U.S. citizens by Panamanian soldiers and the temporary arrest of several American reporters during a police raid on opposition headquarters in a Panama City hotel.

The Panamanian government has repeatedly accused the Reagan administration of preparing for an invasion and said Panama's army had begun training several hundred civilian volunteers in guerrilla warfare.

In Santa Barbara, Calif., where President Reagan is vacationing, his chief spokesman denied Monday that the president is considering military action or that he would urge further economic sanctions on Panama.

U.S. sanctions imposed in February have produced the gravest economic crisis in Panama's history. The country's banks have been closed for more than a month and the government has been unable to pay either its debts or its employees.

Tuesday's editions of state-run newspapers carried a communique from Panama's Health Ministry that ridiculed the new American troops, calling them potential AIDS carriers and a threat to public health.

The U.S. deployment is scheduled to be completed by Friday.

The units arriving include an Army battalion of military police, a company of Marines, three Air Force air base ground defense units, two squads of guard dogs and their handlers and an Army aviation unit.

The U.S. Southern Command, which has its headquarters near Panama City, had about 600 security personnel among its 10,000 servicemen and women before the Reagan administration stepped up its campaign to oust Noriega early last month.

In mid-March, the Pentagon sent another 670 security personnel to Panama to help protect military facilities.

The primary task of all U.S. military personnel in Panama is to safeguard the canal until it is handed over by treaty to the Panamanian government at noon on Dec. 31, 1999.

Task force drafts non-sexist policy

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

K-State is one step closer to forming an official University-wide policy encouraging a non-sexist environment.

At a meeting Tuesday, eight members of the Task Force on Nonsexist Environment agreed to draft a one-page "Policy for a Nonsexist Environment."

Sandra Coyner, head of the task force and director of the women's studies program, said she expects the policy to be drafted and sent to President Jon Wefald within 10 days.

"It's purpose is not to make rules and punish people. The purpose is to establish goals and focus on the positive aspects — it's about becoming sensitive, being more aware," Coyner said.

The task force's original policy stated it's mission as creating "an overall environment at Kansas State University in which all students, faculty and staff interact with each other solely on the basis of their individual strengths and characteristics without having those interactions contaminated by generalizations, stereotypes or other valuations based on gender."

The task force was formed in February 1987 and presented its original policy to Wefald in October. In Novemeber, Wefald sent the policy to the heads of the Council of Deans, Faculty Senate, Student Senate, Classified Affairs Committee, Commision on the Status of Women and Faculty Women's Samih Staiteih delivers his lecture titled "Stones vs. Bullets" Tuesday night in the Union Little Theatre. Staiteih compared the problems of the Palestinians living in occupied territories to the young people of the region who fight machine guns with rocks.

Staiteih: Rocks no match for guns

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

The problems of the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip reach farther than the lands they live in, said Samih Staiteih, Palestinian.

In his lecture "Stones vs. Bullets" Tuesday night, Staiteih addressed the problems of the Palestinians living in occupied territories fighting with rocks against the machine guns of the Israeli Army.

"In the beginning, Zionism was no more than a political philosophy that meant that the Jews needed a homeland," Staiteih said. "That was not a problem with the Palestinians. The Jews have since changed this philosophy to mean a state where only Jews live.

"This type of philosophy excludes you if you are Moslem or Christian. If you are not Jewish, you are not welcome to stay in Palestine," he said.

"Israel is the only country in the world with no official borders," he said. "Since 1948, they have been expanding their borders and throughout their expansion, we (Palestinians) have been defending ourselves."

Staiteih said the Israelis use the old names of cities within occupied territories to endorse the idea of the Israelis' right to overtake them. Israel has annexed much of the previously Palestinian-owned lands, but the annexation of the West Bank and Gaza will not be possible until the Palestinian population is tremendously depleted.

"Israel is a state that includes communities that are non-Jewish and discriminates against non-Jews," Staiteih said. "The Jewish people are under pressure to displace as many Palestinians as possible. Otherwise, expansion might not be possible according to their own Zionist theory."

If the Israelis annexed the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, they would become a minority in their own land, Staiteih said.

He also said with Gaza and West Bank areas occupied, the areas fall under International Law. Under this law (Article 49 of the Geneva Convention), the Israelis are not within their rights to organize settlements in the occupied territories — a right they currently have free of any restrictions.

The Israelis have set up several laws in the occupied territories which make living difficult — if not impossible — for the Palestinians, Staiteih said.

Under Israeli laws, Palestinians are not allowed to have gardens. They cannot have any beautification, and they are not allowed to have fruit trees unless they are authorized by the Israeli Army. Another military law prohibits the gathering of 10 or more Palestinians if there is a possibility politics will be discussed.

"A family of 10 or more must take their dinner in two shifts," Staiteih said. "There would be no way to ensure that politics would not be discussed at the dinner table."

Staiteih said other problems in the occupied territories include curfews imposed over whole cities and the random detaining and beating of Palestinians. Beatings usually occur to young men between 16 to 20 years of age, he said.

Because of the Palestinians' displacement, they have nowhere to live. Governments allow Palestinians to enter their country, but after a while, the countries become reluctant to have them, Staiteih said.

"It is a custom in our part of the world that you take in a neighbor and feed him, but after three days you can ask him what his long-term plans are," Staiteih said. "When we told our neighbors in Lebanon that we planned to return home, they said that we could never go home.

"We then realized that it would take some type of fight to get our homes back and bordering countries were reluctant to have Palestinians stirring up unneeded trouble for them."

There are 15 million Moslems living in the United States. They, Staiteih said, should be lobbying the U.S. government to stop giving Israel weapons.

"It is not that the Arabs are naive to American politics," Staiteih said. "They are just new to them. It was the same thing with the Jews when they first came to this country. Now they participate in the American political system."

Ideally, Staiteih said, he would like to see Palestinians, Jews and Christians live together with the Palestinians having their own type of government.

"The PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization) and the Palestinian Parliament in exile can be the only entities to represent the Palestinians," he said. "I may not agree with all the points that they make, but if we have a form of government like the one in the United States, I can get my point heard through different channels."

Mars may see future humans

MISSOULA, Mont. — Former astronaut Harrison Schmitt predicts today's children will live to see humans establish a settlement on the planet Mars.

"In the process, we will probably begin to mine the moon," Schmitt said Monday night during a speech at the University of Montana.

Schmitt, 52, who visited the moon in December 1972 during the last U.S. manned lunar mission, said Mars will be settled because "it's in the human spirit."

"More practically, the Soviets are already planning to do it," he said. "I can't tell you if the Soviets or the Free World will settle Mars, but human beings will settle it, and I hope we are a party to that great adventure."

Man plans walk to South Pole

NEW YORK — Robert Swan, who walked to the South Pole two years ago, said he hopes to use his planned walk to the North Pole next year to highlight environmental concerns.

The planned 66-day trip, which Swan said will make him the first person to walk to both poles, will start March 1, 1989, nearly 80 years after Matthew Henson and Commander Robert Peary first reached the pole on April 6, 1909.

"I'm here because I really care," the 31-year-old British explorer said Monday at a press conference at the Explorers Club, where Peary was twice president.

Forbes in Outlaw magazine

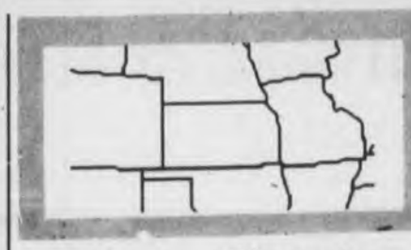
BEDMINSTER, N.J. — Multimillionaire Malcolm Forbes is not pointing a finger at anyone, even though he might have a reason to be piqued at Outlaw Biker magazine for creative cropping of his photo.

The magazine's May issue shows a smiling Forbes on its cover, pointing his middle finger at the camera.

The magazine, which features topless women, tattoo artists and bikers in black leather, carries a 10-page piece on the publisher of Forbes magazine, himself an avid biker.

A Forbes publicist said Monday his 68-year-old boss did not pose in the obscene manner depicted on the cover, but said the image was cropped from a photo that had shown him with actress Elizabeth Taylor showing off the skull-and-crossbones rings they exchanged in New Jersey in July.

Forbes' ring is on his middle finger.



Country stars make video

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Two eras of country music have united to sing and make a music video,

Joining rising performer K.D. Lang at the recording of her album "Shadowland" Monday were Brenda Lee, Loretta Lynn and Kitty Wells.

Wells was a country star 30 years ago. The careers of Lee and Lynn have spanned more than two decades.

"I'm too young to talk about them," said Lang, 26. "They're just great women in the music business."

Prison director proposes plan

TOPEKA — The director of the state's prison system plans to propose that the state build a new, 1,200-bed prison and considers El Dorado a top candidate to be the site of the institution.

Corrections Secretary Roger Endell had originally proposed building a 500-bed prison at an undetermined site and a 700-bed prison in or near Sedgwick County as part of a a $100 million plan to reduce prison overcrowding. Endell said Tuesday that building one prison instead of two could save the state about $20 million.

Endell said he would unveil the plan formally at the next meeting of a special legislative committee Thursday.

Meat company fined $60,000

WICHITA — A $60,000 U.S. Department of Agriculture civil fine has been assessed against Winchester Foods Inc. and Lee R. Cox for substituting cow meat for bull meat in retail and wholesale sales in Kansas and Oklahoma.

Winchester, which was located in Hutchinson, closed in 1986. Cox owned 95 percent of the company.

USDA Administrative Law Judge Edward H. McGrail ruled Winchester and Cox violated the Packers and Stockyards Act, a federal antitrust, fair trade and payment protection statute governing the livestock, poultry and meat industry. The violations occurred between November 1984 and March 1985, the judge ruled.

McGrail issued a cease and desist order and suspended $20,000 of the $60,000 fine.

USDA offiical Calvin W. Watkins said cow meat is less valuable than bull meat and the substitution allowed Cox to make unfair profits of more than $28,000.

State ag board can speak out

TOPEKA — Attorney General Robert T. Stephan held in a legal opinion Tuesday that the state Board of Agriculture may take positions on public issues involving agricultural policy.

The opinion was requested by Rep. Bruce F. Larkin, D-Baileyville.

Noting that the board is required by law to publish an annual report on the state of agriculture, to promote the agricultural industry and to provide statistical services, Stephan wrote:,

"Clearly, the purpose of the Board of Agriculture is to provide information about the current condition of agriculture in Kansas and to promote the state's most important industry.

"To conclude that the board could not speak out on the issues of the day would contradict this purpose. Therefore, it is our opinion that the Board of Agriculture may take a position on matters of public policy that involve agricultural issues."

Provisions of the Governmental Ethics Act relating to lobbyists do not apply to board members, Stephan said.

Some farmers are upset that the Board of Agriculture supported legislation this session that would have relaxed state corporate farming law to permit expansion of corporate hog raising operations in southwest Kansas.

Kansas City man's mysterious life revealed

Police find skulls, torture devices in home

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A man whose calling cards said he had "poison in my head" and who police say had torture devices in his house and a human head buried in his yard was regarded by neighbors as a community leader.

Police working behind a cordoned-off area used shovels and a backhoe to dig up Robert Berdella's back yard Tuesday where the severed head was discovered during the weekend.

A human skull also was found in Berdella's house, police said, along with another human skull that appeared to be very old and was discarded as evidence.

"We're investigating the possibility he may be linked to ... unsolved cases of missing persons," said Rick Pilgrim, a police homicide detective.

The dark, tangled web of Berdella's secret life came to light Saturday after a man who police say Berdella held captive and sexually abused leaped out of a second-story window of Berdella's house. The man, who had lash marks on his back and was wearing nothing but a dog collar, sought help from neighbors.

Berdella has been charged with nine felonies in the case. Officials said the 22-year-old victim had been held captive for five days. He was in stable condition in a hospital Tuesday with injuries to his throat and eyes after an unknown chemical was forced into them, officials said.

Police said they found photographs in Berdella's brick and wood-frame house that showed people, including the man who escaped Saturday, being tortured. The photographs were taken inside the house, which also had torture and bondage devices, said Sgt. Troy Cole of the police homicide unit. He refused to describe the devices.

Berdella's neighborhood is in a lower-middle class section of mid-town Kansas City, with two-story houses with small yards and no more than 30 feet between them.

Many of the neighbors have known Berdella since he moved into his house on Charlotte Street about 16 years ago. They wondered how they could have been so wrong about their opinion of a man who lived so close to them for so long.

Michael Calderon said Berdella told him about five years ago that he was using his home as a half-way house for runaway youths. Young men would often visit the house, Calderon said.

"What was I to think," asked Calderon. "I thought he was a father figure to those kids and I got adjusted to the fact that there were boys at his house."

Calderon now believes the story was a lie and that the young men were picked up by Berdella.

Berdella organized a neighborhood watch program and was regarded by many as a congenial man who was generally liked.

"He led us to believe he was a nice guy, a leader in the community," Calderon said. "He was very active and made us feel like second-class residents because we were not active."

Berdella owned a curio shop called Bob's Bazaar Bizarre in the Old Westport Flea Market, a building housing similar shops and a bar and grill.

Replicas of skulls, faces of dragons and demons as well as ornaments from foreign countries were among the items he sold.

His calling card was bizarre in itself. According to The Kansas City Times, it read: "I rise from death, I kill death, and death kills me ... Although I carry poison in my head the antidote can be found in my tail, which I bite with rage."

Paul Howell said he suspected something was wrong with Berdella almost four years ago. Howell is the father of a missing youth, who he said was last seen with Berdella before disappearing in 1984.

Man forgets parachute, films own death plunge

By The Associated Press

LOUISBURG, N.C. — An experienced parachutist filmed his own two-mile death plunge after he fell from an airplane. He carried a video camera but apparently failed to realize he had no parachute, investigators said Tuesday.

Officials declared the death Saturday of Ivan Lester McGuire, 35, of Durham, an accident.

Franklin County sheriff's Capt. Ralph Brown said there was no foul play and no indication of suicide, although "a man who has jumped 800 times ought to remember his parachute."

The videotape shows McGuire leaving the plane, apparently without problems, Brown said. Other parachutists then jump and free fall, but disappear when they pop their parachutes and McGuire plunges on toward the ground at 150 mph.

McGuire, who was carrying a video camera mounted on his helmet, was filming a student and an instructor at Franklin County Sports Parachute Center about 20 miles from Raleigh.

There was no answer Tuesday at the parachute center. Nancy Fayard, wife of club owner Paul Fayard — who was the instructor on McGuire's last jump — was quoted in Tuesday's Raleigh News and Observer as saying: "No one was aware that he got on the plane without a parachute. Of course no one knew or they would have stopped him."

The videotape showed the divers making preparations around the plane's door; then the camera went out with McGuire.

With the camera aimed up toward the plane, the tape then shows the instructor and the student jump and free-fall somewhat above McGuire.

The jump appeared to be proceeding normally until the instructor and student opened their parachutes and receded rapidly from view as McGuire hurtled below them.

"It kind of appears he reached for his parachute and didn't have one," Brown said. "But the release for his (McGuire's) parachute is on his right hip, and when that right hand goes down, the left hand comes forward and it comes into camera view."

After several seconds of jerky motion, the tape shows the ground approaching. "Then the pictures get to moving real fast because he's approaching the ground at 150 mph," Brown said.

McGuire's body was found in woods about 1½ miles from the airfield.

Senate wise in vetoing increase in UFM funds

Senate voted Thursday after 90 minutes of debate against an amendment that would have increased funding for University for Man.

UFM, which was founded in 1967 by a group of students and faculty, is a "non-profit organization dedicated to providing creative opportunities for life-long learning and self-development in a supportive and informal setting accessible to all," according to its brochure.

It has been partially supported by students since it began. As recently as 1980, 80 percent of UFM's budget was supported by students. Shortly after that year, Student Senate asked UFM to begin charging fees for its classes. UFM now charges between $3-$12 for its non-credit classes, which cover a variety of topics from self-development to sports.

Last year 20 percent of UFM's budget, $13,133.13, was paid for by students. This year students will provide $12,270.50, 18.65 percent of its budget, which is the amount recommended by the Senate Finance Committee.

UFM's Campus/Community Program Coordinator, Eunice Dorst, had requested that student support be increased to $13,169.25 because of an expected increase in phone costs. Located across the street from campus at 1221 Thurston, UFM had to go off campus phones when the University changed its phone system at the beginning of the school year. UFM is now on Southwestern Bell and will have to pay higher phone bills.

Senate was unable to approve of the increase because of a lack of funds.

Senate's decision to lower student support of UFM was necessary. Although UFM is a program which benefits the community and the university, student support needs to be kept to a minimum.

According to Dorst, 28 percent of UFM participants are students, but UFM is also beneficial to the community and to local businesses.

Dorst said UFM will simply turn to some of the other sources available to make up for the money lost from student support.

While UFM is a quality program with honorable intentions, it would have been misguided for Senate to raise the amount of money provided by students for UFM. It is not one of the highest priority to students.

It is hoped that UFM will continue its valuable services with support from the community and others instead of relying too much on students.

Officials must release secret Wolf Creek files

The saga continues. And it gets nastier and nastier.

Once again, information has been released concerning safety hazards at the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant. This time, confidential files obtained by The Topeka Capital-Journal indicate that some water and steam pipes installed incorrectly in the early 1980s at the plant could be chemically tainted and may crack, endangering the plant's safe operation.

Somehow, the allegations are not surprising, considering other incidents that have occurred at the plant over the past year. What is surprising, however, is that the records cannot be released. Copies were leaked from the plant to the Nuclear Awareness Network based in Lawrence. But in 1985, Kansas Gas & Electric, the plant's principal owner, sued NAN to keep the files secret and get them back. Now, while a district judge is deciding whether the files should remain secret, NAN officials are under court order not to release them.

The coverups have gone on long enough. It's time for the incompetency to be exposed and action to be taken to rectify the problems. The secret files would be a start. Their release is imperative.

KU's Brown goes all out to get lucky bus driver

Let's talk excess at the University of Kansas.

The Friday issue of The University Daily Kansan, KU's student newspaper, reported that men's basketball coach Larry Brown had the team's bus driver from Pontiac, Mich., flown to Kansas City, Mo., to shuttle the players around during their Final Four games.

How quaint.

Let's analyze Brown's reasoning here. First, there's the safety factor. The driver obviously got the team around in Pontiac without injury, so he or she is apparently competent to drive a bus. Brown, after all, couldn't take a chance of a reckless driver injuring any of his star players.

Then there's the consideration of how well the driver got to know the team members and made them feel comfortable. Breaking in a new driver at such a crucial point could be potentially disastrous.

And finally, for those who are just a little superstitious, perhaps the driver was a good luck charm for the team.

After all, look at who won Monday night's championship game and made more than a few Wildcats feel in spirit like Jayhawks.

Yes, Larry, it was a wise move to spend those hundreds or thousands of dollars to fly the driver to Kansas City and pay his or her hotel bill for five or six days.

You owed it to the team.

Making passive decisions

'Me first' attitude provides decisive results

Commentary

BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Columnist

I ignored a man having a heart attack today.

I told myself I didn't have time to stop ... I told myself other people were running to help ... I told myself that it had been too long since I'd had a CPR course ....

I lied — I really didn't want to get involved.

The sad part of this story is that I wasn't the only person to ignore the situation. In fact, more people ignored the situation than paid attention to it.

After passing the situation by, I went on to copy materials for a class later that day. While I stood waiting for my oh-so-important 30 copies of "A Companion to the Grapes of Wrath," I could hear the ambulance's sirens wailing as it approached the building.

Teachers' and students' interests were instantly aroused, and upon hearing the story, they were instantly appeased.

I heard no one ask if the man was all right. It seemed as if no one cared for anyone but themselves.

And isn't that sad when a society becomes so wrapped up in appeasing desires and fulfilling duties that a person can get lost in the cracks?

What I'm telling is an old story. The "don't bother me, I'm busy trying to make $30,000 a year" story. Or maybe it's the story of "I'm too busy to bother with you, because I'm more important."

And it's an attitude that starts early.

Students in the high school junior English class that I teach are only looking out for No. 1 in almost everything they do. "How many points is that worth?" "What class rank does that make me?" "I don't have time for homework, I've got to make $12,000 to pay for my new car."

When they're asked to think about how others feel, they look up at you with a puzzled look. "Why would I want to do that?" one student questioned.

Unfortunately, because time has become such a precious resource in this country, people think the time most wisely spent is time spent in self gratification. In other words, if it's not going to help you, don't waste your time.

But, people fail to realize that with an attitude like this, civilization will grind to a halt among the BMWs and Mercedes careening down streets to make it to that 1:30 p.m. appointment.

Unfortunately, by not getting involved today, I proved that I don't care either. By not doing anything, I was making a conscious decision not to care.

People like me make decisions every day to let life continue as it is. We neither attempt to improve the quality of it nor actively attempt to destroy its quality.

You may shake your head and say "No, I would never be so careless."

But as you shake your head, think about what you've done for the millions of Americans living in poverty on the streets of our country. Like those Americans living in boxes in the park facing the White House.

What have you done?

What did you do when a 16-year-old hemophiliac was viciously attacked and asked to leave the school because he had AIDS and others were afraid?

Did you do anything? Write a letter in protest? Call the school principal in support of the boy's retention in the district? Or even send a letter to the boy and his mother in support of their courageous court battle?

Or did you sit back and passively let the vocal minority win the battle because others were too passive to protest?

Passive or careless decisions are not made only about social issues, but also political issues which could one day dash any idea of freedom we currently enjoy.

When Oliver North spent days in front of television cameras defending his decidedly illegal dealings in the Iran-Contra affair, what did you do?

Did you realize that by not caring about the affair, you were condoning illegal behavior by the executive branch of the U.S. government?

And, by not caring you are giving up a freedom. The freedom to know exactly what the government is doing and the freedom to elect congressmen and women to watch these actions and hand out the money.

By condoning this idea, a freedom has been taken.

"One freedom, big deal," you may say to yourself.

But one loss will lead to others and the result is obviously disastrous.

When I ignored the man having a heart attack today, I was ignoring civilization. When I did not protest the illegal dealings by our government, I was condoning the loss of freedom. When I idly watched a boy's heart-wrenching story on TV and failed to respond, I was allowing another's freedom and happiness to be destroyed.

By not getting involved, I was actively making a decision. A decision to ignore everyone but me.

Debatable report

Editor,

The Kansas State Collegian's Feb. 24 article, "Taste tests cause controversy," was read here in New York by many interested workers on the staff of Consumer Reports magazine. Specifically the article noted that because of labor problems we are having in New York, K-State's food and nutrition department is currently conducting taste-testing work that would ordinarily be done in-house at Consumer Reports.

Elizabeth Smith, manager of K-State's sensory analysis center, defended this testing now being done in Justin Hall. Smith was quoted in the Feb. 24 article as saying, "It is such a small part of the work they do," and went on to note that K-State's involvement does not hamper labor negotiations in New York. Nothing could be further from the truth! Foods articles are a very important part of Consumer Reports magazine; because these taste tests are now being conducted at K-State, the work continues to get done and we are severely hindered at the negotiating table.

The truth is that in spite of a very rosy financial status, union workers at Consumer Reports magazine have not had a raise in more than two years. The best management offer to us after 1½ years of negotiations is 2¼ percent across-the-board. Management, on the other hand, received raises in 1987 averaging close to 8 percent; their 1988 raises averaged just under 5 percent.

David Berliner, Consumer Reports management spokesman, was quoted in your Feb. 24 article as saying, "The company has a good union contract and the salaries are better than average ... The average salary for a writer is $900.02 a week." Wrong on both counts. First, there is no labor contract; it expired on Dec. 31, 1986. Second, the minimum wage for a writer here is $556.32 per week, not $900.02. Berliner knows better!

Students and faculty at K-State, your resources are being used by a union-busting team in New York — the board of directors and the management of Consumer Reports magazine. We would be most appreciative if you'd ask your officials to put a stop to it.

Dark sidewalks

Editor,

I recently did a class project on campus lighting and found that there are areas on campus which are very poorly lighted. After a number of interviews with campus officials, I learned there is no long-range plan to improve these poorly lighted areas.

The only thing that resembles concern over the lighting problem is a study being done by K-State Police. I'm sure this will show areas that are below standards on footcandle light power. However, these light readings aren't going to do any of us any good if there are no plans to improve the lighting in these problem areas. I feel the measurement of this light intensity should not be put upon the police department's shoulders. Doesn't the department have enough to do instead of walking around taking light measurements at night?

I realize this isn't a problem that is going to be solved overnight, but I think Student Senate should put into effect a long-range plan to improve the lighting of the K-State campus.

Rebuild Van Zile

Editor,

In response to the gentleman writing on the economic drain of Van Zile Hall in Monday's Collegian.

Although there is no immediate need for Van Zile, there will be in the very near future. To totally destroy Van Zile and rebuild a new residence hall is utterly absurd. Building a new residence hall in place of Van Zile would not solve the problem, but create new ones.

Van Zile is an historic building, one that should remain a part of K-State. To destroy it would not only be a mistake, but also a tragedy.

James Long of the U.S. Customs Service talks with University of Kansas students John Schulte and Lori Betts at the K-State Society and Criminal Justice Association career fair Tuesday in the Union Ballroom.

Career fair helps in job search

By The Collegian Staff

About 200 students walked through the main ballroom in the Union Tuesday seeking job opportunities in a number of sociology and criminal justice fields.

The agencies set up booths, billboards and video equipment and handed out pamphlets.

About 20 agencies, including the FBI, U.S. Customs, Tobacco and Firearms, and the Drug Enforcement Administration were in attendance.

DEA is looking for qualified people to fill positions, said Archie Luss, division recruitment coordinator for the DEA's St. Louis division.

"We are looking for students who want a job in this field," he said.

Harriet King, president of the Sociology and Criminal Justice Association that sponsored the fair, said the career fair was not just for social science and sociology majors.

Shannon Truesdell, sophomore in advertising, said the career fair was helpful for students outside of the criminal justice area.

Smoke detectors increase residence hall fire safety

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

During the past two years, administrators in the Department of Housing have increased the fire safety in the residence halls by installing smoke detectors.

Bob Felde, assistant director of housing, said the move to install the smoke detectors was based on a concern for the safety of the people whom housing serves.

"As I recall, we were not mandated by the fire marshall to install the smoke detectors, but it came from a growing concern about safety," Felde said.

He said a major concern at the time of installation was the placement of the smoke detectors.

"As you look at other institutions and detector systems, you say: 'Gosh, some of them aren't really providing much safety at all.' We may be talking about a tremendously unsafe situation caused by too many smoke detectors in the wrong places," he said.

Having too many smoke detectors in the wrong places could result in a large number of false alarms that could lull the residents into a false sense of security so they wouldn't respond quickly to a real smoke alarm, Felde said.

The best place for the detectors, housing decided, was in each room.

"That way, the really dangerous room fires would be detected immediately and anybody playing a prank would have to deal with the noise in their own room," Felde said.

Bob Roscovius, general repair and maintenance technician, said the smoke detectors are generally maintenance-free.

"Every now and then, we'll have a short in one of the boxes, and that can be a surprise early in the morning, but besides that we haven't had any problems with the smoke detectors," he said.

Sharon Rentmeester, graduate student in student counseling/personal services and Ford Hall director, said her primary concern in the event of a fire was the safety of her residents.

Once a smoke detector goes off and the fire alarms are pulled, each floor's staff makes sure that all of the students on their floor are out of the building, Rentmeester said.

Shawn Sommers, senior in electrical engineering, is a receptionist at Haymaker Hall. Sommers said many people don't respond to a fire alarm as quickly as they should.

"People will sometimes just walk around in the smoke wondering if there's really a fire," Sommers said. "Lots of times they'll call down here to find out if the alarm is for real. That's pretty stupid."

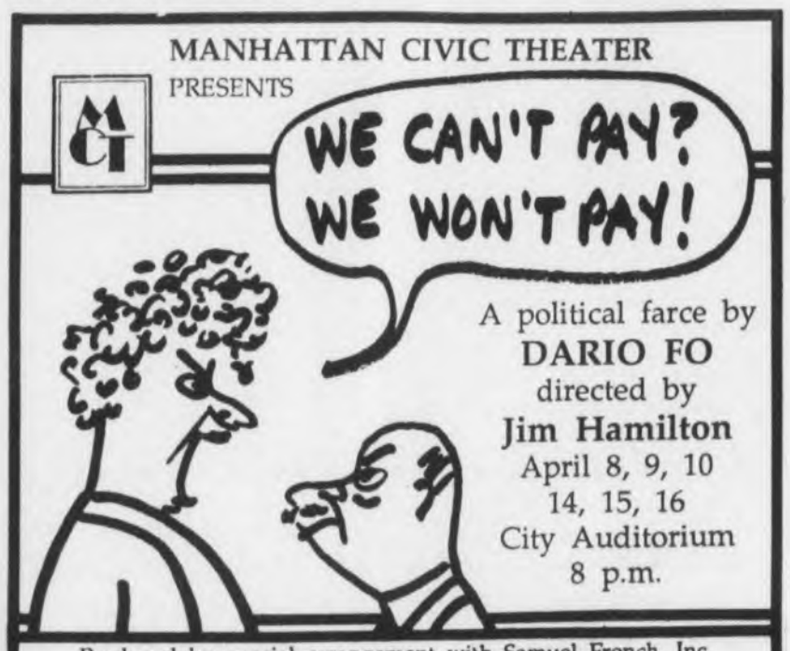
House approves DUI bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House gave final approval Tuesday to a bill that would make it a felony to injure someone while driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

The bill also would toughen some penalties for driving under the influence.

Lawmakers amended the bill heavily during their morning session, before approving it 113-9.



The bill, part of a proposal by Gov. Mike Hayden to toughen some of Kansas' drunken-driving laws this session, would create a new crime of vehicular battery for persons who unintentionally cause injury to another person while driving under the influence.

The crime would be a Class E felony, punishable by a minimum of two years in prison and a maximum of five years.

Under current law, a DUI driver who causes an accident in which someone is injured cannot be charged with anything tougher than DUI. However, if the driver kills someone in a DUI accident, the driver can be charged with aggravated vehicular homicide, a Class E felony.

Two Palestinians shot crossing border during 'quiet day'

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Soldiers fired at "suspicious shadows" Tuesday in south Lebanon and fought Palestinian guerrillas trying to cross the border, killing two, the army said. Four Israelis were reported wounded.

In the Gaza Strip, soldiers fired rubber bullets at protesters, putting out the left eye of a 16-year-old Palestinian, the army said. It was among the few violent incidents in a relatively quiet day in the occupied West Bank and Gaza, where an Arab rebellion began Dec. 8.

Forty-one high school students about to be drafted wrote Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin saying they would would "not take part in acts of oppression and occupation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip." The number writing such letters now stands at 107.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz went to Jordan and Syria promoting the U.S. peace plan. He got an inconclusive response from King Hussein of Jordan, whose approval is considered essential.

The attempted penetration Tuesday was the ninth infiltration effort since Nov. 25, when a guerrilla in a hang glider flew into Israel from Lebanon and killed six soldiers before being shot to death.

That attack was thought to have made the Israeli army seem vulnerable, and violence in the occupied territories began two weeks later. At least 138 Arabs and an Israeli soldier have been killed during the 4-month-old rebellion in the lands Israel captured from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin said violence in the West Bank and Gaza has emboldened guerrillas.

"The fact that the events in the territories are the focus of world attention obligates them ... to prove again that terrorism has to be the main tool for achieving political goals," he said on army radio.

Israel radio said Fatah, the main Palestine Liberation Organization guerrilla group led by PLO chief Yasser Arafat, took responsibility in a statement at Sidon in south Lebanon. A anonymous telephone caller made the claim to a journalist in Sidon, but Fatah's Beirut office denied knowledge of such a claim.

Another guerrilla group, the pro-Syrian Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, claimed responsibility in a typewritten statement distributed in Sidon. It said the purpose was to emphasize "rejection of the imperialist plans carried by Shultz."

AIDS metaphors criticized

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

"AIDS is death." "AIDS is a serial killer." "AIDS is a punishment."

These are some of the metaphors used to describe Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome that cause Susan Sontag to criticize society's use of metaphors.

Four instructors discussed the impact of metaphors on American culture as seen by Susan Sontag in her work "Illness in America" in a pre-convocation forum Tuesday night.

The four instructors discussed Sontag as a philosopher, a writer and a research scholar. They also addressed how AIDS differs from other infectious diseases.

"Sontag has to some extent condemned metaphors," said Sarah Merrill, assistant professor of philosophy. "We sometimes see someone who has a disease, as the disease."

Merrill said Sontag will confront society's use of metaphors to resolve the problems AIDS presents.

Sontag has been an instructor, written film scripts and directed films, but mainly she is an essayist, said Leland Warren, professor of English.

"It is remarkable how many of her essays still survive and influence people," he said. "When I went back and read her essays, I saw she had influenced me more than I had thought.

"I enjoy reading things Sontag writes even if I'm not interested in the subject. I'm more interested in how she grapples with the problem."

If someone has the opportunity to read something Sontag has written, they will enjoy it, said Al Hamscher, professor of history.

"When she speaks on a particular piece of literature, she is very on target. However, her context is weak — often sloppy. When you listen to her, remember she feels she can make any generalization she pleases."

It's intriguing how AIDS is being called an epidemic, Hamscher said. An epidemic is supposed to be easy to catch and affect many individuals throughout an area at the same time.

"I don't see how it can be called an epidemic since it fails to qualify with either of these points," he said.

People have come to believe modern day medicine can bail society out of anything, Hamscher said. If it doesn't, people believe death is unfair.

"Fear of AIDS is more a fear of death and dying," he said.

AIDS as a disease is different from any other infectious disease, said Jana Hesser, associate professor of anthropology. Other infectious diseases, she said, cause the immune system to fight back and give someone an immunity to the disease.

"AIDS disables the immune system," she said. "It is alarming. It confounds our whole understanding of disease.

"The metaphor 'AIDS is death' is appropriate in my mind. It has a fatality rate of 100 percent. I can think of no other disease that has that rate," Hesser said.

Society's views on illness to be evaluated at lecture

By The Collegian Staff

Society's response to illness will be the topic of today's convocation at 9:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium.

Susan Sontag, former cancer patient, will present her lecture, "Illness as a Metaphor: Society's Response to Disease, Including Cancer and AIDS."

Sontag has written "The Benefactor" and "Death Kit." Her film "Unguided Tours" was produced in 1983. She is the author of two film scripts — "Duet Cannibals" and "Brother Carl."

She is a Guggenheim Fellow and a Rockefeller Fellow. She has received the Brandeis University Creativity Award and the National Book Critics Circle Award.

Crunchy or not, peanut butter 'spreads' taste

From the vine to the jar, peanut butter is regarded as the all-American food. Peanut butter is as versatile as it is nutritious.

Peanut butter isn't just for sandwiches. For an imaginative cook, peanut butter is one of the most nutritious, flexible, and economical foods available. No other food has such a wide range of nutritive elements necessary to maintain health in both adults and children.

Peanut butter is one of the most nutritious foods known to man. The U.S. Department of Agriculture rates peanut butter near the top in six nutritional categories: energy, protein, fat, phosphorus, niacin and thiamin. In two tablespoons of peanut butter there are 16 grams of total fat, two grams of saturated fatty acids, and zero milligrams of cholesterol.

Americans today are consuming more than 231,000 tons of peanut butter each year. Four out of five homes in America have a kitchen shelf containing a jar of peanut butter.

The invention of peanut butter came about in 1890, as a doctor in St. Louis searched for a high-protein food for his patients. He ground up roasted peanuts in a meat grinder, added salt, and fed it to his patients as an easily digested, high protein food.

This new health food was immediately successful. Shortly after its arrival, grocery stores were selling it from large tubs and pails. The peanut butter would be stirred with a wooden paddle before being dipped up to be carried out.

Peanuts themselves were introduced to the rest of the world by European explorers who followed Columbus. In the early 16th century, the peanut was imported into Africa and India by the Portuguese traders and into Spain and the Far East by the Spaniards. The peanut returned to the Americas again in the 18th and 19th centuries, this time carried to North America on the ships transporting slaves.

The peanut was the primary food for the slaves during the long ocean crossing. The nuts that were left over from the voyages were planted around the doorsteps of the slave cabins. This was the beginning of one of the most important crops in the United States.

Peanuts are raised in parts of the United States where there is a long growing season and adequate soil and rainfall. Almost half of the peanuts grown in the states are grown in the Georgia-Alabama and northern Florida regions.

The peanut is a legume, similar to the pea and the bean. Thomas Jefferson called peanuts "ground peas," and some foreign countries refer to them as "groundnuts." Peanuts got these names because the peanut plant resembles a pea vine.

Peanut butter, as wholesome as it is, isn't just a reliable standby when the pantry is bare. It can be used in many recipes and can be very fancy. Here are some recipes you can try.

Americans' diet high in animal fat

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans are eating too much animal fat and government regulations make it difficult for the food industry to market leaner and more healthful meats and dairy products, a scientific panel said Tuesday.

Although consumption of animal fat has gone down, many Americans still are eating their way to poor health with too much cholesterol, fatty acids and salt, and not enough foods that provide the needed calcium and iron said a report by a committee of the National Research Council.

It said "the incidence of nutrition-related health problems is significant, affecting either directly or indirectly nearly every American family."

Among the diet-related health problems cited:

■ About 34 million Americans are overweight.

■ Nearly a million adults die annually of cardiovascular disease that may be related to the consumption of high-cholesterol foods.

■ Osteoporosis, a disease caused by leaching of calcium from bone, strikes 15 to 20 million adults.

■ Between 8 million and 12 million children are hungry because of inadequate diets.

■ Iron deficiency is the most common form of childhood anemia.

The chairman of the panel, David L. Call of Cornell University, told reporters that animal products are a "mixed blessing nutritionally" in the American diet.

"In our food supply, they (animal products) provide about 36 percent of our food energy and between 36 percent and 100 percent of certain nutrients," he said.

"At the same time, however, animal products contribute more than half of the total fat, nearly three-fourths of the saturated fatty acids and all of the dietary cholesterol."

A change in some government regulations, along with education of consumers and technological advances by manufacturers of animal food products could correct the problems relatively quickly, said Timothy Hammonds of the supermarket industry's Food Marketing Institute, a member of the committee.

"In the future, the consumers could have it all," with more healthful meats and dairy products that provide the needed nutrition without excess fats and cholesterol.

Senate advances welfare bill

Program would require recipients to work

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate advanced to final action Tuesday a bill that would create an experimental program designed to put welfare recipients to work.

The KanWork program, developed by a special legislative committee over the summer, would require welfare recipients to undergo job training or work at a government agency, such as a state hospital or at a state-sponsored day-care center.

The Senate is expected to take final action on the measure Wednesday.

All recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children who have children over the age of 3 would have to participate in the KanWork program under the bill. Clients with children under 3 would be encouraged, but not required, to enter the program.

"It's a great departure from current practice," said Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Lenexa, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee. "It's a major program."

The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services would evaluate each client to determine if they are ready for employment. SRS also would provide job referral and placement services, employment counseling, job training, community work experience, vocational training and remedial education.

Some clients would be assigned to work at state agencies, Bogina said, and that time could counted to meet civil service requirements for permanent employment.

Key elements in the program are the support and transitional services that the program provides participants as they leave the welfare rolls.

Day-care services would be available to AFDC recipients, Bogina said, and monthly transportation costs to and from work would be covered by the state. Day care would be provided to clients for up to six months after they are hired full-time.

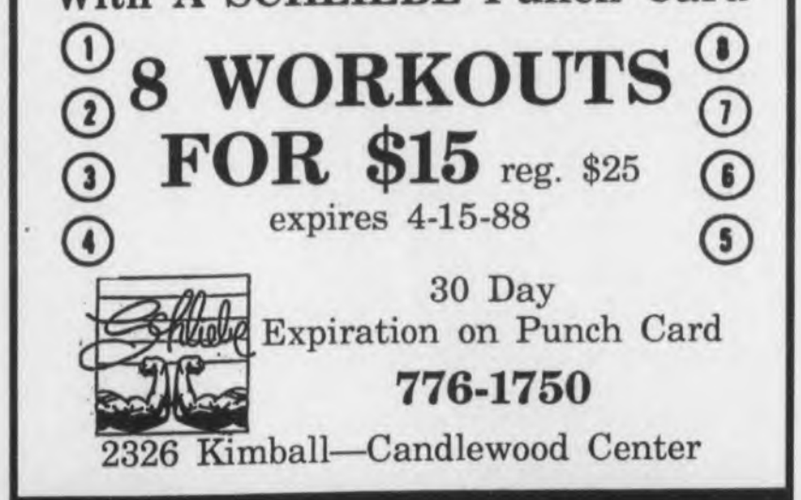
"Medical care would be provided for up to 12 months upon employment and clients are to contribute to the cost of that medical care," Bogina said.

Some of the welfare mothers would be assigned to work in state-sponsored day care centers under the bill.

Bogina said the measure does not encourage SRS to start such centers, but rather to contract with private child-care providers.

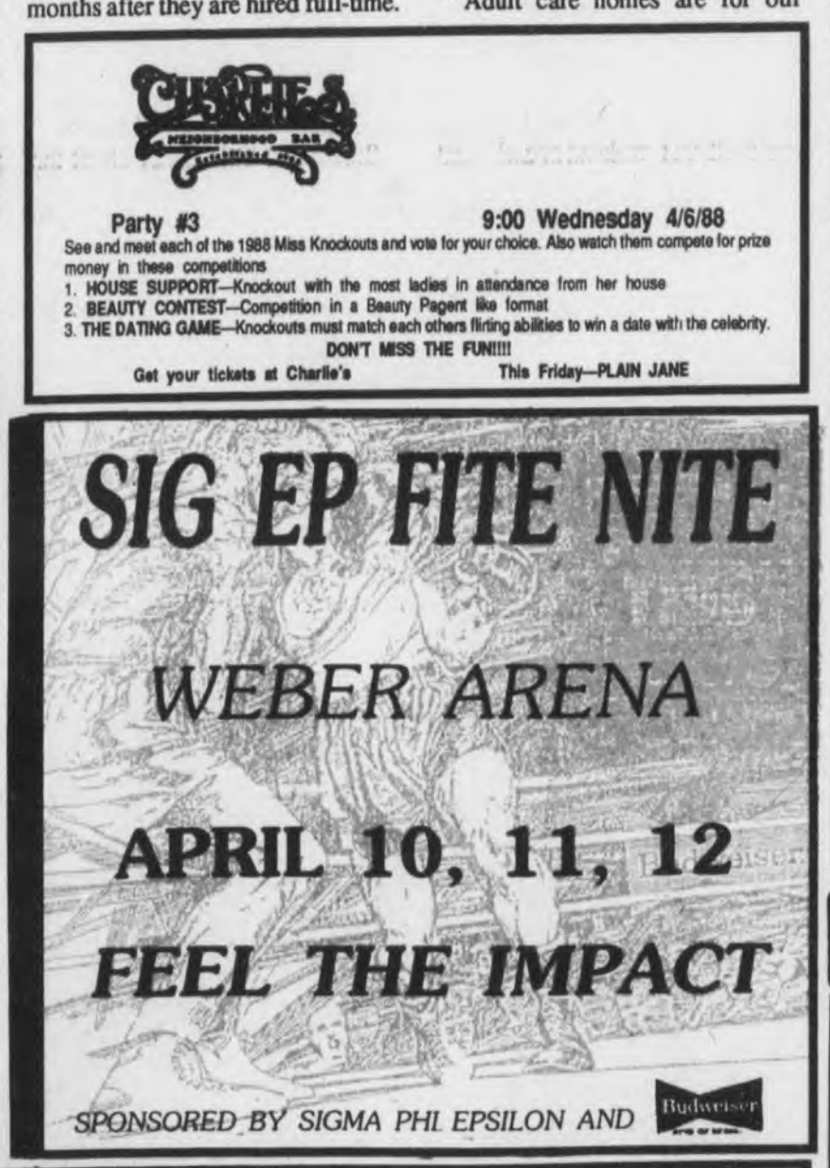
Sen. Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, said he hopes SRS does not take "the path of least resistence" and contract with day-care centers. He said starting day-care centers and using welfare mothers as staff would dramatically reduce the costs of the program.

Sen. Roy Ehrlich, R-Hoisington, amended the bill to prohibit using nursing homes as day-care centers for the children of welfare mothers.



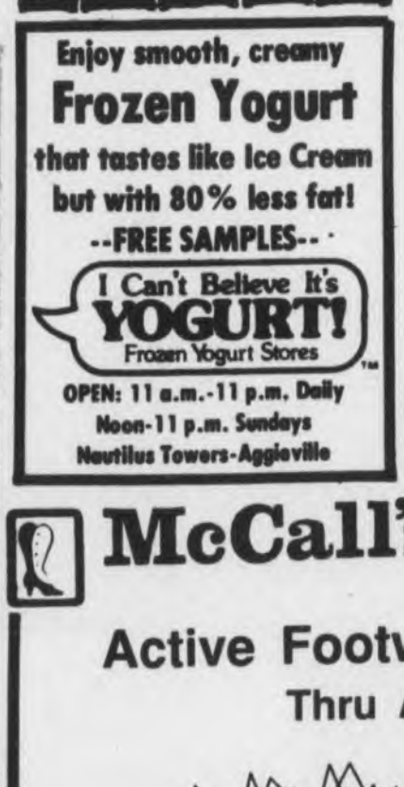
"Adult care homes are for our senior citizens," Ehrlich said.

Sen. Wint Winter, R-Lawrence, warned that mixing children with older people could result in senior citizens coming ill since children carry disease.



"We have enough problems with our adult care homes," he said.

Bogina said on the floor that no money has been placed in an appropriations bill for the KanWork program. Gov. Mike Hayden had earmarked $400,000 for a pilot program at Barton County.



But also on Tuesday, the House Appropriations Committee approved a recommendation that the state spend $11.2 million during the next fiscal year, which begins July 1, to start the KanWork program in 10 counties. Of the total, $6.4 million would come from the state general fund, into which general tax revenues flow, and $4.8 million from federal funds.

Wildcats battle elements, Tarkio; win, 4-2

Second game called due to rain

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

High winds played havoc with the batters' hits and gave the pitchers an advantage on both teams as the K-State baseball team defeated Tarkio College, 4-2, Tuesday afternoon.

With the win at Frank Myers Field, K-State raised its record to 20-10 and Tarkio (Mo.) dropped to 8-8. The victory marked the 13th time and fourth consecutive year the Wildcats have recorded a 20-win season during the 87-year history of K-State baseball.

The second game of the doubleheader was called after the fourth inning due to rain. The score was tied at 2-2 while K-State's Jim Haller and Darryl Rowley were combining for a possible no-hitter.

In the first contest, K-State pitcher Jeff Peterson threw a complete game allowing only four hits. Peterson, 4-1 on the year, had seven strike outs, walked only three batters and didn't allow an earned run.

"Jeff Peterson threw a great ballgame," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "It was nice that he was able to go the distance, and if we had done the job behind him defensively, he would have had a shutout. We made some defensive mistakes that put us in the hole a bit."

Matt Ballou, 3-2, was the losing pitcher for the Owls. Ballou had allowed only five hits before David Garza came in as relief during the sixth inning.

The weather played a major role in keeping the ball down and making it fall shorter than normal. Neither team was able to muster a strong attack.

"Jeff Peterson threw a great ballgame. It was nice that he was able to go the distance, and if we had done the job behind him defensively, he would have had a shutout.

—Mike Clark

"It was a ridiculous day to try and hit the ball," Clark said. "As far as the hitting was concerned, we had to do what we could with what offense we had. We got some help from Tarkio with six walks. We got people on bases and stole bases and advanced the runners good.

"It was definitely a good day for pitchers to throw. A solid line drive didn't have a prayer in this wind. Playing in wind is tough, but we've got to learn to play in these elements," Clark said.

Tarkio wasted no time in jumping out to a 1-0 lead in the first inning.

In the bottom of the inning, K-State scored two runs to take the lead for good. Tony Braddock started the inning with a single. Ballou then walked Kent Gleason. Mike Rosenboom then hit a single to drive in Braddock and Gleason advanced to third. A sacrifice fly by Jim Donohue brought Gleason across the plate to make it 2-1.

The following inning, K-State added a run when Reese Beers was walked and then later scored on a wild pitch.

In the sixth inning, Ballou walked Scott Spangenberg and Jeff Hulse to start before retiring Reese Beers on a strike out. Braddock then hit a grounder into center field to drive in Spangenberg to make it 4-2.

Offensively, K-State was led by Braddock and Gleason with two hits apiece.

K-State will return to action Friday night at 7 when it hosts the University of Oklahoma. The Sooners are ranked 21st in the nation with a 22-8 mark. The four-game series will feature a doubleheader on Saturday at 5 p.m. and will conclude on Sunday with a 1 p.m. game.

Revenue $425,000 from NCAA tourney

By Tom Perrin
Sports Writer

The Big Eight Conference won more games and earned more money in the NCAA men's basketball tournament this year than any league in the nation, and K-State will be a direct beneficiary of this success.

By virtue of Kansas and Oklahoma making the Final Four, K-State making the Midwest regional finals, and Iowa State and Missouri also earning NCAA berths, conference schools will split an estimated $3.7 million. K-State alone accounted for around $900,000 of the revenue, and KU and OU made over $1 million apiece.

Each of the eight conference schools receives an equal share of the profits, similar to the arrangement that occurs when a Big Eight team plays in a football bowl game. K-State's share will be around $425,000, according to Mike Jones, business manager of K-State's athletic department.

"You can imagine if the Big Eight had one team in the tournament and it lost in the first round, then it's $25,000 (for each school)," Jones said.

The $425,000 is the most K-State has ever gained from the NCAA tournament in one year. Last year, conference schools made $225,000 apiece, and in 1985 — when KU made the Final Four — $250,000 each.

NCAA money already received this year adds up to around 7 percent of the K-State athletic budget, Jones said. While the men's basketball program will benefit some from its own success, it won't receive any more money proportionally than any other varsity sport.

Once the tournament money is received, it will be placed in the athletic department's general fund and distributed to each sport in proportion to the percentage of the budget each sport currently receives, Jones said.

K-State will receive its check sometime around July 1 and will send it directly to the Big Eight office in Kansas City, Mo., where it will be divided up with the other checks received by Big Eight schools in the tournament.

"The thing to remember about it is that we don't see the money until the end of October (1988), when all the calculations are made," Jones said.

The Atlantic Coast Conference, with Duke in the Final Four, will receive around $3.2 million — the next largest amount of money — followed by the Big East Conference with almost $3 million and the Big Ten Conference with about $2.8 million.

UCLA gets rights to talk to Brown

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Kansas Athletic Director Bob Frederick said Tuesday he has given permission for UCLA to talk to Larry Brown about its vacant basketball coaching position.

Brown was also named the Naismith Coach of the Year Tuesday.

Brown, completing his fifth season as head basketball coach at the University of Kansas, has recently been rumored to be heading back to UCLA, where he coached previously for two seasons.

Brown refused to talk about it Monday night after Kansas won the NCAA title in an 83-79 upset of Oklahoma.

Asked about efforts to keep Brown in Lawrence, Frederick said: "We haven't had a chance to talk yet. Larry is going to be very busy the next couple of days. I would hope we would talk this weekend or early next week."

Sports Information Director Marc Dellins of UCLA said late Tuesday: "UCLA has asked for and received permission to discuss the position of head basketball coach with Larry Brown."

A crowd of 30,000 people welcomed the Jayhawks back to the campus Tuesday afternoon and chanted Brown's name repeatedly when Chancellor Gene Budig asked if they wanted Brown to stay.

"I think he got the message," said Budig, who introduced his basketball coach as "that maker of miracles."

Brown had little to say about the matter after the rally. "I have got to talk to Bob (Frederick), I've got to talk to my family," Brown said at a news conference after the rally.

"I think it got ridiculous with all the speculation at the Final Four about which coach is going where," Brown said.

The rumors last year had Brown, then completing his fourth season at KU, back in pro basketball as coach of the New York Knicks. But he was awarded a four-year contract beginning this season.

Brown, 47, has moved around in his 16 years of coaching college and pro teams, and he's never had a losing record. He coached Carolina of the old American Basketball Association from 1972-74, Denver of the ABA from 1974-79, UCLA from 1979-81, New Jersey of the National Basketball Association from 1981-1983 and Kansas since the start of the 1983-84 season.

Golfers finish last in classic

K-State's women's golf team showed improvement Tuesday, but was unable to move up in the standings at the Susie Maxwell Berning Classic hosted by the University of Oklahoma.

New Mexico State maintained its lead on the second day of competition, finished with 955 to win the 12-team tournamnent played at Trails Golf Course. K-State finished last with 1,114. K-State had totals of 381, 363 and 370 on each round of 18 on the par 72 course.

Kansas beats tennis team

K-State's women's tennis team suffered it's first Big Eight Conference loss Tuesday, 7-2, against Kansas at Lawrence.

With the loss, the Wildcats fall to 6-5 on the season and 1-1 in Big Eight play.

"We played an excellent match," Coach Steve Bietau said. "This was the closest we have ever played KU."

Under extreme playing conditions, the Wildcats were competitive in every match against KU.

"We have never played under these conditions with all the car noise from the pep assembly and the wind," Bietau said. "The players did a good job of handling the situation and not letting it affect them."

In singles action Valerie Rive' at No.3 and Sigrid Ivarsson at No. 4 were the two winners for K-State.

New challenges await Henson

By Kenny Harrison
Collegian Reporter

K-State's men's basketball team's starting guard traded in his basketball shoes for a half a dozen pair of track spikes this week.

Steve Henson, also a high jumper and decathlete, began practice as a multi-purpose track and field athlete Monday, and will have to make some adjustments and sacrifices in order to catch up with the rest of the team to be prepared for the Big Eight Conference's outdoor meet in May.

The adjustments will not be easy. Just ask Henson.

"After having a good basketball season, it's kind of hard getting motivated for the track season," he said.

Since basketball season didn't end until last week, Henson has only six weeks to prepare for the Big Eight meet. Lack of practice time is frustrating for Henson, considering most of the other track athletes have had the entire season to get prepared for the meet.

Because he doesn't have as much time to prepare, Henson sets his sights on the Big Eight meet. But putting so much pressure on one meet can backfire, as Henson knows.

"Last year, the way things were rushed after the basketball season was over, I was kind of basing my whole track season on the Big Eight meet," he said.

Henson false started in the 100-meter dash on the first day of the decathlon at the conference meet last season. It cost him the race, plus he was unable to finish the decathlon.

"I feel like I have something to prove after what happened to me last year at the Big Eight meet," Henson said.

K-State track coach John Capriotti thinks Henson will bounce back even stronger this season after last year's incident.

"Steve is the kind of guy that you can't keep down for too long. He is a pretty intense guy and so mentally tough that I see that incident as a

Golf industry backs turf research

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

Just north of the K-State campus, some of the most significant putting green research is underway.

"It will be the most sophisticated temperature stress and temperature monitoring project on turf grass anywhere in the world," said Jeff Nus, assistant professor of horticulture and a specialist in turf grass research and teaching.

The research involves building a golf course green to the specifications of the United States Golf Course Association.

The putting green research, using several different turf grass species, is being conducted at the Rocky Ford Research plots, located about three miles north of the campus.

"The real exciting thing about this is that there are six specific areas (for research) on this putting green," he said. The temperature studies will be held in two of the six areas and are worth $80,000.

The Heart of America Golf Course Superintendents Association and the Kansas Golf Course Superintendents Association have joined together to encourage people from the industry to donate materials, labor and expertise in a major expansion of the turf grass putting green project.

"This is just a good effort by the golf course and turf grass industries of Kansas to back our K-State program here," he said.

The idea for putting green research originated when Nus first arrived at K-State. He solicited ideas from various turf grass factions, including golf courses, park departments, home lawn owners and professional lawn applicators, about what kind of turf grass research they thought to be should be done.

The purpose, Nus said, was to assure a good relationship with the industry.

"(People in the industry) need to know that we (researchers) are meeting their needs, and how are we going to know this unless we asked them what they wanted," he said.

Staff/Greg Vogel

Jeff Nus, assistant professor of horticulture and a specialist in turf grass research and teaching, examines turf grass at the Rocky Ford Turf Grass Research plots, where a putting green is being built that will contain six areas of research including temperature studies.

What Nus found was a desire for more putting green research, but putting greens are very expensive to build, he said. The department solicited the industry for donations of materials

A type of highly specialized grass with a very specific use called creeping bent grass is being used for putting green turfs, he said.

The initial excavation work for the project was done in mid-February. Within two weeks the subgrade, irrigation heads, pipes and most of the groundwork had been completed.

"We are going to be researching a really great idea," he said.

This particular "idea" was brought forward by a manufacturer of turf grass equipment. The manufacturer is sponsoring a project that involves running plastic pipe through the root zone, about 8 inches to 12 inches deep in the sand profile. This system is intended to cool the putting green in the summer and warm it during the winter, making it easier for golf course managers to manage the turf in the summer as well as extend the growing and playing season, Nus said.

Half of the temperature modification study will involve placing pipes at a certain depth and spacing. Running water is to be circulated in the pipes down into the earth to a depth of about 150 feet and then back to the surface at a constant 55 degrees. This would then have the effect of cooling and warming the green as needed during the different seasons, Nus said.

"This uses the earth as a heat sync, or heat source, in trying to moderate the temperature extremes," he said.

The other half of the study involves the same idea. Instead of relying only on the earth as the heat sync, however, heat pumps will also be used, allowing for temperatures to be cooler in summer and warmer in the off season, he said.

"This is an extremely exciting project and it has got people in the USGA and the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America very excited about it," he said.

"The projects broaden our whole horizon of what we can do for the industry here in Kansas," Nus said.

Permits approved for mall

By The Collegian Staff

A permit system for events on the plaza in front of the Manhattan Town Center received preliminary approval Tuesday by the Manhattan City Commission.

City Attorney William Frost presented an ordinance to regulate events taking place on the plaza.

"This ordinance allows the parks and recreation director to enforce rules and regulations on what can go on in the plaza," Frost said.

The ordinance defines an "event" as: an activity with items on public display, an activity that uses city utilities including water and electricity, or an activity that is designed to attract public attention with an intent to draw a crowd, Frost said.

If the activity falls under one of these categories, it must comply with regulations defined by the ordinance, Frost said.

Open burnings and the preparation and sale of food in the plaza are prohibited under the ordinance. "This includes food booths and popcorn venders," Frost said.

Commissioners unanimously approved the first reading of the ordinance. A permit system will now be drawn up to regulate plaza events.

In other matters, Assistant City Manager Jim Pearson told the Commission that the city's liability insurance doesn't protect city officials from liability concerning the animal shelter.

The city must obtain the proper liability insurance to cover the shelter and city officials, Pearson said. The city turned over control of the shelter to the Board of Health in January because the city's insurance did not cover the shelter.

"(The health board has) been operating the shelter for the last three months. And since then, everything has been all right, he said.

"But we must have coverage. If someone brings suit, we don't want a half million dollars hanging over our heads."

Senate debates raise for students' attorney

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

Implementing a clause in the Kansas Open Meetings Law, Student Senate went into executive session for almost two hours Tuesday to evaluate the salary and performance of Dianne Urban, the students' attorney.

The clause allows governmental bodies to meet without the public or press present in order to discuss personnel matters.

"In the past, (the attorney's position) has been a divisive issue. Under such conditions of zeal, people sometimes make statements which are not true and are misleading, even if they do not intend to make them," said Justin Sanders, graduate school senator, when he moved that Senate enter executive session.

"The position requires the respect of students and we do not want an error to reflect badly on the students' attorney," he said.

The Senate Finance Committee recommended that Senate raise Urban's $23,640-per-year salary to $24,828. This 5-percent raise was suggested because it is the same raise that classified University personnel (custodians, secretaries, etc.) will receive.

An amendment by Filza Hassan, engineering senator, proposed raising Urban's salary to $26,940.

While in executive session, another amendment proposed that Urban receive no salary increase next year.

Both amendments were defeated when action was taken after the executive session concluded.

A third proposal made by Greg Weisenborn, engineering senator, would have given Urban a 7.9-percent raise, bringing her salary to $25,500 — the same percentage faculty salaries would be increased under the latest Margin of Excellence proposal.

This amendment failed by a 26-21 vote.

Senate then passed the original Finance Committee's recommendation increasing Urban's salary to $24,828 for next year.

"Nobody in his right mind wants to go through with this every year."
—Dianne Urban, students' attorney

Urban said she was disappointed because she thought the compromise figure ($25,500) would pass.

"It doesn't even bring (my salary) up to the national level in 1985," she said.

According to a survey conducted at the Students Legal Services Conference in the summer of 1985, the average national salary was $26,153.

Urban said she disagreed with the evaluation process. She said she would like Senate to get her salary "up to a reasonable level" and then pass a bill which would automatically adopt a raise based on what the Kansas Legislature recommends for unclassified personnel (professors and administrators).

"Nobody in his right mind wants to go through with this every year," said Urban, who has been the students' attorney for five years.

According to an attorney in private practice, who asked not to be identified, the average starting salary for a lawyer in Kansas is between $25,000 and $30,000 per year. He said someone with five years of experience can expect to double his or her starting salary.

In other action, Senate made tentative allocations to the Association of Adults Returning To School, the Mexican American Council of Students, and Students Against Drunk Drivers.

Each group received approximately $275 for office supplies, advertising expenses and newsletter publication.

Arab hijackers seize jet, demand prisoners' release

Kuwaiti royal family among hostages

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Arab hijackers Tuesday forced a Kuwait Airways jumbo jet to land in northeastern Iran, threatened to blow it up and demanded that Kuwait release 17 pro-Iranian prisoners. They later released 24 of the 112 passengers.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said without elaboration that the 24 women were released early today after negotiations with Iran's deputy prime minister, Ali Reza Moayyeri.

Among the other passengers were three members of Kuwait's royal family and a passenger with a U.S. passport, on a flight from Bangkok, Thailand, to Kuwait. The gunmen warned the Kuwaiti royals would be "in imminent danger" if Kuwait refused to free the prisoners, IRNA reported.

The hijackers, brandishing pistols and hand grenades, identified themselves only as Arabs. But their demands echoed those of Iranian-backed Shiite Moslems holding American hostages in Lebanon.

The Kuwaiti government rejected the hijackers' demand to release 17 prisoners, calling it "blackmail," but said it would listen to other demands, the Kuwait News Agency reported.

After an emergency session, Kuwait's government said it will send a three-man delegation this morning "to help Iranian authorities" secure the passengers' release.

Iran asked Kuwait to send a high-ranking delegation to Mashhad in northeastern Iran for direct talks with the hijackers.

The hijackers earlier demanded fuel for the aircraft and threatened to blow it up if the Iranians approached. IRNA initially said the Iranians refueled the plane, but then said the gunmen were still requesting fuel.

Iranian security forces surrounded the plane at Mashhad airport to keep it from taking off, IRNA and Tehran Radio said.

Kuwait urged Iran to handle the incident "wisely" and requested that the aircraft not be allowed to leave. Iran said it would try to resolve the crisis peacefully but said the plane would have to leave if it was not resolved quickly.

The plane was commandeered three hours after it took off from Bangkok with 97 passengers and 15 crew members.

IRNA reported that the hijackers said in a statement radioed to the control tower at Mashhad airport: "We ask you Iranian officials to mediate between us and the Kuwaiti government if you want."

"Our rights have been usurped ... We have 17 prisoners in Kuwaiti jails who are under the worst kind of torture...

"If you do not want to mediate, we ask for fuel and other needs and then we will take off," the statement said, according to IRNA.

IRNA, monitored in Nicosia, said a Jordanian passenger with a heart condition was freed several hours after the plane landed at Mashhad at 7:30 a.m. (midnight EDT).

The passenger list included 30 Kuwaitis, 22 Britons, eight Thais, various other nationalities and one person with a U.S. and an Egyptian passport identified only as R. Attiaallaali.

But the U.S. State Department said it believed no Americans were aboard. In Washington, spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said the U.S. government urged Iran to see that the hijackers are caught and tried.

Hundreds of Kuwaitis are related to Kuwait's emir, Sheik Jaber Al-Ahmed Al-Sabah, the target of an assassination attempt by pro-Iranian extremists in 1986.

Meese selects alternates

One position now remains to be filled

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Edwin Meese III on Tuesday announced replacements for the No. 2 and No. 3 positions in the Justice Department, but was unable to fill the post vacated by last week's protest resignation of Assistant Attorney General William Weld.

Meese said he would recommend John C. Shepherd, a past president of the American Bar Association, and Francis A. Keating II, a top Treasury Department law enforcement official, for the two top-level Justice Department posts.

Shepherd would replace Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns. He resigned a week ago along with Weld, then head of the criminal division, out of what department sources said was concern that the criminal investigation of Meese by independent counsel James C. McKay was hurting the department's operations and its image.

Shepherd, who was ABA president in 1984-85 and currently is a partner in a St. Louis law firm, "will be a highly distinguished and most welcome addition to the Justice Department family as my second in command," Meese told a news conference.

Keating, 44, currently the assistant treasury secretary for enforcement, will replace Associate Attorney General Stephen Trott and "can hit the ground running" in the Justice Department's work in combating illegal drugs, Meese said. Trott is leaving Washington to become a federal appeals court judge.

Keating is a former U.S. attorney in Oklahoma and an FBI agent. Meese called Keating and Shepherd "two distinguished men" and said they will serve in an acting capacity until they are confirmed by the Senate.

Asked whether if he had second thoughts about taking the job, Keating said:

"Certainly the events of last week made me as a professional pause, but I have every confidence in the leadership of the department and the attorney general. I think with our new team here the operation of the department will continue."

Meese made the announcements after Philadelphia lawyer Arlin Adams and a Labor Department official declined to be nominated earlier in the day.

Adams said a heavy caseload at his Philadelphia law firm prevented him from taking the job which Shepherd agreed to take.

Meanwhile, Meese was unable to find a replacement for Weld, department sources said.

Meese said he probably will announce a recommended replacement for Weld after the attorney general returns from a week-long trip to South America to discuss the war on drugs with officials in several countries there.

A Justice Department source said Salvatore R. Martoche, now an assistant secretary in the Labor Department, had rejected a request from Meese to take the job of assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division.

Martoche decided not to take the job "because of the taint factor" relating to the continuing criminal investigation of Meese, said the source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Meese declined to say whether he had offered Martoche the job, but said he had spoken to a number of people about it.

Census Bureau's findings: America is 'turning gray'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — America's population is older than ever, with maturing Baby Boomers and the growing number of elderly pulling the median age past 32 years for the first time, new Census Bureau figures showed Tuesday.

"The 'Graying of America' is ... documented by its increasing age. The median age was 32.1 years on July 1, 1987," bureau statistician Louisa Miller reported.

Rising from 31.8 in 1986, it was the highest median age in U.S. history. Median is the point at which half of all Americans are older than that age and half younger.

Racially, the median age for whites hit 33 for the first time, up from 32.7 in 1986. Black median age was 27.2 in 1987, up from 26.9 and the first time that group had surpassed 27.

The national median rose with the help of several factors, including the growing number of elderly Americans, the maturing of the post-World War II Baby Boom and the small "Baby Bust" generation that followed.

The median age reached 30 for the first time in 1950, but the rapid growth of the Baby Boom that was then occurring pulled it down in the following years.

As that huge segment of the nation ages, though, it is moving the median in the other direction.

The Census Bureau reported that the 35-44 age group, the leading edge of the Baby Boom generation, has been the fastest-growing segment of the population since 1980, up by more than one-third.

And as improved medical care extends lifespans, the next-fastest-growing groups are those 85 and over and those 75 to 84, the report said.

"The repercussions of the Baby Boom are many and varied. They will continue to affect the United States for many years to come," the Census Bureau's Miller said in a telephone interview.

They are now at the age where they have more discretionary income, and the effect can be seen in the nation's culture and marketing, she said.

This generation's arrival spurred a boom in sales of baby products. They then proceeded to overwhelm the school system, followed by creation of a national orientation toward teen-age music and styles.

Now, as they set up more and smaller households, they are prompting a boom in sales housing and household goods, marketing experts say.

"Further down the road, once they begin to reach retirement age, they will obviously have a great effect on the direction the country takes," Miller said.

Meanwhile, she noted, the Boomers are being followed by the much smaller Baby Bust generation, leaving fast food outlets, retail stores and others offering entry-level jobs searching for employees.

The Boomers boosted the 35-44 age group by 33.8 percent between 1980 and 1987, to some 34.4 million people, the bureau reported.

Farm machinery bill passed

Tax revision added after floor debate

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate Tuesday passed, 29-9, a bill exempting manufacturing and farm machinery from the state's 4 percent sales tax.

The bill, incorporating part of Gov. Mike Hayden's corporate tax revision proposal, was amended during floor debate Monday to include farm machinery.

Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, chairman of the Assessment and Taxation Committee, warned the bill may have been jeopardized by all the exemptions added to it. Kerr urged its defeat, saying it was so weighted down with exemptions for special interest groups that it no longer represents "good tax policy."

Kerr promised to run another sales tax exemption bill if this one failed, but the Senate approved it anyway, with eight votes to spare.

Sen. Jack Steineger, D-Kansas City, protested its passage, saying the money it will cost the state in lost revenue — more than $20 million — should be funneled into state aid for local school districts to hold down property taxes.

The Senate also passed, 39-0, and sent to the House a bill that would make organizations meeting a "demonstrated community need" exempt from local property taxes.

The bill may not provide an exemption to certain organizations that had been previously exempt, however, including the Topeka YMCA.

Kerr amended the bill to broaden the definition of a tax-exempt service organization, but warned that some organizations, such as the Topeka YMCA, still might not be eligible.

"Tax exemption is a privilege," Kerr said. "We have to draw a line somewhere and that's what this bill does."

The bill was introduced after some traditionally exempted organizations, such as the Topeka YMCA and the Johnson County Salvation Army, were placed on the local property tax rolls. The Topeka YMCA has filed suit to regain its exemption.

Officials from other organizations across the state feared they would lose their exemptions as well.

Kerr said that the Topeka YMCA probably would not be exempt under the bill, but the YWCA would be because of the types of programs it offers.

The bill to exempt manufacturing machinery from the sales tax is designed to make Kansas more competitive with other states in attracting businesses and to encourage expansion of existing companies. The part exempting proposal would cost the state about $16 million in sales tax revenue.

"We know we can't be the lowest tax state in the nation," Kerr said. "But we're trying to avoid areas where we stick out like a sore thumb."

He said only about eight states collect a tax from the sales of manufacturing equipment.

Sen. Dan Thiessen, R-Independence, successfully amended the bill, 22-14, to include farm machinery, which would cost the state another $5.5 million in tax revenue.

"We're one of the few states that still tax farm machinery despite problems in agriculture," Thiessen said.

He added it was unfair to grant manufacturers the exemption but not the farm industry.

"Are we going to treat the biggest industry in Kansas the same way we treat the other ones?" Thiessen asked.

Kerr opposed the amendment, saying the the bill is intended to encourage the expansion of the manufacturing sector in the state and the creation of jobs.

Jackson, 180,208, or 31 percent.
Gore 94,909, or 16 percent.
Simon 27,714, or 5 percent.

Bush was winning 85 percent of the vote, to 7 percent for Robertson and campaign dropout Sen. Bob Dole.

For the Democrats, Wisconsin turned out to be a surprisingly important test in their nominating wars, a gauge of a struggling Dukakis campaign and of Jackson's surprising momentum. It was a prelude, as well, to delegate-rich primaries in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio just ahead.

Dukakis campaigned hard in search of a victory to silence the critics who said defeats last month in Illinois and Michigan called into question his ability to attract the blue collar votes a Democrat needs to win the White House in the fall election.

Jackson aimed for a win in a state where only 4 percent of the voters were black, reckoning that would give him dramatic new stature in the race.

Gore spent heavily in television advertising in hopes of sneaking up on his rivals or at least winning 20 percent of the popular vote. He needed that much to re-qualify for federal matching campaign funds.

Simon's campaign manager, Brian Lunde, anticipating a fourth-place finish in Wisconsin, said the senator was returning to Washington and would make a statement Thursday about his campaign.

Policy

Caucus.

Some of those groups then made recommendations for changes and improvements.

Coyner said the task force did not receive a response from the Classified Affairs Committee, Council of Deans or Faculty Senate.

"I am very disappointed, because the policy on gender will not be effective unless it has a broad base of support. However, we hope the lack of response means that people do not have serious objections to the policy," Coyner said.

James Koelliker, chair of Faculty Senate's Faculty Affairs Committee, said his committee reviewed and commented on the policy informally at a February meeting. But, he said, no action was taken on the policy.

"The general consensus of the committee was the document sent to us was not a policy. It was a white paper, a statement of the situation," Koelliker said. "A gender policy is relevant to this day and age at a university ... but the original statement (we received) was not a policy we could act upon."

Koelliker said the original policy contained anecdotal material and projected goals which should not be included in a policy.

Koelliker said he had spoken with Coyner about his committee's reaction to the proposal. And, he said, when the policy is written in policy form, he would expect Faculty Senate to endorse it.

The recommendations received from Student Senate and Faculty Women's Caucus recognized the need for a policy, but said it should be more concise than the eight-page proposal the task force proposed.

The Commission on the Status of Women recommended the policy's adoption and the placement of a brief statement on gender in faculty and student handbooks.

Coyner said the policy was sent to Wefald in the form of a cover statement as suggested by the Faculty Women's Caucus. It will include the original proposal for background.

"Boiling down the policy to a one-page argument is oversimplifying it," Coyner said. "If people think this is obvious, they don't understand. (The policy is) obviously right, but it's not obvious how to do it."

Coyner said Wefald will be asked to seek endorsements for the policy and make it a University policy. He will also be asked to establish a committee to implement the policy.

Peanut Butter Meat Balls

½ cup peanut butter
½ pound ground beef
¼ cup finely chopped onion
2 tablespoons chili sauce
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 egg, beaten
2 tablespoons peanut oil
2 cups seasoned tomato sauce

Mix peanut butter lightly with beef, onion, chili sauce, salt, pepper, and egg.

Form into 12 meat balls. Brown in hot peanut oil. Add tomato sauce, cover, and simmer about 30 minutes.

Chicken with Peanut Butter

Barbecue Sauce

½ cup peanut butter
¼ cup honey
¼ cup soy sauce
1 clove garlic, chopped fine
1 cup beef broth
¼ teaspoon fresh ground black pepper
2 broiler-fryer chickens, 2½ to 3 pounds quartered

Combine peanut butter, honey, soy sauce, onion, garlic, broth and pepper; stir to blend. Place quartered chickens in flat pan and spread with half the sauce. Let stand for several hours in refrigerator. Cook over coals or under broiler, basting with remainder of sauce until tender, about 30-40 minutes. (Serves eight)

Editors' note: Information about peanuts and peanut butter was obtained from "The 'I Love Peanut Butter' Cookbook," by William I. Kaufman.

Henson

positive one for him, Capriotti said.

"He's going to remember that and make sure it doesn't happen again."

Despite the frustrations that track has brought to Henson, he thinks the sport is a positive influence to his basketball performance.

"I think both sports help each other out ... the high jump and basketball go together very well," Henson said.

Henson added that basketball also helps his track abilities.

Basketball conditioning gives him a head start in being physically prepared for the outdoor season, he said.

"I feel like I'm in pretty good shape. We did a good job of lifting during the season and it shouldn't take me very long to get back into the shape I need to be in for the track season," he said.

Henson will be making an even greater sacrifice with his time during the track season than he did on the court playing basketball, Capriotti said. Each day's practice will cover a timeframe of three hours more than an average day of basketball practice.

Henson will have a different coach for each specific area he competes in. Scott Bennett will provide the skills in the high jump, long jump and pole vault. Darryl Anderson will coach him in the sprints and hurdles. Raymond Hansen will teach Henson the correct form in the shotput, discus and javlin. And Capriotti will work with him in the distance running categories.

Henson will also have someone monitoring his weight lifting.

An added load to Henson's time is the fact that he will continue to work out with the basketball team for an hour a day in order to keep his basketball skills sharp.

Capriotti thinks being in both sports is good for Henson, but that he could be an even better athlete if he could concentrate on one of them at a time.

"He sacrifices specific workouts to get him ready for track because he's going right into track right out of basketball," Capriotti said.

Henson hopes he can compete Saturday at the KSU Pepsi Invitational.

MAGNIFICENT AMBERSONS
Orson Welles' second film masterpiece is the story of the declining magnificence of an American dynasty, where the individual is forced to meet the new socio-economic world head-on. The screenplay by Welles from the novel by Booth Tarkington focuses on young George Amberson, whose insolence and ambition cause the people he has abused to hope for hes eventual downfall. A true screen classic. Unrated.

Middle East violence claims 3 more lives

By The Associated Press

BEITA, Occupied West Bank — A holiday hike by Israeli teen-agers ended Wednesday in a melee of shooting and stone-throwing in an Arab town. A 14-year-old Israeli girl and two Palestinians were killed.

Hours after the clash, Jewish settlers raided the nearby Arab village of Hawwara, smashing car windshields, beating villagers and breaking into homes, said Jihad Howari, the Israeli-appointed head of the village council.

The youngsters, children of Jewish settlers on the occupied West Bank, were on a Passover outing and had stopped for a picnic lunch when the trouble began with stone-throwing. Members of the group said Arabs offering to help then led them to Beita.

Arabs wrestled two automatic rifles from the group's two Israeli guards but did not fire them, the army reported.

Arab witnesses said the Israelis started the trouble by killing an Arab.

Army spokesmen originally said the girl, Tirza Porat, and several other Israeli teen-agers were shot but reported later that she was killed by a rock.

Eleven of the 18 hikers, the 60-year-old man acting as guide, and one of the two Israeli guards were injured and two Palestinians were wounded by gunfire, the army said.

Dozens of settlers waving an Israeli flag held a vigil Wednesday night near Beita, which the army had sealed off, and said they would build a new settlement in the area.

Tirza Porat's death was the first of an Israeli civilian in the violence that has swept the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip since Dec. 8. At least 140 Arabs have died, according to U.N. figures, and one Israeli soldier has been killed.

Israelis have been especially sensitive to the possibility of attacks on children, and warnings followed Wednesday's fatal confrontation.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said on Israel radio: "Israel will cut off the murderers' hands and will not let the evil terror achieve its aim."

According to Israeli witnesses and the army, the hikers stopped for a picnic lunch in a dry riverbed just outside Beita.

The Israelis left the area, but "soon we discovered we were being followed by dozens of Arabs," said Fuchs, whose right arm and chest were bandaged. He spoke from his bed in Jerusalem's Hadassah Hospital.

He said some of the Arabs, apparently wanting to help, offered to lead the teen-agers out of the area through Beita, a town of about 12,000 people.

Lt. Gen. Dan Shomron, the army chief of staff, said dozens of people began throwing stones at the youngsters in Beita and the shooting started. He said the Israeli girl and the two Arabs were killed during the battle.

Speaker: Society views AIDS patients as cursed

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

How society reacts to AIDS in relation to other illnesses was the focus of Susan Sontag's convocation lecture Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

Society needs one major disease that attaches blame to victims, Sontag said. In the past, this disease has been cancer, and it has been recently replaced by AIDS.

Sontag identified military metaphors for disease that are in common use today. For example, disease was identified as an invading army that is fighting the body's defenses. Physicians wage war on the disease and large segments of society work together for its eradication.

"(The) disease wars cause attribution of fault to the victims," she said.

As with some diseases in the past, such as syphilis, a certain negative stigma is attached to having AIDS. However, in some countries — including Africa, where AIDS is spread primarily through the heterosexual population — there is no negative stigma attached to having the disease. In America it is seen as a moral judgment.

"(The lack of stigma in other countries) has not prevented squads of moralists from seeing AIDS as a judgment on homosexuals," she said. "There will be no quick fix, no magic bullet for AIDS," she said.

Historically, AIDS and syphilis have very similar patterns of affecting the patient. Both are slow diseases with long latency periods. They progress in stages which are often undetected for years. In comparison, cancer progresses rapidly.

"A cancer is thought of as growing. It advances through the body traveling along a predicted route," she said.

Citing the example of Europe in the 1490s, Sontag said syphilis was responsible for the deaths of between one-half and one-third of the European population. It is not possible to say if the AIDS epidemic might reach this proportion. However, it is seen as a deviant behavior because it is usually transmitted through either sex or drugs.

"We're in the early stages of a sexual repression," Sontag said.

The general population is still being told to

Senate to hear MOE bill today

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

The Kansas Senate Ways and Means Committee completed action on the Board of Regents' Margin of Excellence proposal Wednesday.

The bill will go to the full Senate today, but debate will probably will not begin until Friday, said Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City.

"I don't see any major problems getting the entire package through the Senate," he said.

Werts said the two major amendments to the bill included the House's addition of $1.7 million to alleviate potential salary disparities between teaching and non-teaching faculty and the Senate's addition of $4.5 million to fund first year targeted investments at six regents universities.

Werts said the MOE package would also allocate $140,000 for K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine to fund the hiring of five new faculty members.

James Coffman, University provost, said the Senate's proposed funding level for the additional faculty will only cover salaries for six months.

Werts said an additional $190,000 has been proposed for the K-State veterinary medicine school to help toward accreditation.

Coffman said monies the Senate is proposing for the veterinary medicine school are self-generated by tuition increases and revenues from contractural agreements on non-resident veterinary medicine students.

"Since 1985 student fees and contractural agreements have generated about $750,000, and general revenue contributions have been about $390,000," he said.

Police continue investigation

Remains may be linked to disappearances

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Police continued Wednesday looking for clues that might link a man to the unsolved disappearance of 11 men after his arrest for assault and sodomy led to the discovery of skulls and bone fragments.

Professor helps with investigation/Page 3

The puzzling, bizarre case of Robert A. Berdella began unfolding last weekend when a man wearing only a dog collar told police he had jumped from a second-story window after four days of torture and sexual assault at Berdella's midtown home.

At a hearing Tuesday where Berdella's $500,000 bond was revoked, police said they had found 57 photographs showing the 22-year-old man being tortured and sexually abused.

Detective Ashley Hurn showed 12 of the photos to Associate Circuit Judge Charles Stitt, and said police had found about 200 pictures showing similar abuse of other young men.

Detective William Wilson said one of the pictures showed a man who appeared to be dead suspended by his ankles in the basement of Berdella's home.

Berdella, 39, is charged with seven counts of forcible sodomy and one each of felonious restraint and first-degree assault, all involving the 22-year-old man.

Police said Wednesday their excavation in Berdella's back yard is complete, and they were reviewing the material found there and in the home. They said they don't know yet whether bone fragments found in the yard Tuesday afternoon are human.

A skull was found buried in the yard on Sunday, and two others were discovered in the house the day before. The buried skull still had some skin and hair attached to it, and all three are believed to be human, though one is thought to be a relic.

Police said they were looking for any link between Berdella and the disappearances of Gerald D. Howell in 1984 and Walter James Ferris in 1985. Members of their families have said Berdella was among the last persons with whom they were seen.

The police have chosen the cases of nine other young men, most of whom disappeared in 1984 and 1985, to look for any similarities. Sgt. Jon Perry, who has been in training since January with the Center for the Analysis of Violent Crime at the FBI Academy in Quantico, Va., is heading up that effort.

Police Chief Larry Joiner said that several years ago police had investigated Berdella in connection with a missing persons case.

Officers, he said, "spent a considerable amount of time trying to connect Mr. Berdella to one of those missing persons, including some digging at a possible location where we thought he might be."

However, he said, nothing was found, and police had no evidence to seek charges.

"We can't go on our gut reaction

China denies providing missiles

BEIJING — A government minister, speaking in a rare news conference Wednesday, rejected U.S. claims that China had provided missiles to Iran and said Beijing has behaved responsibly in selling weapons abroad.

Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said his government had taken measures to keep missiles from being sold to Iran for use in its 7½ -year-old war with Iraq.

Before selling intermediate-range conventional missiles to Saudi Arabia, China made the Saudis promise to forgo transfer or first use of them, Wu said. The sale was regarded as unusual because China and anti-communist Saudi Arabia do not have diplomatic relations.

"Our attitude on arms sales is a serious one; it's a responsible one as well," Wu said heatedly when a reporter asked if China was willing to sell weapons to any buyer. "Some press tend to pick on China, and whenever China sells weapons China becomes the newsmaker.

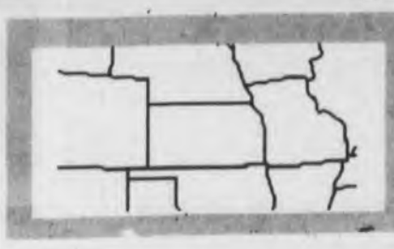
Mother allowed to visit Baby M

NEWARK, N.J. — A judge Wednesday granted surrogate mother Mary Beth Whitehead-Gould immediate, unsupervised visitation of six hours a week with the child she agreed to bear under a $10,000 contract.

Superior Court Judge Birger M. Sween said Whitehead-Gould's visits with 2-year-old Melissa Stern would be expanded from one six-hour day weekly to two days every other week in September, overnight visits in April 1989 and two weeks during that summer.

The judge also ordered the adults in the case to undergo counseling to ease the emotional burden on the child, who lives with her father, William Stern, and his wife, Elizabeth. The Sterns, who hired Whitehead-Gould as a surrogate, have custody of Melissa

In a statement issued by her attorneys, Whitehead-Gould said she was happy her relationship with her daughter "has been preserved."



10,000th McDonald's opens

DALE CITY, Va. — It may seem as if a new set of golden arches is springing up every day, but the McDonald's fast-food restaurant that opened for business Wednesday was special. It was No. 10,000.

The corporation known for reciting numbers as if they had mystical properties — more than 65 billion hamburgers served — dispatched about 20,000 balloons skyward at the opening in Dale City and another 10,000 exactly at the Convention Center in Washington, where it was holding its biannual convention for franchisees and partners, said Richard G. Starmann, senior vice president.

"It's almost 33 years to the day when Ray Kroc opened his first McDonald's," said the corporation's president and chief executive officer, Mike Quinlan. "If Ray were here, he would be fiercely proud of the McDonald's family."

The fast-food chain branched into Eastern Europe on March 24 when it opened a restaurant in Belgrade, the capital of Yugoslavia, and plans to open another one in Budapest in May. Hungary will thus become the 50th country around the world to have a McDonald's.

Woman's body found in lake

OSKALOOSA — The body of a woman was found Wednesday in Lake Perry, Jefferson County officials said.

The sheriff's department said an Army Corps of Engineers employee discovered the body on the bank near the outlet area of the dam. It was taken to an Oskaloosa funeral home for an autopsy.

The car of a Kansas City woman, Cindy Barnes, 21, was found at the dam about two weeks ago, and she has not been seen.

Newton man falls in elevator

NEWTON — A Newton man was seriously injured Wednesday when he fell 40 feet in an elevator at the Cargill Inc. Flour Milling Division, officials said.

Derrill E. Esau, 55, was in the main part of an elevator when he fell, said Newton Fire Chief Clayton Sadowfki. Investigators have not determined why Esau fell, he said.

He was taken to Wesley Medical Center in Wichita.

Man sentenced for marital rape

MANHATTAN — A Colby man convicted in December for marital rape has been sentenced to seven to 21 years in prison.

The sentencing Monday of Donald Lee Cranston, 31, in Riley County District Court was the second in Kansas under the revised state rape law allowing prosecution in spousal rape cases.

Cranston was convicted in December of the rape of his estranged wife at a mobile home July 1.

Judge Harlan Graham said he rejected Cranston's request for probation because of the seriousness of the crime and Cranston's previous problems with the law, including a conviction for misdemeanor disorderly conduct.

"The best predictor of future conduct is the past," the judge said.

Victor White, 40, of Newton, was convicted by a jury in Harvey County District Court in November under the spousal rape law and was sentenced in December to 10 years to life on that charge. White's conviction was the first under the revised law.

Trash haulers find infant's body

WICHITA — The body of a newborn infant was found in the back of a trash truck Wednesday afternoon, Wichita police said.

Detective Capt. John Dotson said the independent haulers were nearing the end of their route when they found the body as they began to compact the accumulated trash. He said investigators did not know if the child was stillborn or had been killed or abandoned after birth.

Police were going back over the route in an effort to determine where the body was picked up.

Golden Arches to grace turnpike

TOPEKA — A new restaurant will be built at the Kansas Turnpike Emporia Service Area at the end of the summer, the Kansas Turnpike Authority announced today.

The service area has not had a restaurant since 1982.

Nick Badwey, authority chairman, said McDonald's Corporation will construct a 5,000 square-foot restaurant with a seating capacity of 110 people.

"We anticipate McDonald's reputation and public recognition will help to meet the needs of our customers and increase traffic on this segment of the turnpike," Badwey said.

Arabs release 24 from Kuwaiti jet

Hijackers demand freedom for 17 Moslem prisoners

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Arab hijackers holding a Kuwaiti jet in Iran freed 24 hostages Wednesday but kept more than 80 others, including three members of the sheikdom's royal family. The hijackers demand a trade for bombers of the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait.

Tehran radio quoted airport authorities at Mashhad in northeastern Iran as saying they would refuel the jumbo jet "to prevent any calamity or incident." There was no word on whether it would leave or where it would go.

A Kuwaiti team of Foreign Ministry officials and physicians arrived at Mashhad, where the Kuwait Airways Boeing 747 landed early Tuesday, to try to "reach a settlement," Iran said.

Its official Islamic Republic News Agency quoted a freed Jordanian passenger as saying there were five or six hijackers, who wore masks and were armed with pistols and hand grenades.

They have demanded the release of 17 Shiite Moslems convicted and imprisoned in Kuwait for bombing the U.S. and French embassies in 1983.

There originally were 112 people aboard the plane and 25 hostages now have been released, leaving a total of 87 people still aboard — both hostages and hijackers.

Food was brought to the plane at 10:45 p.m. (2:15 p.m. CDT), IRNA reported.

More than an hour later the plane was still parked at the airport with all cabin lights off, the agency said, and there had been no further contact with the tower.

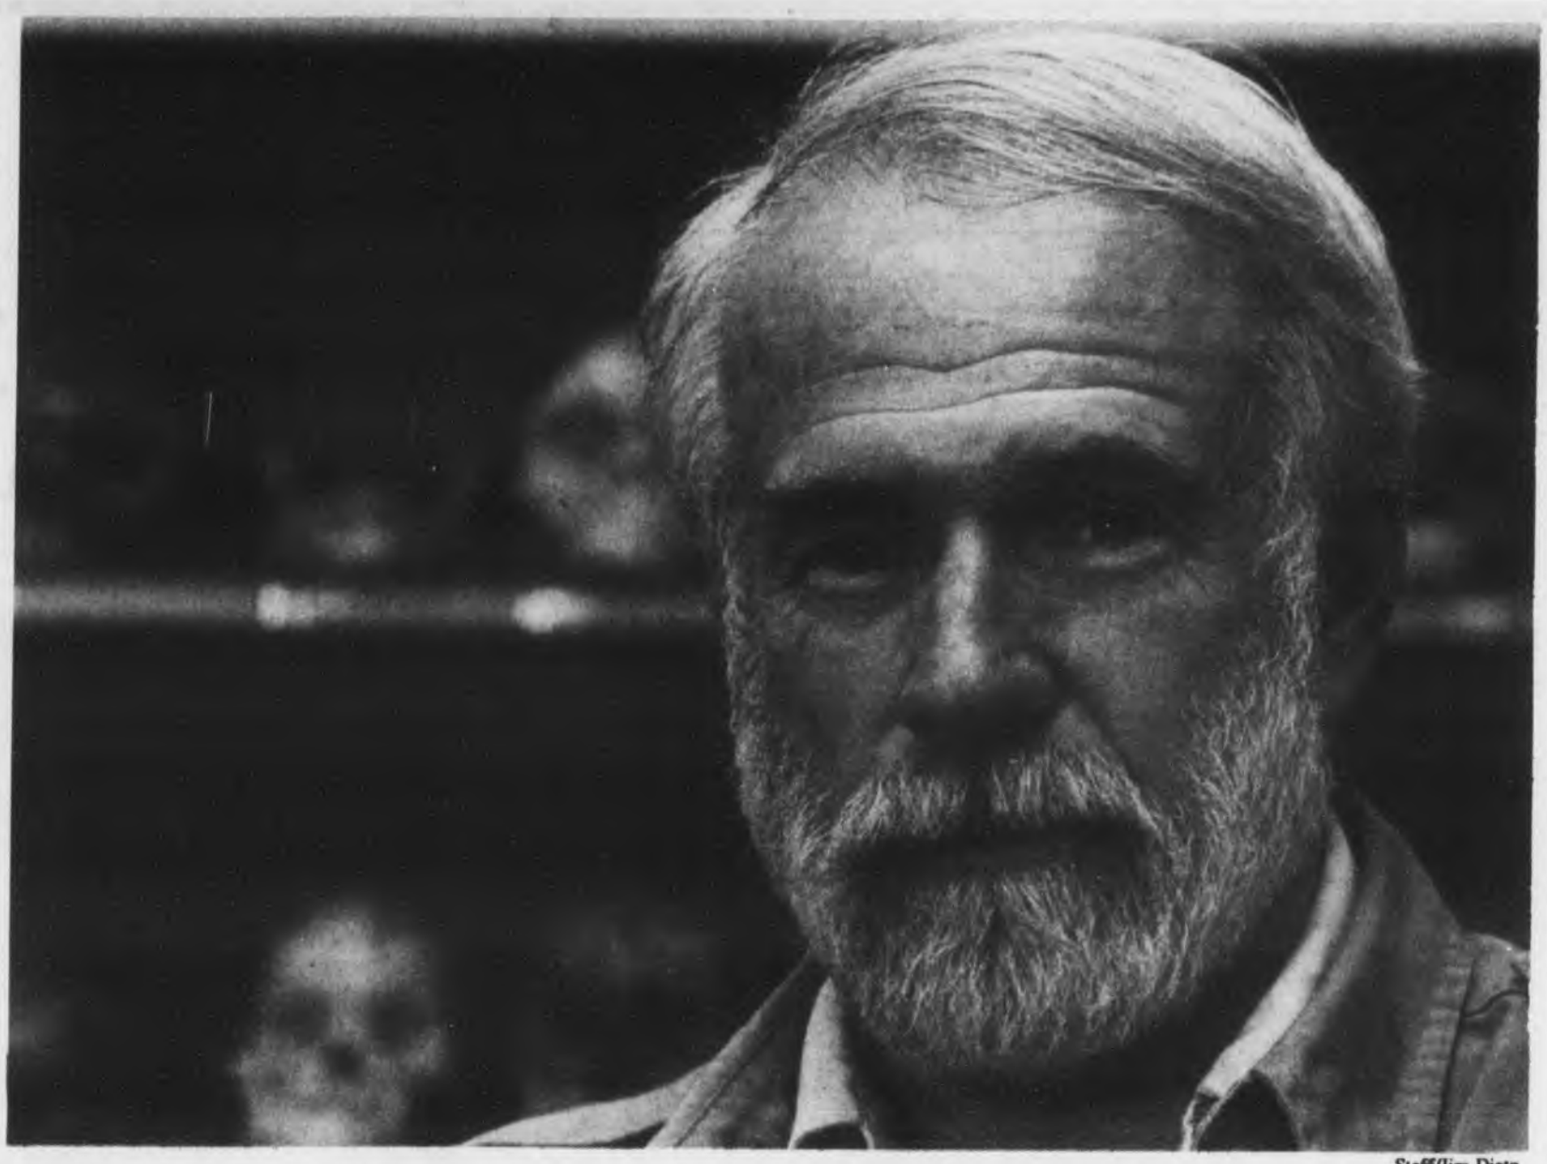
The captive members of Kuwait's ruling Al-Sabah family, two of whom are women, face "imminent danger" if the demands are not met, the hijackers said.

Crown Prince Sheik Saad al-Abdullah al-Sabah presided at an emergency meeting of the Kuwaiti Cabinet during the night and said the government would not submit to "blackmail."

In Washington, the State Department praised the sheikdom for refusing to yield, declaring: "Kuwait has taken an exemplary position in the struggle against international terrorism, and we applaud them for it."

Twelve Britons are on the plane. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said she would not ask Kuwait to negotiate, and told reporters: "We do not give in to blackmail because it only leads to further tragedies."

Relatives have identified the royal prisoners as two sisters in their early 30s, Ebtesam Khaled al-Sabah and Anware Khaled al-Sabah, and brother Fadel Khaled al-Sabah, described as a businessman in his 40s.



In Tehran, senior military spokesman Kamal Kharrazi told a news conference attended by an Associated Press reporter the "hijackers' identity is still not known to us. We only know that they speak Arabic and want the prisoners in Kuwait to be freed."

"We are mal:ing our best efforts to have the passengers released safely and bring this incident to an end without bloodshed," he said.

There was confusion over the deadline for meeting the demands of the hijackers, who seized the plane early Tuesday on a flight from Bangkok, Thailand, to Kuwait.

Five flight attendants among the women released Wednesday said a masked man brandishing a pistol announced the hijack in English as the plane flew over Bombay, India.

One deadline passed at 10 a.m. Wednesday (12:30 a.m. CDT), but then the hijackers called the control tower "to remind that the respite is nearing the end."

Authorities ask professor for help

By Chuck Horner

Law enforcement agencies that find skeletal remains often turn to forensic anthropologists to answer the questions of who, what, when, where and how.

The discovery of skulls and bone fragments in conjunction with the investigation of Robert A. Berdella, who was arrested for assault and sodomy stemming from an incident in Kansas City, Mo., prompted the Kansas City Regional Crime Lab to contact Michael Finnegan, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work.

Finnegan said he had been contacted by the lab on Saturday and had spent two or three days working on the Berdella case, in a variety of locations.

Finnegan declined to make any statements or comments relevant to the case but did provide insight into the reason he was contacted.

"When forensic pathologists can't answer the questions because of the lack of organs or tissue with the skeletal remains, a forensic anthropologist is called in," he said.

Law enforcement agencies will give latitude to the anthropologist to do what has to be done, or will make a specific request as to what they want done, he said.

He said law enforcement agencies want to know if the skeletal remains are human or non-human, he said.

If they are determined to be human, efforts are undertaken to determine age, sex, race and stature.

If the sex can be determined, about one-half of the population can be eliminated from the effort to find out who it is, he said.

If age can be determined, even more of the population can be eliminated, he said.

Dependent upon the demographics of the area in which the work is being done, race can also eliminate a segment of the population from consideration, he said.

Lower spending limit would help candidates

Last Thursday, Student Senate rejected an amendment to raise the salaries of the student body president and Student Senate chairman from $3,600 to $3,780 and from $2,700 to $2,835, respectively. The senators, appropriately, were thinking of more than just the obvious consequences, i.e., a larger paycheck for the two student officials.

The argument for the amendment was that the cost of holding these offices is too expensive for the "average student," who has to give up a part-time job for such positions that pay so little.

But consider: The current salary of the student body president is equivalent to $300 a month, an amount which is more than that now made by many students who work part time. Normally, that paycheck would be enough for many students to at least consider running for student body president.

Also consider: Most candidates for student body president spend up to the allowed limit (the price of tuition and fees) to run for office. That amount alone — more than $650 — is certainly enough to discourage the "average student" from even considering the office. Furthermore, to spend anything less would leave the "average student" at a definite disadvantage compared to those who can afford to spend to the limit.

In a roundabout manner, the proposed salary increase was designed to make up for the cost of running for the office and, consequently, to encourage more "average students" to consider the office.

Senate was correct in voting down the amendment, because the amendment really didn't get to the root of the problem it was trying to solve. But, if Senate really wants to open the door for more potential candidates for student body president, it should consider lowering the spending limit placed on student body president candidates.

Not only would such an action encourage more students to get involved in student government, it would save some expenses for everyone involved — candidates and the University alike.

Senate wise to extend FONE contract length

The Christmas holiday brings happy thoughts to the minds of most students. Although to some, it is a dreaded, lonely and depressing event.

This is not a subject often contemplated in April. However, Student Senate had a discussion last Thursday about the holiday season in reference to the FONE Crisis Center. As a result, it was decided that the volunteer coordinator's contract would be changed from 11 months to 12 months.

The problem that precipitated the change is that two people are needed in order to adequately handle a suicide call and provide backup assistance. During previous Christmas holidays, only one person — the FONE director — was left to handle incoming calls on the two telephone lines. Furthermore, it is difficult to get volunteers to work during a holiday.

It would seem that the Christmas season would be one of the most important times to ensure that enough people are on hand to deal with any crisis that may arise. It is a high-stress time of year for various reasons, and this type of stress can lead to deep depression and even suicide.

Sometimes all that is necessary is for the depressed person to talk to an understanding listener and to hear some reassuring words.

Of course, the people who work in the FONE Crisis Center hope they never have to talk someone out of a suicide, especially during the holiday season.

But it is nice to know that if the situation arises, an adequate number of people will be there to handle the situation. Thanks to a close vote by Senate in approving the yearlong appointment, this will be possible.

Address issues

Editor,

I am writing in reply to Mark Schreiner's column Monday.

Writing a third of a page without any apparent reason "is easier and more fun" than actually writing a column that addresses a real issue.

So, it must have been fun to write, because you did say: "Fun things are like that; you get the effect of something without having to do the actual work." But, as you said, "making things" is hard. Plus, you must not be paid since we make things "only for the money."

I would be interested in knowing how you explain away the fact that hundreds of thousands of volunteers all over the country are making things happen, they are having fun and they aren't getting paid.

Your sadistic sense of humor has no place on the editorial page, and I find it as sad to witness as the "demonstration for nothing" that I witnessed two years ago in front of the Union. About 15 students paraded about in front of the Union, carrying blank signs and handing out white sheets of paper to the passing people. Both that demonstration and your column exemplify the "I don't give a damn about anything" attitude among the college children of America.

Congratulations, Mr. Schreiner. You have amply demonstrated to all that you have the intellectual abilities of a 3-year-old, fascinated by noise and motion and oblivious to the rest.

Lawmakers' final crunch upon them

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

Did you ever have one of those weeks when absolutely everything went wrong? Classes were impossible, the University of Kansas actually won the national men's basketball championship and you can't think of anything to write about in your column before deadline. I think this is an example of the spring writer's block that occurs after having too many tests to study for when the weather is too nice to study for them. Somehow or another it must be KU's fault.

That's probably the worst thing about spring — it's like a contagious apathy. You can always tell when it's spring because you can actually find a parking spot on campus in the afternoon. Of course, the rest of us students are feeling pretty sorry for ourselves, having to go to those nasty afternoon labs that last forever when all of our friends are out at Tuttle. Then sometimes we just don't go to class. It doesn't kill us. Unless we're missing a test or something, so we can usually safely blow off a class or two.

However, at this very same time, there are people working in the Kansas Legislature getting ready for the final crunch, who can't blow it off, go home and play with Spot. Who are these poor mistreated individuals? The legislators.

The people who make our laws are now being flooded with last-minute bills and amendments as they get ready to enter the final veto session on April 27.

All of the debating done during the entire session is coming down to this. A few panic-stricken weeks where everything must be done and there isn't time to do it. There are appropriation measures to be passed, a decision must be made on the prison issue before we start releasing prisoners to run amuck in the countryside, it must be determined how the state should deal with AIDS, and the remainder of the budget's fate must be determined.

This is when the most important decisions are made. And this is when the most mistakes can occur as legislators try to squeeze in controversial amendments on the backs of seemingly unoffensive bills. Some problems are suddenly appearing now as the lawmakers are tired from working long hours at night preparing proposals and spending long hours in debate during the day. Legislators must be careful to pay close attention to all that is going on, as it only takes a few minutes to slip in a disastrous amendment. Committee meetings are called suddenly and randomly, and if a lawmaker misses one it could be a problem.

A good example of this is when earlier in the session the House passed a bill with a quickly added amendment which would levy a tax on hotel rooms. The next day when everyone realized what had actually happened, the bill was rescinded.

So, what's the point, you ask? Am I sponsoring a pity party for the legislators? No. The point is, these people are making the laws which will affect all of us. If they are rushed, tired and tricked, the laws are going to reflect that. (Hmm, that must be the way the Kansas liquor laws were passed.)

Is this any way to make laws? There must be a better way. It is kind of like trying to study for final exams when the weather is 80 degress and sunny. We should not allow our Legislature to wait until the very end of the session to make the most important decisions. I agree that they should have time to study the measures, but if they have taken the whole session to study them, it shouldn't take long at all to pass some in an acceptable form. Instead, we have legislators who procrastinate and deliberately stall in order to push bills through at the end with their little pet projects attached. Suddenly, the whole process becomes a power play to see who will prevail in getting their projects passed.

By the time these intensive sessions are over, we have legislators who haven't even seen their constituents for weeks. These people have lost all sight of reality — their life for these weeks revolves around the Capitol. They are tired, overworked, and yet we still expect them to make rational decisions. Meanwhile, these people have lost the valuable insight that comes from being with their constitutents, as well as the ability to relax and study decisions.

I'm not sure what the answer to this problem is, but the problem is definitely there. This is something for which the legislators need to take the responsibility themselves. By allowing things to pile up until the last minute, they not only stress themselves out, but they harm us, the people of Kansas.

Perhaps our lawmakers need to go back to school for awhile and learn the basics. Yes, if you do your homework ahead of time you will have more time to play at the end of the year when the weather is nice. Yes, if you procrastinate you will find the work to be more difficult later on. And yes, regardless of how good a basketball team we have, it always seems like someone else has a better one.

Netting baby boomers is candidates' task

Commentary

WALLY BROCKHOFF
Collegian Columnist

The television generation. The baby boomers. Many terms have been used to describe the generation that was born in the post-World War II years of American prosperity. All of them can be applied to this group of Americans who are now 18 to 44 years old. As you can see, it includes the vast majority of college students as well.

Rolling Stone magazine recently did a series titled "Portrait of a Generation" that was based on this demographic group. Through use of surveys, the magazine determined what kinds of issues and concerns the baby boomers have. It is one of the first projects of its kind by a magazine that is not traditionally viewed as being perceptive and innovative when dealing with social issues. It is fascinating reading, and it comes across as being written by a writer who knows the audience.

The object was to find out exactly "who" the baby boomers are. The results of the surveys are at times confusing and full of contradictions. This reflects the varied history of this generation, from the radical '60s to the confusing '70s to the yuppie attitudes of the '80s. Everything that touches people's lives has an effect on them, so confusing times can give some pretty inconsistent messages to people.

The baby boomers are an extremely diverse group. Many are not doing the things they thought they would be doing when they grew up. For example, 50 percent of those surveyed said they were less involved in organized religious activity than they thought they would be. Yet 22 percent considered themselves to be born-again Christians. This diversity makes the baby boomers a very hard group to reach when it comes to gaining a consensus.

The difficulty in reaching the group may be one of the reasons why baby boomers have the worst voting record of any demographic group in America in terms of participation. No candidate has been able to find a message that would appeal to the different elements and values of the baby boomers, so members of this group do not vote at all. Of course, every political candidate would like to reach them, for that candidate would automatically win any election due to the size of the generation. Jesse Jackson may be starting to catch on to how to appeal to the generation — but nothing like his mentor Martin Luther King Jr., who is the generation's most-admired figure.

The generation was largely shaped by the Vietnam War, which itself is viewed in many different ways: as a war the United States should have never fought.

The net result was a generation that no longer feels it can trust its government to tell it the truth. The patriotism and "fight for a just cause" attitude of World War II veterans has turned into isolationism and "no war is just" attitudes in the baby boomer generation.

The distrust of government and the contradictions that permeate this generation are reflected in the Reagan legacy. Here we have an actor who is rosy and positive about America — a quality baby boomers find appealing and reassuring. The generation is isolationist, yet here is a very popular president who has done more to get America involved in conflict overseas than any other president in many years. It is poetic justice to think that it has taken the Iran-Contra scandal to disillusion the generation's perception of Reagan.

This disillusionment makes it difficult for any of the presidential candidates to really capture the imagination of the electorate. Whether it is Dukakis, Jackson, Bush, Gore or Simon, one of them will have to mobilize this generation in order to win the 1988 presidential election.

Board hears request for air conditioning at Manhattan High

By The Collegian Staff

A feasibility study on plans to put air conditioning in Manhattan High School was presented to the Manhattan Board of Education Wednesday.

Members of the board requested the feasibility study in response to a proposed extended school year that would help alleviate the problem of overcrowding at the high school.

Tony Pianalto, representing the engineering firm of Malone, Brack and Associates, presented the board with four specific plans outlining construction methods and projected costs for installing air conditioning for approximately 100 rooms in the high school.

"We are talking roughly $1 million to install air conditioning (at Manhattan High School)," Pianalto said.

Of the four proposals presented to the board, two would require upgrading or replacing the current water pipes used for heating the building. This reworking of the building's plumbing alone would cost over $230,000.

The remaining two proposals, while not requiring additional plumbing work, would require either separate cooling units for each room or the installation of two high-capacity cooling units.

Pianalto said Malone, Brack and Associates recommended the proposal of placing a separate cooling unit in each room. An advantage to this plan is that each classroom would have its own thermostat and timer clock, he said.

Manhattan High School currently has air conditioning in its auditorium and administrative offices. Additional air conditioning for classrooms would mean a $36,000 increase in the high school's annual electric bill, officials said.

Senate to discuss upcoming allocations

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will consider tentative allocations to determine next year's funding for four campus organizations at 6 tonight in the Union Big Eight room.

The groups up for consideration are the Women's Resource Center, Students for Handicapped Concerns, the Puerto Rican Student Organization and the Coalition for Human Rights.

Each group has two senators assigned to them as liaisons, who help the group prepare presentations for tonight's meeting.

"Nothing drastic will happen Thursday," said Doug Folk, Student Senate Chairman. "Nobody is going to get cut off or anything."

Groups seeking allocations from Student Senate submit requests to the Finance Committee. The committee recommends a tentative allocation to the Student Senate.

The Women's Resource Center is requesting $838.16, and the Finance Commitee is recommending $711.40.

The committee is recommending $423.20 for Students for Handicapped Concerns, which requested $541.

The Puerto Rican Student Organization is requesting $227.50, and the committee is recommending $120.75.

The committee is recommending $253.40 for The Coalition for Human Rights, which requested $457.10.

Final appeals for changes in tentative allocations will be made April 14.

American soldiers arrive in Panama

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Giant cargo planes loaded with soldiers, arms and helicopters landed almost hourly Wednesday as the United States completed deployment of 1,300 extra troops to Panama.

The country's Defense Forces chief, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, appeared to be seesawing on whether to accept mediation in Panama's political crisis.

Late Tuesday, the government sent a communique to news organizations conditionally accepting a mediation offer by Monsignor Marcos G. McGrath, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Panama.

But the statement linked any talks to a "national dialogue" begun Monday by Noriega's supporters. The dialogue was boycotted by the church and Noriega's opponents.

Within hours, the government's press office withdrew the communique without explanation.

The church said Wednesday that McGrath's offer to mediate between the government and its opposition was in no way linked to the "national dialogue."

It said it was still awaiting a reply from the general, who is under indictment in the United States on drug trafficking charges. Noriega, the chief of the 15,000-member Defense Forces, is the power behind Panama's civilian government.

The opposition, which has been seeking Noriega's ouster for more than 10 months, planned a "march against hunger" on Wednesday afternoon, but it fizzled out in the face of a heavy police presence.

The march was designed to protest a deteriorating economic situation that has left thousands of Panamanians penniless. The church is feeding about 10,000 families a day in the Panama City area and says conditions are worse in other parts of the country.

Panamanians began a run on the banks in late February after Noriega supporters removed President Eric Arturo Delvalle from office, and banks closed on March 4. The country's economic crisis has been exacerbated by the freezing of Panamanian deposits in U.S. banks and sanctions imposed by Washington.

The new soldiers arriving at Howard Air Force Base, just outside Panama City, included members of an army aviation battalion from Fort Ord, Calif., and military police and security specialists from Fort Bragg, N.C. and Fort Mead, Md.

They were ferried to Panama by a fleet of C-141 Starlifter and C-5 Galaxy jet cargo planes. The aviators brought 26 helicopters.

Lt. Col. Rick Dodge, commander of the 230-member force from the 123rd Combat Aviation Battalion of the 7th Light Infantry Division, said he had not been told how long he would be in Panama.

After spending a day working at one of the two meat packing plants near Garden City, a game of billiards is a popular way to relax.

For many Southeast Asians, Garden City challenges them with extreme climates, a new society and saving money under trying conditions. But difficult situations teach these newcomers to become something else.

Troung Cao, right, and her daughter prepare clothes for sale in Cuei's Market, a store with an eclectic assortment of goods for its customers. TOP: Iowa Beef Packagers is the chief employer of immigrants.

Survivors

GARDEN CITY — The city may have been the oasis on the plains for the Vietnamese refugees who moved to Garden City after fleeing their homeland, but many wish to leave it behind.

On the average, Asians with school-age children usually stay in Garden City for 30 months, according to research done by the Garden City school district.

They are drawn to the city for job opportunities or to live close to family members, said Sister Levita Rohlman, Refugee Resettlement Director for the Southeast Asian Mutual Assistance Association. The reasons for wanting to leave vary — from an intolerable climate to inactive social conditions.

"It is very cold here," said a high school Vietnamese student who moved to Garden City a year ago from a refugee camp in Thailand. "And in summer, it is too hot."

The Asians are accustomed to a humid climate with temperatures ranging from 60 degrees to 80 degrees. On the other hand, western Kansas suffers a climate of extremes. The average temperature in January is about 18 degrees, and in summer the average rises to 93 degrees.

The Asians, who move from their homelands, not only have a difficult time adjusting to the new climate, but they usually come to Garden City totally unprepared for it. They flee their homelands with little more than what they can run with. Then, once in the United States, most do not have the money to buy adequate clothing.

After learning to tolerate the weather, they face the problem of what do to with their free time in a society so different from their own.

The number of single Asian men between the ages of 16 and 20 almost triples that of single Asian women. The men have problems continuing their cultural traditions. To most, the family is their top priority, Rohlman said.

Without families or potential wives around, some take up drinking alcohol and gambling to fill their free time, she said.

"It's their form of recreation," she said.

Bi-ethnic relationships, between Asians and other culture groups, are not an option many choose to pursue.

"You just don't hear of that many couples with a Vietnamese and an Anglo," Rohlman said. "There's no eligible women. Other nationalities cause too much stress (for the Asian men)."

It is not that the Asians are unaccustomed to change.

Most spend years saving money to escape their homeland on fishing boats crowded with other refugees. On the boats, they were subject to pirates, disease and starvation as they sailed on rough waters for weeks.

After surviving the boat trips, they were sent to refugee camps in Southeast Asia. There, they waited months for the U.S. government to give them permission to come to America.

For many, Garden City is a temporary stop over before reaching their final destination. Many hope to earn enough money to move on.

"I know of three families who moved to Galveston (Texas) to fish," said Roxie Thompson, elementary English as a Second Language teacher. "They like the climate better, and that's what they are used to doing."

Buying a fishing boat requires large amounts of capital and time. Some cities require boat owners to be U.S. citizens, and the boats cost about $100,000, Rohlman said.

"They are here to make money to go to Galveston to fish," she said. "It's hard work, but it's not a yearlong job. And they want to do it."

Some, however, are planning to stay in Garden City. They have taken the risk to invest money in their own businesses. Asians have opened everything from accounting services to grocery stores to automative repair garages.

Truong Cao and her husband run Cuei's Market. They sell everything from dried fish to womens' clothing, but things aren't going well.

"We sell very slow," she said. "My husband must work another job. If the store was the only job, we can't pay bills."

Competition is part of the reason business is slow for Cao. Within blocks of her market, three others vie for the clientele looking for Asian goods. The stores try to offer products from the customers' homelands.

Every Wednesday night, Cao's store is open until 2 a.m. Fresh fish is delivered that night, and she wants to offer customers the freshest fish possible. She said many of the Iowa Beef Processors Inc. workers come to the store after getting of work at midnight.

Other businesses are doing better. Thai Nguyen owns Thai's Billiard. He brought nine billiard tables from a company in Georgia. The Pepsi cooler in the corner is stocked with canned soybean juice and grass jelly drink.

He said business has been good and is not worried that the Asians will someday leave Garden City. And if they do, he is prepared. Bolts of fabric and a sewing machine sit to the left of the nine billiard tables. He sews clothing for other people in the same building. After all, everyone buys clothes.

This is the second installment of a three-part series. The last part will study how the city is accommodating the Asians. It will run next week.

want everything from life, she said. At the same time, AIDS is inducing fear of pursuing the sexual goals.

In responding to her own bout with cancer, and how she perceived other cancer patients reacted to their conditions, Sontag wrote "Illness as Metaphor." An updated version, titled "AIDS and Its Metaphors," is scheduled for release next fall, Sontag said.

By writing the books, Sontag hopes to help others learn about how and why they are frightened by some illnesses and not others.

"(Patients) felt upset about cancer in a way they wouldn't have about cardiac arrest," she said.

Sontag said people should regard illness as a disease, not as a curse or punishment. In addition, they should seek competent, professional help and not be afraid of treatment for the disease.

Students, faculty can vote in Academy Awards Contest

By The Collegian Staff

Robin Williams, William Hurt, Glenn Close and Cher. These are just some of the names that will be heard when the nominations for Academy Awards are read before the winners are announced Monday evening. K-Staters are being given a chance to make their choices as to who will take home the Oscars.

The Union Programming Council is sponsoring the 8th Annual Academy Awards Contest. The contest is open to all K-State students, faculty and staff, and is set up for the entrant to pick winners in 12 categories.

The entry with the most correct answers will be given a free pass for two to all feature films for the 1988-89 school year.

"We thought this would be a good chance for many people to participate and win a prize," said Marilyn Woodward, UPC adviser.

The categories range from best actor to best picture to best costume design. The Academy Awards will be televised on Monday evening and the winner of the contest will be contacted following the completion of the tabulation of ballots.

Ballots can be picked up at the Information Desk and the Union Activities Center in the Union and are limited to one entry per person.

Students thank MOE supporters

By The Collegian Staff

Twelve K-State students went to Topeka Tuesday for a "lobby day" sponsored by Associated Students of Kansas.

The students went to thank the state senators who voted to fully fund the Margin of Excellence proposal and to urge members of the House of Representatives to concur with the Senate version of MOE, said Troy Lubbers, student body president and ASK board chairman.

"We sent a small contingent to remind them of the big group," he said. "We wanted to remind the Legislature that our faculty (members) are not being paid equally with their peers."

In the last five years, tuition has increased 56 percent at Kansas Board of Regents schools, Lubbers said. In that same period, inflation has increased 34 percent and state funding for the regents schools has increased 17 percent.

"We pointed out most of the money for MOE is coming from in-house tuition and the KU Med Center," he said. "The state needs to match that and the Senate has taken the first step."

"We wanted to remind them of why we were there last year and this year and why we'll be back," Lubbers said.

He also said the formation of an Educational Opportunity Fund is in the works. The fund is sponsored by ASK and the Student Governing Association and will be discussed April 13 at the regents meeting at K-State.

The fund, which Lubbers said would generate about $200,000 for K-State, would be based on 1 percent of the tuition paid to each school.

"Under MOE, tuition for in-state undergraduates will go up 6 percent in fiscal year 1990. One percent of that would be directly kicked back for financial aid (if the fund is approved)," he said.

"Each school's funds are autonomously maintained. The money will stay at the school it came from," Lubbers said. "This way the school can focus on individual areas of need."

Donohue experiencing turnaround

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

Things have changed for third baseman Jim Donohue since last season.

Donohue has been a steady producer for the 'Cats, now 20-10 in the season. His 36 RBI's, .831 slugging percentage and nine home runs led the K-State baseball team heading into the Big Eight Conference season last week.

"I feel confident," Donohue said. "I think the team has some confidence in me and I'm more relaxed at the plate. It's just a totally different year for me than last year was."

After hitting only .204 a year ago, Donohue has bettered his average to .366 and is looking to have his best season ever.

"Last year, with the new coach coming in, I pressed myself to show him I could play and when I pressed, I hurt myself by struggling at the plate," Donohue said. "My sophomore year, so far, has been my best year here, but this year I'm going to try to top that as far as RBI's, batting average and homeruns."

Donohue received the Most Valuable Player award in the KASK-Centennial Invitational at Las Cruces, New Mexico earlier this season where K-State placed first. He hit four homeruns, one of which was a game-winning grand slam, and nailed 14 hits in the tourney.

Changes in his own performance isn't the only difference Donohue sees with the 'Cats' 1988 spring season.

"I think this year, compared to last year, our pitching is a lot stronger," he said. "We have a little bit stronger offense this spring compared to last fall. I just want to finish strong, hopefully come in third or fourth in the Big Eight, and make it to the tournament.

"I feel the team is headed in the right direction. I think we're relaxed and playing good ball. All we have to do is limit the number of mistakes we're making. I think that we're a contender," Donohue said.

As far as what the future holds after this spring for the senior from St. Louis, no one — not even Donohue — knows.

"Hopefully, the (professional) offers will come. Right now I'm just trying to play to the best of my abilities and see what happens from there," he said. "I've heard people talking, but I'm not going to say anything because if it doesn't happen, it doesn't happen.

"I think if I play well and keep my average up, I think I could play somewhere," he said.

Staff/Neal Hinkle

Third baseman Jim Donohue takes a practice swing before entering the batting cage at practice Wednesday. Donohue batted .204 last year, but has improved to .366 this season with 36 RBIs, nine home runs and an MVP award in the KASK-Centennial Invitational.

Texas hires coach

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — The University of Texas hired Tom Penders of Rhode Island as its head basketball coach Wednesday in a move aimed at making the Longhorns a national power.

Penders promised that his pro-style running game and full-court pressing defense would be exciting to watch.

"The coach, in my mind, is one of the top coaches in the United States," said Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds, whose firing of Bob Weltlich on March 14 set in motion the search for a new coach.

Dodds said a six-member committee, which included former football coach Darrell Royal, sought a coach who could recruit nationally, as well as in Texas; would graduate players; and was young and dynamic.

Penders, 42, said he accepted without hesitation although his two-year stay at Rhode Island "was a happy marriage."

"Basketball will be fun and exciting here," Penders said, but added, "I'm not going to make any predictions. A good friend of mine who is in coaching told me a long time ago the best way to save face is keep the lower half of it shut."

Penders said details of his contract at Texas had not been settled.

NCAA cracks down on fighting

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — College players who get involved in fights during games next season will risk losing their eligibility for the rest of the season under get-tough measures announced Wednesday.

"We're interested in minimizing the ugly scenes. One ugly scene is too many as far as I'm concerned," Ed Steitz, secretary-editor of the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee said at a news conference. "We cannot afford to let anything mar this great game of college basketball."

Steitz said following the committee's two-day meeting that players suspended for "being involved in fighting" would have no way to appeal.

Fights made headlines throughout the past season. There were none during the NCAA Tournament, after NCAA Executive Director Dick Schultz warned that any player fighting would be suspended for the rest of the tournament.

The policy announced Wednesday specifies that a player involved in a fight will be ejected from the game and placed on probation.

"The second time that individual is involved in a fight during the season, he will be ejected from the game and suspended from participation in his team's next game," Steitz said.

"If that player is involved in a third fight during the season, he will be suspended for the remainder of the season. If available, and deemed necessary, television monitors may be used to determine those individuals involved in a fight," he said.

K-State coach Lon Kruger said problems may arise from the rule.

"There would be a need to define what constitutes a fight so we can be consistent with enforcement. Does a shove one game get the same thing as an all out fisticuff in the next?" he asked.

Wooden Award to Manning

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Kansas All-American Danny Manning won the John R. Wooden Award as the nation's top college basketball player Wednesday, two days after he led the Jayhawks to the NCAA title.

In voting by 1,000 sports writers and broadcasters, Manning finished with 865 points, just 20 ahead of Bradley's Hersey Hawkins, the nation's scoring leader.

Manning earlier was named winner of the Naismith Award, which he'll pick up today in Atlanta.

Voting for the Wooden Award didn't close until Tuesday, and Manning did some last-minute lobbying with 31 points and 18 rebounds in Kansas' 83-79 upset victory over Oklahoma in Monday night's NCAA championship game.

"I think it really enhanced my chances," Manning, a senior forward, said of that performance. "A lot of people got to see me and our team won the national championship. That was the difference in the voting right there."

The Jayhawks will meet with President Reagan in Washington on Monday, the school announced Wednesday.

Kansas, which captured the national basketball championship with an 83-79 victory over Oklahoma, will meet with Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., before visiting the White House at 1 p.m. EDT Monday.

The Jayhawks also will be guests of the Kansas City Royals during a game Sunday afternoon against the Detroit Tigers. Danny Manning, Kansas' All-American, will throw out the first pitch.

The annual award is named for former coach John Wooden, who led UCLA to 10 NCAA titles in 12 seasons.

"I think it's a great accomplishment, but I don't think it's an individual accomplishment," Manning said. "It's something my teammates should be proud of, too, because they put me in the position to win it."

Manning was accompanied to the announcement at the Los Angeles Athletic Club by his father, Ed, an assistant coach at Kansas.

It's OK to be mad or glad for KU

Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Columnist

Is anybody around here glad the University of Kansas won the NCAA basketball title?

You would think K-Staters would be proud that their in-state rival was able to beat the odds and upset Oklahoma. You would think, if nothing else, that people would be happy about the boost the KU win gives the Big Eight Conference.

But, from what I can see, hardly anyone from K-State wanted KU to win. By what I would estimate to be at least a 2-1 margin, die-hard Wildcat fans became loyal Sooner backers Monday night.

Billy Tubbs was instantly transformed from archvillain to patron saint. Oklahoma's postgame "Cabbage Patch" dance suddenly was receiving perfect 10s from the K-State judges. The Sooner cockiness, brashness and alleged lack of class were all forgotten in the interest of seeing KU crash and burn before a national television audience.

But, as has been documented to the point of oversaturation by area newspapers, television and radio, KU played spectacularly and won. When Danny Manning shows up on the cover of Sports Illustrated this week, it could well be the last straw for some 'Cat fans.

And it could just as easily have been K-State. Many will say it SHOULD have been K-State's NCAA title, not KU's. Anybody's but KU's, for that matter.

But on the strength of Larry Brown's superb coaching and Manning's out-of-this-world play on the court, the Jayhawks are national champions and the talk of the Sunflower state. Thirty thousand people showed up at KU's Memorial Stadium Tuesday to welcome the Jayhawks home. Chancellor Gene Budig called off classes for the day.

While the talk around Lawrence on Tuesday centered on the jubilation over the KU win and possible remedies for hangovers, conversation in Manhattan resembled the kind of stuff you'd hear at a funeral.

Common statements were "Will KU fans ever let us hear the end of it?"; "Why did it have to be KU?"; "I hope Brown goes to UCLA"; and the inevitable "I hate the %#$&#*& 'Hawks."

So why is it that K-Staters dislike KU so much?

Could it be the smug, pseudo-elitist attitude of many KU people?

Good start.

Or how about the ongoing "Will Larry Brown Stay or Go" soap-opera saga?

There's another one.

Maybe the 10 straight Jayhawk defeats of K-State prior to this year? Or KU's Midwest regional win at Pontiac?

Yep, those probably count, too.

Indeed, K-Staters will probably always harbor a strong dislike (dare I say "hatred"?) toward KU. The rivalry will always be among the fiercest in the nation.

Sure, it would be nice if K-State people could all be happy for KU. But that wouldn't be quite right, would it? In fact, it would almost totally go against the nature of the average Wildcat fan to root for KU.

If you're happy for KU, well, that's fine. It makes life a lot easier. But if you're bitter — like many K-State fans — that's OK, too. Just grin and bear it when you see your KU friends over the summer.

Awards banquet April 19

K-State's basketball awards banquet has been set for April 19 at the KSU Union Ballroom.

The event gets underway at 7 p.m.

Tickets for the banquet are $15 each, or $25 for two. They may be purchased from the Ahearn Field House Ticket Office. Student tickets will sell for $10. A K-State student ID must be presented for each student ticket purchased.

Only 100 student tickets will be sold.

Bietau given coaching honor

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau has been named head coach for the Missouri Valley Tennis Association's 18-year-old Intersectional team for the second year in a row.

Bietau, in his fourth year at K-State, said the team would travel to Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 1-5, to meet teams from the nation's other 14 sectional squads. The Missouri Valley team will be composed of the top five or six players from Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri and Iowa.

"It's a great honor and I'm very happy to have been selected," Bietau said. "It's a chance to coach and watch some of the best players in the country."

Last year, Bietau led the Missouri Valley squad to a 10th place finish at the Intersectional tournament.

Men's golfers back to green

K-State's men's golf team returns to action today to begin defense of the Nebraska Cup.

The Wildcat linksters will compete in the Creighton Invitational today and will then take part in the Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational on Friday. The team with the best combined score from the two invitationals will claim this year's Nebraska Cup.

K-State gained the title a year ago after finishing second in the Creighton event and winning the Nebraska Wesleyan tourney.

Baseball salaries up 9.6 percent

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The average baseball player's salary rose 9.6 percent from opening day in 1987 to opening day, 1988, according to figures provided by the owners, and the New York Yankees are once again the highest-paid team in baseball.

Figures compiled by the owners' Player Relations Committee show that the average salary on Opening Day this season rose to $447,291 from $407,939 last year.

The Yankees average $673,000 per player, using figures rounded off to the nearest thousand. The Los Angeles Dodgers are second at $641,000 and the New York Mets third at $633,000.

During the off-season, the Yankees added Jack Clark to their payroll at $1.5 million, signed Don Mattingly to a three-year contract that pays him $2 million this season and signed Dave Righetti to a three-year deal that pays him $1.3 million in 1988.

The Dodgers added free agents Kirk Gibson, who will get $1.5 million this year, and Mike Davis, who will get $987,500. They also traded for Jesse Orosco, who has a $1 million salary, and Alfredo Griffin, who is paid $750,000.

Among the lowest-paid teams are the Texas Rangers, who average $215,000 per player.

The Pittsburgh Pirates are right behind, at $237,000, and are followed by the Chicago White Sox, at $264,000, and the Seattle Mariners, at $290,000.

and make an arrest," Joiner said. "Being the last person seen with a missing person may make you a suspect, but that's not sufficient evidence for your arrest."

Perry, who took leave from the police homicide unit to spend a year at the FBI academy, has been studying personalities and behavior associated with serial killers and sexual sadists.

He said facts in the developing Kansas City case appear to fit the pattern of sexual-sadism cases in which victims are restrained, kept in a room for several days of torture, then killed and their bodies disposed of.

Perry will try to establish a personality profile of Berdella, then examine the missing persons files to see if there might be any connection.

Berdella operated a shop called Bob's Bazaar Bizarre in the trendy Westport section of Kansas City. One of his neighbors, who asked not to be identified, recalled seeing him at the Westport Flea Market Saturday and buying some jewelry at his shop.

"He was laughing and joking with everybody," she said. "The conversation with him was no different from any other in the 14 years we've known him."

Later that day, Berdella was under arrest.

In another development, a probation official said that a 19-year-old man apparently lived with Berdella earlier this year after being placed on probation for stealing.

Records show that Berdella himself was placed on probation in 1969 after a conviction for selling drugs. It is against the policy of the Missouri Board of Probation and Parole for someone on probation to associate with anybody with a criminal record.

Judy Chase, district supervisor for the board, said the young man told authorities in January that he was living at Berdella's address.

Chase said a routine visit was attempted Feb. 3 but Berdella said the young man was not there and would not allow the probation officer to enter. She said that on Feb. 16, the young man moved in with a relative.

be 6 foot 8 inches, you contact the basketball coaches to see who they are missing; if the height is 4 foot 9 inches, you contact the jockey clubs," he said.

The information is used to develop a profile which is compared with the profiles of known missing persons, he said.

The next step in the process looks at unique skeletal aspects such as broken bones that have healed, skull fractures that have closed and X-rays of the body and teeth that were taken of the missing person, looking for similarities with the skeletal remains, he said.

The question law enforcement agencies ask most often is how did the person die, he said.

"Often you have to say you don't know," Finnegan said.

National chorus seminar to be conducted on campus

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

This weekend, Kansas will not only be the land of ahs, but also the land of ohs, ooos and other harmonious sounds when Manhattan becomes the gathering site of the Intercollegiate Men's Choruses, Inc.

IMC, a national association of male choruses from collegiate and secondary schools, will conduct its 33rd national seminar Friday and Saturday on the K-State campus. Conductors and student leaders will be participating in the biennial event, which was hosted by Harvard University in 1986.

Scott King, junior in political science and vice-president of K-State's Men's Glee, said he feels K-State's image will be enhanced as far as national recognition for men's glee.

"You always hear of schools such as Harvard and Michigan hosting these events," King said. "To have it here, we feel it's really a big honor."

The seminar is attracting approximately 350 participants from across the country, including 25 conductors and 20 student delegates. The six colleges to be represented by glee clubs are Arkansas State University, Emporia State University, the University of Nebraska, the University of Notre Dame and the University of North Dakota, as well as K-State.

"Men in Song" concerts will be presented at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium, featuring three of the men's glee clubs each night. Each group's portion will last 30 minutes. The concerts are open to the public and admission is $3.

Friday night's concert will feature the University of Nebraska, Arkansas State University and Emporia State University. Saturday night, "Men in Song" will present the men's choruses from K-State, the University of North Dakota and the University of Notre Dame.

At the conclusion of Saturday night's performances, all students from the six groups, in addition to the attending student delegates, will perform the first and fourth movements of Randall Thompson's "Testament of Freedom." Morris Hayes, a recently retired professor of music at the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire, will conduct the finale, which will be accompanied by the KSU Symphonic Wind Ensemble, prepared by Stan Finck.

The sound of a male chorus is an exciting sound and all six groups will have a sound of their own, said Gerald Polich, professor of music.

"The most exciting part of the concert will be when the six join together for the finale," he said. "The sound will be a memorable sensation.

"The purpose of IMC is to encourage male chorus singing. This seminar is an opportunity to meet with fellow conductors of men's choruses, share ideas with colleagues, attend interest sessions, hear six of the Midwest's men's chorus ensembles and enjoy the hills — not the plains — of Kansas in the springtime."

Polich, director of K-State's 62-member Men's Glee, is currently serving a two-year term as IMC vice-president. Founded in 1914, IMC lists 100 schools from across the country as members of the association, Polich said. K-State has been a member for a number of years and last hosted the seminar in 1971.

Although the K-State Men's Glee Club was initiated many years ago, it was re-founded in 1956 by Hayes. He is one of four guests scheduled to present sessions during the event.

Hayes will lead a session titled "Where Have All the Tenors Gone?" He is known for his ability to develop tenors, Polich said, and was national president of the American Choral Directors Association.

Also presenting a special session will be Hanley Jackson, professor of music at K-State. The session, "Music Printing with Small Computers," is based on Jackson's knowledge of personal computers used in the capacity of music printing.

The third session will be led by Jameson Marvin, professor of music at Harvard University. Marvin, who will present "Tempo, Phrasing, Tuning, Dynamics: A Guide to Renaissance Performance," is an expert in Rennaissance music, Polich said.

The fourth guest to lead a session, Carl Stam from the University of Notre Dame, will present "Panel Discussion on European Tours."

Wes Gibson, senior in history and president of K-State's Men's Glee, said he is looking forward to great performances from all of the schools. Gibson will host sessions designed for students at the national event.

Four sessions have been planned for the students, who will meet to exchange ideas. This exchange will involve topics such as group management and organizational structure, fundraising, tour planning and management, recruitment, repertoire and the conductor-officer relationship.

Additional weekend activities include a banquet Saturday evening, which will precede the concert. Two awards, acknowledging excellence in the profession, will be given at the banquet. The honor, The Marshall Bartholomew Award, will be given posthumously to Wendell Whalum, Morehouse College in Atlanta, for 1987, and the 1988 award will be presented to Hayes.

Entertaining at the banquet will be the K-State Singers. Pat Bosco, K-State assistant vice-president, will address the gathering.

"As the program moves toward completion, we would expect to see general revenues playing a bigger role," he said.

"I'm totally pleased with the Legislature's action, as I am sure the college is," Coffman said.

Gov. Mike Hayden's budget proposal recommended placing these self-generated funds into general revenues. The Senate's action has the effect of reversing that recommendation.

John Noordsy, acting dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said, "We are very appreciative of the Legislature's efforts. They will help us to get to a comparable level with other peer veterinary medicine schools."

Werts said other legislative MOE action included elimination of Washburn University funding from the regents budget and returning it to the board of education's budget.

Hayden had proposed that Washburn funding be included in the regents budget, he said.

"This action would not have placed Washburn in the regents system, but it would have been a major first step," Werts said.

The Senate added $30,000 to the MOE package to fund the Youth Education Program, he said.

The program is designed to recruit and place college students in grade schools to serve as tutors and mentors and will provide $1,000 to 10 students in three different pilot programs, he said.

Participants in the pilot programs would be from the University of Kansas, Emporia State University and The Wichita State University, he said.

Legislators approve state tax windfall bill

Measure proposes more funds for city, rural school districts

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Legislature sent to Gov. Mike Hayden a bill to return $30 million of an income tax windfall to taxpayers through property tax relief and aid to school districts during legislative action Thursday.

The House passed the measure, 77-47, after the Senate approved it, 38-1, earlier in the day.

The measure is tied to two contentious issues, school finance and tax revision. Urban lawmakers who didn't like a school finance compromise the House later passed voted for the windfall bill to get more money to their school districts. Lawmakers who want to return more of the windfall than Hayden has proposed also voted for the measure.

Hayden has proposed revising the state's income tax code to return $28.6 million of a $135 million income tax windfall the state generated by federal tax reforms in 1986. Some lawmakers, especially those in Johnson County, have said more windfall should be returned, and a tax revision plan now rests in a House-Senate negotiating committee.

Under the plan, the state would increase by $15 million the amount of sales tax receipts it returns to cities and counties, to keep property taxes down.

Another $15 million in general tax dollars would go directly to local school districts in the form of general state aid. Half would be distributed based on a district's student enrollment, and the other half, based on the value of land in the district per pupil.

The school finance measure, which the House passed 69-53, would generally benefit rural school districts but also would provide some relief to about 10 big-city districts.

Some urban lawmakers were more willing to vote for the compromise after the House voted to send the extra $30 million in tax relief and school aid to local governments, said Rep. Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City.

The school finance bill now goes to the Senate, where a vote is, expected today.

The compromise, reached by a six-member House and Senate negotiating committee, would provide more aid to rural districts by averaging a district's wealth over the last 21 months.

Rural districts generally had lower property values last year, entitling them to more state aid under the state's school finance formula.

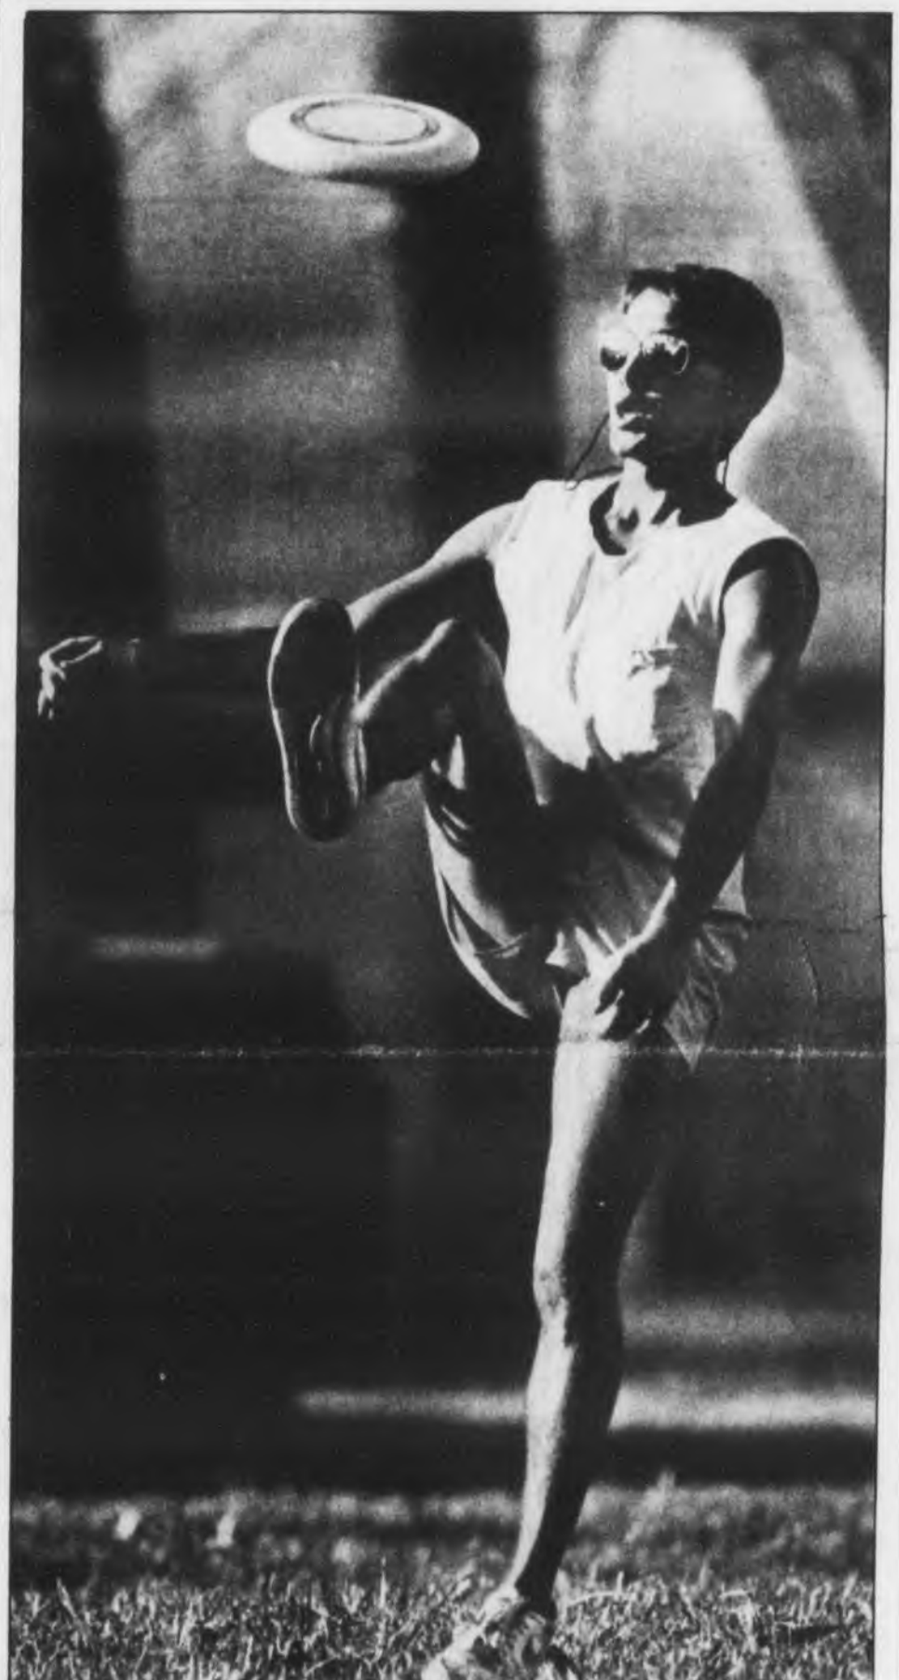
However, as a concession to urban lawmakers, the plan also would provide enough extra money to those big-city districts that would lose money under 21-month averaging to cut their losses in half.

In other action, the House was expected to reconsider today its vote on Thursday rejecting a compromise version of the sales tax exemption bill.

If the House backed up and adopted a conference committee recommendation on the bill, it would set the Legislature on track to resolve tax revision issues. If it didn't, it appeared highly unlikely lawmakers could complete action on tax revision legislation before it takes first adjournment Saturday.

The Senate overwhelmingly approved the sales tax compromise, exempting manufacturing machinery from the state's 4 percent sales tax Thursday. But the House turned it down on a vote that showed an unusual rural-urban coalition, tying passage of the tax revision legislation to school finance.

All nine Wyandotte County Democrats joined with rural lawmakers of both parties to reject the sales tax compromise. The Wyandotte County Democrats hoped to win a better deal for the Kansas City, Kan., school district in the school funding bill. The rural legislators hoped to get farm machinery added to the sales tax exemption bill.



The House vote sent the bill back to the conference committee, but Rep. Ed Rolfs, R-Junction City, chairman of the bargaining panel as well as chairman of the House Taxation Committee, said a move was possible today to reconsider the House action on the compromise.

"I think it was tied to school finance ... trading off rural votes for school finance," Rolfs said.

Also, the Senate approved a $12.6 million spending bill Thursday in an effort to help decrease prison overcrowding, while a special legislative committee endorsed two proposed prison construction projects.

The measure the Senate passed, 40-0, would allow the state to hire additional parole and probation officers, expand counseling programs for inmates and put more inmates in community corrections programs. It now goes to the House.

The plans the Joint Committee on Special Problems in Prison Overcrowding endorsed would expand a planned prison at Ellsworth and build a work camp in Stockton.

Jury acquits supremacists of conspiracy

By The Associated Press

FORT SMITH, Ark. — Jurors acquitted 13 white supremacists Thursday of charges including conspiring to overthrow the federal government and to kill a federal judge and FBI agent.

The all-white jury returned the verdict in its fourth day of deliberations, a day after U.S. District Judge Morris Arnold refused to accept the panel's statement that it was deadlocked on two of the counts.

The defendants included three leaders of white supremacist groups: Louis Ray Beam Jr., 41, of Houston; Robert E. Miles, 63, of Cohoctah, Mich., and Richard G. Butler, 70, of Hayden Lake, Idaho.

Asked how the seven-week trial affected the white supremacist movement, Miles said, "Who knows? What movement? What's left of it after this?"

U.S. Attorney J. Michael Fitzhugh said he thought the government had proved its case but "we accept the verdict of the jury."

Nine defendants were charged with seditious conspiracy, accused of wanting to overthrow the government and start an all-white nation in the Pacific Northwest. Five were accused of conspiring to kill the federal officials, and two also were charged with transporting stolen money across state lines.

Six of the defendants are already serving prison terms for other crimes.

The jury reached a verdict Wednesday on the charge involving the judge and FBI agent, but Arnold ordered it sealed until deliberations were complete.

The government said supremacist groups robbed banks and armored trucks of $4.1 million, including about $1 million that still is missing.

The defense contended the conspiracy theory was made up by a key government witness, James Ellison, 47, who led a supremacist group in Arkansas and now is serving 20 years for racketeering.

"The government was going to send a message to the movement. The movement sent a message to the government. The message was the same one God told pharoah, 'Let my people go,'" said Thom Robb, the national chaplain of the Ku Klux Klan, who hugged several of the defendants after the verdict was announced.

Fitzhugh said it was not a political trial. "We weren't after them for what they believed or what they said, but what they did," he said.

Co-op official plans to leave

Financial problems lead to resignation

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

Esther Gray has become the latest casualty of the financial woes plaguing the KSU Childcare Cooperative.

Gray, assistant director of the co-op, announced her resignation Wednesday to the co-op board of directors, staff and personnel committee. Her resignation is effective June 1.

In a letter to co-op director Nancy Bolsen dated March 31, Gray outlined her reasons for leaving, all of which directly deal with the co-op's fiscal crisis. Chief among the reasons was what Gray termed the administration's "clear message" regarding the co-op.

" ... The current KSU administration has given the clear message that it is contented with a custodial child care model, and furthermore that it does not consider it a priority to find support that could allow the co-op to serve low-income KSU families ...," Gray wrote.

Second, Gray said that for her to remain in her position would "encourage an unacceptable state of affairs" regarding "unconscionable" teacher salaries at the co-op. And finally, Gray said that her position had become too stressful due to the problems relating to funding.

"It is time to leave that responsibility to someone with fresh energy," Gray told Bolsen.

Since mid-February, co-op officials have been actively attempting to receive funding from Student Senate and the administration. In early March, Senate rejected a bill that would fund the co-op.

And last week, Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, told co-op officials that the administration could pledge only $9,000 in addition to the previous financial commitments it had made. Co-op officials had been requesting up to $200,000.

Krause was unavailable for comment Thursday afternoon.

Gray, whose duties include hiring the lead teachers and supervising the staff, said Thursday that her decision was a difficult one.

"I did not make the decision lightly," she said. "It's something I spent hours and hours thinking about."

One of Gray's biggest concerns deals with teacher morale and futile attempts to raise teacher salaries.

"I've expressed the concern on a number of occasions that it's not good business to have a staff that's not adequately supported," she said, adding that some teachers are forced to moonlight to supplement their co-op pay.

"I know people can do that for a period of their lives, but that's not the way to build a strong program," she said.

In addition to Gray's resignation, Bolsen told the co-op's board of directors Thursday afternoon that two assistant teachers had resigned. However, those resignations were unrelated to Gray's since both occurred prior to her announcement.

But one of the teachers is apparently leaving because of the likelihood that the infant program will be discontinued when higher rates go into effect June 1. The other teacher is leaving because she is moving, Gray said.

Gray, who has been with the co-op since July 1986 and has no post-resignation plans as of yet, said she hopes others will be able to stick it out at the co-op.

"I'm not saying everyone should quit just because I did," she said, adding that hers was a highly personal decision.

Bolsen, who said her assistant director's announcement was a surprise, expressed regret at Gray's decision.

Spring Fling events to end with bed race

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

It isn't the 1988 Olympics, but for students living in residence halls, today's Wacky Olympics are close enough.

The Olympic's six events will begin at 6 p.m. on the lawn of Goodnow Hall. They include a wheelbarrow race, tug of war, a blindfolded piggyback race, a three-legged race, a baseball bat relay and an event called "Catch the Wildcat's Tail."

The Wacky Olympics, and the rest of Spring Fling, are sponsored by the Department of Housing and the Association of Residence Halls.

The six-day festival concludes Sunday with a bed race that starts at 1:30 p.m. in front of the Union and ends at Pittman Hall.

Each team in the bed race has eight members — four riders and four pushers.

Saturday has been dubbed "Super Saturday" with events at the Strong Complex between Putnam and Boyd halls. They include a volleyball tournament, scavenger hunt, road rally, picnic and dance.

Spring Fling began Tuesday with a leadership banquet at Derby Food Center that was attended by more than 175 students.

"We've had a real good turnout so far," said Todd Stritzke, senior in mechanical engineering and the president of KSUARH. "Things (preparations) haven't slowed down all year. We've had a lot of good publicity from throughout the halls."

About 75 students participated in the casino night Wednesday, playing blackjack, roulette, craps and poker. The students were given "funny money" to bet with and were able to purchase items with the money they had won at the end of the night.

"For the most part we were pleased with the turnout," said Denny Mildenberger, freshman in secondary education and organizer of the casino night. "Everyone there said they had a good time, so I would say it was a success."

Thursday night representatives from each residence hall took part in a dating game.

Spring Fling events are funded through the Department of Housing by the $25 deposits that students place on their dormitory room.

Senators distribute funds for 5 groups

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate voted on tentative allocations for the next fiscal year for five campus organizations Thursday, closely following the recommendations of the finance committee.

The Women's Resource Center, Students for Handicapped Concerns, Amnesty International, Puerto Rican Student Organization and the Coalition for Human Rights were the groups whose requests were under consideration.

The Women's Resource Center requested $838.16 and was given a tentative allocation of $801.56. The finance committee had recommended $811.40.

"The extra money will go to our Friday focuses," said a spokeswoman for the Women's Resource Center.

Students for Handicapped Concerns requested $541 from Senate. The group was allocated $423.20, which was the amount recommended by the finance committee.

Amnesty International, a campus organization concerned with violations of human rights in other countries, was allocated $275.91. It had requested $434.22.

A request of $227.50 was made by the Puerto Rican Student Organization, which the finance committee recommended receive $120.75. Senate allocated $120.75.

The Coalition for Human Rights received a tentative allocation of $253.40 — the amount recommended by the finance committee. The group requested $457.40.

Bernie Giefer, a graduate student senator, voiced his objections over the funding of groups that are politically motivated.

Groups like Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights are more concerned with politics, Giefer said, than providing service to the student body.

Speaker stresses attitude at financial aid conference

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

"Hang loose!"

That was one of the motivational messages Daniel "Dr. Bionic" Litchford delivered Thursday morning as the keynote speaker at the Kansas Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators Spring Conference at the Holiday Inn.

Litchford, a professor of distributive technology at Weber State College in Ogden, Utah, has been giving seminars for five years across the country.

His seminar was the opening session of the state financial aid conference that will run through noon today. Thirty-three different sessions dealing with financial aid were addressed.

"I love (conducting seminars). It keeps me energized for teaching," Litchford said.

In the seminars, Litchford uses flash cards, guitar playing and singing to bring his message across, with the main theme behind all seminars being motivation.

"The truly successful people — some call them survivors — are those who develop the ability to deal effectively with change," Litchford said.

There is one difference between successful and unsuccessful people, he said. The successful people are those willing to do the things unsuccessful individuals are not willing or have forgotten to do.

"What I want to do is see if I can help people discover a way to bridge the gap (between knowledge and the ability to do things) and then have you take out of here not only knowledge but the ability of being able to do (things)," Litchford said.

One of the biggest problems is that people forget, he said.

Litchford said there are nine attributes all true professionals have in common that will get them to the top and keep them there.

The attributes will be used in building the bridge between what one knows and what one is able to do, he said.

Litchford then spelled out "hang loose" with flash cards behind the podium. Each letter of the phrase represented one attribute, he explained.

Words made up from each letter of the phrase "hang loose" made up the lyrics of a song that Litchford sang as he strummed his guitar. "Healthy attitudes nourish greatness, life is overflowing with opportunity to serve everywhere," were the lyrics of the song, with each word being one of the nine attributes.

Litchford also offered five techniques to help in the process of building new bridges: extended eye contact, smiling, positive words, caring and physical contact, such as shaking hands. He also had a song titled "Bridges to Build" that went along with these techniques.

"There are two key principles to being successful: You can deal with change if you just hang loose, and you can stay on top if you just build bridges," Litchford said.

"The themes of the conference are new concepts and new ideas," said Mary Dover from Johnson County Community College and president-elect of the Kansas Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators.

Co-ed merger a rumor

Band honoraries stay separate

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

Despite rumors about the joining of two national band honoraries, Tau Beta Sigma and Kappa Kappa Psi, no official plans have been made.

"There has been scattered talk about merging, but there's no big movement right now," said Darin Baugher, junior in civil engineering and vice president of Kappa Kappa Psi. "That's not to say it won't change in the future," he said.

The two organizations have about 50 members and serve basically the same purpose, Baugher said. The members provide soft drinks to the Marching Band at football games, load and unload equipment for the Department of Music, and organize social events.

Tau Beta Sigma is a band organization for females, while Kappa Kappa Psi is for males.

Although the groups combine their meetings and most of their projects, they are considered separate organizations.

Kappa Kappa Psi was founded in 1919 as a band fraternity for men and Tau Beta Sigma began in 1946 as a women's counterpart. However, at some universities, the organizations are mixed.

At the University of Minnesota, a co-ed Tau Beta Sigma chapter was recently founded, said Tim Stark, junior in computer engineering and district president of Kappa Kappa Psi. Other schools have chosen to do the same.

"There is no reference to sex in the (chapters') constitutions and (the constitutions) have the same purpose," Stark said.

Tau Beta Sigma does have a clause in its constitution which recognizes Kappa Kappa Psi as "equal and affiliated." However, a similar clause failed at a recent Kappa Kappa Psi national convention when several members attempted to pass it.

Kappa Kappa Psi recognizes Tau Beta Sigma as "an associated organization with similar purposes," Stark said.

The only things that the K-State chapters do separately are their chapter rituals and finances, he said. In the "near future" he hopes the two will have a joint bank account.

Members of each organization work together in fundraisers and "split the profits right down the middle," said Nikki Haunschild, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and first district vice president for Tau Beta Sigma.

"We usually have the same amount of money in our accounts," she said.

The national governing body of Tau Beta Sigma and Kappa Kappa Psi share an office at Oklahoma State University and the national executive director is the same person for both organizations.

Although Stark is in favor of merging, he realizes that there would be several problems.

"At some schools, the two (organizations) don't do so much jointly," Stark said.

He also said that deciding on a ritual and a name for the combined group would not be easy.

Haunschild can see advantages both ways, but is also in favor of merging.

"We're there for the same purpose," she said.

U-LearN needs funding now if it's to continue

U-LearN will die unless it receives a larger budget.

Student Senate decided last week that it could not provide funds that would allow U-LearN to hire a director at $16,000 annually. The money, which would have come from Senate's reserve account, was denied when senators realized they could not keep a fat $20,000 reserve account and fund the position also.

The position must be filled by a person who holds a master's degree because the director must teach a class. The University requires classes be taught by people with master's degrees.

In the past, U-LearN has had the good fortune of receiving the help of Susan Scott, associate dean of students. She taught class and advised the group even though those jobs were not in her job description.

But she is moving to a different department and will not have time to continue working with U-LearN. There in lies U-LearN's request for funding. Until now, students have divided the duties of what the director would do.

However, students come and go quickly, therefore U-LearN has the potential to lack the continuity it needs. Since Senate will not fund the position, the University should subsidize the group, for two reasons.

First and foremost, not only does U-LearN benefit all of K-State, but it makes sense that an instructor should be paid by the University and not the students.

Second, U-LearN is a service worth saving. It provides programs like the Kansas Career Planning and the Resource Center upon which the University relies, not to mention the convenient telephone service K-Staters used more than 28,000 times last year. It would be difficult to find anyone who hasn't used the service or thinks it's unjustified.

U-LearN needs the money for a director. And the University needs a director for U-LearN.

'Quality of life' money would give co-op hope

Finally, someone has stepped forward to offer a rescue plan for the deficit-plagued KSU Childcare Cooperative.

In their search for additional funding to raise teacher's salaries above the national poverty level, co-op officials have been turned down by Student Senate and the administration has offered only $9,000 in additional funding for next year, which represents less than 5 percent of the $200,000 co-op had been seeking.

Last week, Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, suggested what might be a workable solution to the co-op's crisis.

He announced he was sending a memo to Student Senate Chairman Doug Folk and Student Body President Troy Lubbers suggesting Senate consider creation of a "quality of life" student fee.

The fee would benefit not only co-op but also aid non-revenue sports, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and the debate team.

Admittedly, the idea does have its flaws. It will be next school year before Senate can organize a task force or assign a committee to study Krause's proposal.

And with increases in the fees charged by co-op set to go into effect June 1, a significant number of co-op's students may be withdrawn by their parents because they can no longer afford to pay for the quality care provided to their children.

It's good that Krause has thrown co-op a lifeline. Maybe co-op has the strength to hang on until it can be pulled back safely aboard the boat.

Debating God's existence

Views support theory of superior being

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI
Collegian Columnist

Since time immemorial, humans have pondered over the question about the existence of God. How in the world does one go about deciding whether God exists? There exist various world views like Atheism, Agnosticism, Monotheism, etc.; however, if you wish to learn more about these, you should enroll in a philosophy/religion class. My intention is to present some arguments in favor of God's existence.

The first argument is based on the existence of the world. This is called the cosmological argument from the Greek word "Kosmos," which means world. Scientifically speaking, every effect must have an adequate cause. The universe is an effect which demands a cause. Where did it come from? Where did living things come from? How did they get here on earth (and possibly on other planets, too)? Human logic tells us that whatever was responsible for bringing this world and everything into existence must have been greater than the universe. Does not a watch imply a watchmaker? Does not the existence of the electric bulb imply an intelligent inventor? Does not the universe imply a creator?

The order and intricate design of the world indicates the existence of an expert designer. The computer has been designed and made by brilliant human beings. Does one dare suggest that the computer came into being by a fate of chance? Instead its existence implies the existence of an intelligent human creator. Similarly, a complex and intricate universe implies that a divine creator (a supreme being) exists.

Human beings are the most complex entities in our known universe. Humans possess intelligence, emotions and will. Humans can think, feel and determine. The human personality is an extremely difficult phenomenon to explain. No evidence exists that an unintelligent natural (or unnatural) force has brought human beings into existence. Since humans are intelligent, they must have a creator who is also intelligent.

The chance development of human beings from a lower form of life is highly illogical. The theory of evolution implies the creation of a complex order from simple order or disorder. This is inconsistent with the widely accepted thermodynamic idea that all natural processes proceed toward a state of increased disorder. A similar argument can be put forth for the creation of the universe that depicts the existence of a scientifically accurate ordering.

The theory of evolution has a considerable number of flaws and has not been proved yet. I find it surprising that the so-called scientists who are picky about proving something as obscure as Green's theorem before accepting it can accept the theory of evolution without questioning it. If someone thinks they descended from monkeys, see if I care — after all, they know their ancestors better than I do. Actually, I do care for these people — the god of the universe is a loving god and advocates loving one another.

Most people possess the concept that there must be a perfect supreme being. Most groups of people — civilized or uncivilized, educated or uneducated, modern or primitive — have the idea of a perfect supreme being. How did this all-pervasive concept come into existence? Does not it make one wonder that it is God who has put this idea into our minds?

Even with all the above arguments, very few of the readers who do not have faith in God would be convinced that God exists. I humbly accept that while answering the question, faith comes before reason. But just imagine that without God humans would be mere chance products of unthinking fate, making them of little or no worth. Does not the very thought make you shudder? What would be the purpose of an individual human's life on earth if after death one would be reduced to soil?

It is this concept of we being chance products of unthinking fate which is responsible for the decline of human dignity in modern times. In recent times, millions of humans have been killed due to war, induced famines, abortion, euthanasia and the like. Among ourselves, we possess enough nuclear power to annihilate the world. We no longer crave for absolute truths, but live in a relativistic society. Spiritualism has disappeared. It has become a material world.

Where is God? We have killed him. Our culture simply lives as if God does not exist or that God is dead. This has lead to a devaluation of all human values. It has made truth relative; absolutes no longer exist. "All humans are equal, but some are more equal than others," has become the axiom of our times.

The only solution is to resurrect God. I am confident that it would make this world a simpler and better place in which to reside.

Great blood drive

Editor,

I wish to express sincere appreciation and thanks to the K-State students, faculty/staff and community volunteers who participated in the KSU Bloodmobile drive of Feb. 22-25. Through the efforts of these volunteers, 1,050 usable units of blood were collected.

K-State continues to take the lead in blood collection drives in the Wichita region. We can all be proud of our commitment to such a worthwhile project.

Save Van Zile

Editor,

I am writing in response to the letter in the April 4 Collegian concerning Van Zile Hall. Currently, a proposal has been made to renovate the 62-year-old building.

In my opinion, this would not be a mistake or an economic drain to the housing department if funded properly. I realize that $2.5 million is a large amount of money, but if alumni were contacted, fundraisers were held, and students helped to contribute, there would be other options for funding the hall. Think of the outcome. The first residence hall in Kansas would be preserved and an historical landmark would be saved. It is a beautiful building with a lot of class. Why tear it down for strict modernism?

Rhonda Jarrett
junior in elementary education

Maintain hall

Editor,

Dave Young in his letter "Economic drain" in the April 4 Collegian may be right that we do not need Van Zile Hall as a dormitory right now, but he seems to be overlooking several factors. The building, which is the oldest residence hall in the state, relates beautifully to Boyd and Putnam halls, enclosing a much used open space and blocking a view of parking around the high-rise halls to the north.

The cost of renovating Van Zile cannot ever be approximated until the plans for its use have been determined, and the cost of its eventual demolition has to be considered as well. The reason for its deteriorating state is the obvious lack of maintenance, despite the funds that were allotted for the renovation and the fact that many students who have lived in Van Zile over the years loved the building so much that they believe a higher rent would be acceptable.

Be international

Editor,

It is interesting to know that many students at K-State do not know at least one international student well. But what can be done about it?

This coming week starting on Monday, International Week will be celebrated at K-State. During this week, there will be programs prepared by international students like informational exhibits, movies, music and many others. I believe this event is one of many opportunities in which students can get to know a new international student.

I believe international students add a cultural diversity which is unique to the Midwest. Let's get to know them better.

Stay off sidewalk

Editor,

With the warm weather here, many students choose to ride their bicycles to class. Which is fine, but unfortunately a few ride on the sidewalks. Sidewalks are for walking, not for riding, so don't ride on them.

Clint Reynolds

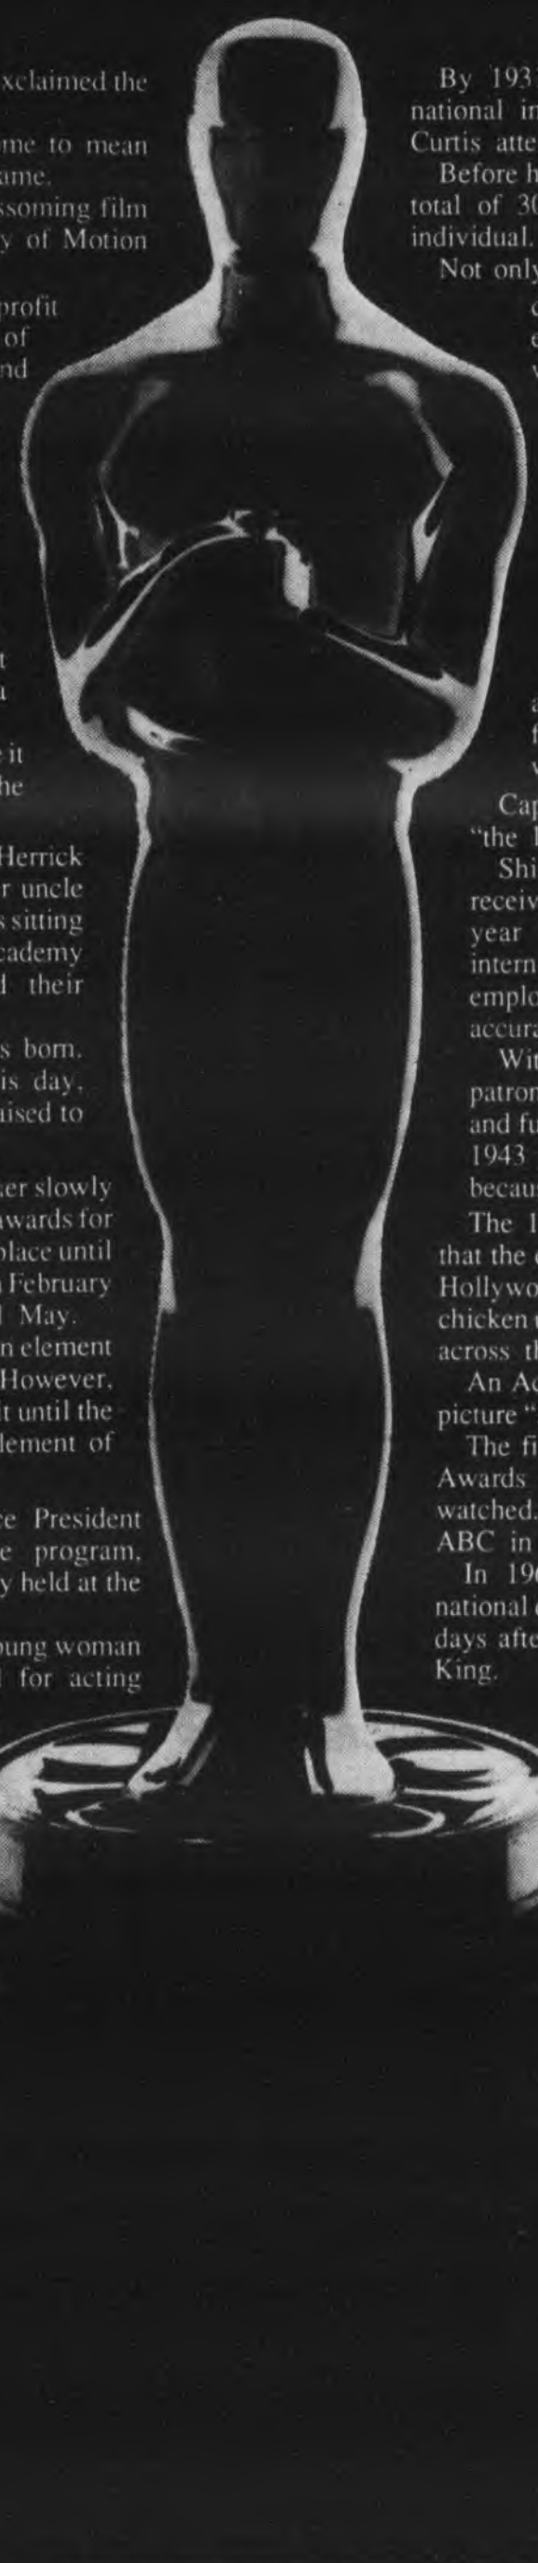
Think about it

Editor,

This is in regard to the process of selling basketball tickets. The camp out is an unjust way of distributing season tickets. Students living off campus deserve equal rights. Houses, dorms and clubs are the only groups that can get enough people together to stick it out 24 hours a day for two weeks.

All the administration thinks about is the publicity it gets. Think of all those cold nights we spent outside in drafty tents. The administration needs to get its priorities straight.

Also, think of all the classes skipped because of the camp out. Are we putting athletics above education? Think about it. There is a problem with the camp out system. Talk to the senators of your college and let's get something done about it.



Robert Disberger

Oscar celebrates 60th

"Why, he looks like my uncle Oscar," exclaimed the Academy's librarian.

And so the golden statue that has come to mean excellence in motion pictures got its name.

On May 4, 1927, 36 leaders of the blossoming film industry met and organized the Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences.

The Academy was organized as a non-profit corporation dedicated to the ideal of enhancing the cultural, educational and technical progress of motion pictures.

Industry leader Louis B. Mayer suggested at an industry banquet in 1927 that the Academy should recognize cinematic achievements by presenting annual awards.

As Mayer was speaking, Art Director Cedric Gibbons began sketching a figure on the tablecloth. The figure was a stalwart man standing on a reel of film and holding a crusaders sword.

Later he put his sketch on paper and gave it to sculptor George Stanley, who molded the figure.

In 1931, when librarian Magaret Herrick exclaimed that the statuette resembled her uncle Oscar, a newspaper correspondent who was sitting in an adjoining office wrote, "The Academy employees have affectionately dubbed their famous gold statue Oscar."

The nickname stuck and a legend was born.

Oscar has remained unchanged to this day, though the base on which he stands was raised to give better proportion to the design.

The presentation of the Oscars went rather slowly the first year. Voting for the first Academy awards for the year ending July 31, 1928, did not take place until January 1929. The results were published in February and the awards ceremony was not until May.

Since the winners knew ahead of time, an element of suspense was lacking at the ceremonies. However, since that time the winners have had to wait until the night of the presentations ensuring an element of surprise.

President Douglas Fairbanks and Vice President William C. DeMille, chairmen of the program, presented 15 statuettes at the first ceremony held at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel.

All of the winners were men except a young woman named Janet Gaynor who was honored for acting achievements in three different pictures.

The Academy realized the need for special honorary awards and made two such presentations the first year. Warner Brothers received an award for its pioneer talking picture "The Jazz Singer," and Charles Chaplin received a honorary award for producing, directing, writing and starring in "The Circus."

The first live Awards broadcast, which lasted for one hour, was made by a Los Angeles radio station in 1930 at the second award ceremony.

By 1931, the Academy Awards had assumed national importance with Vice President Charles Curtis attending the ceremony.

Before his death in 1966, Walt Disney received a total of 30 awards, by far more than any other individual.

Not only have the Awards been inundated with distinguished achievements and excitement, but humor has prevailed as well.

Disney received one big honorary Oscar for "Snow White" and seven little Oscar statuettes for the dwarfs in 1938. Edgar Bergen received a wooden statuette with movable jaws in honor of his wooden friend Charlie McCarthy.

Director Frank Capra had an embarrassing yet humorous experience in 1934. When the presenter said "Come and get it, Frank," Capra walked 40 feet from his before he realized that the real winner was Frank Lloyd.

Capra later described his return to his seat as "the longest crawl in history."

Shirley Temple became the first juvenile to receive an honorary Oscar in 1935 the same year that Price Waterhouse & Co., an international firm of public accountants, was employed to count the ballots in order to ensure accuracy.

With the onset of World War II, stars and patrons, who in the past had worn lavish gowns and furs, were asked to dress informally. From 1943 to 1947 the Oscar was made of plaster because metal was an essential war material.

The 1943 presentations marked the last time that the ceremony was to be staged as a banquet. Hollywood considered it ridiculous to be dining on chicken under glass when food was being rationed across the country.

An Academy record was set in 1951 when the picture "All About Eve" received 14 nominations.

The first television broadcast of the Academy Awards was in 1953 as more than 80 million watched. The first color broadcast was made by ABC in 1966.

In 1968, Hollywood once again reacted to national duress by postponing the Awards for two days after the assasination of Dr. Martin Luther King.

The 1969 presentation was telecast live worldwide by a satellite.

The Academy Awards have been marked by extreme emotion such as when Chaplin ended 20 years of self-imposed exile in 1972 by attending the ceremony.

So what can be expected from the 60th Annual Academy Awards this Monday evening? Judging from the past, a lot of flash, emotion, music, stars and surprises.

Envelopes to be opened Monday

"The envelope please. And the winner is ... "

If you tune in to the 60th Annual Academy Awards Monday you will hear this phrase many times.

The ceremony will be televised live from the Shrine Civic Auditorium in Los Angeles on the ABC television network starting at 8 p.m. (CST).

The nominees this year for best picture are: "The Last Emperor," an epic about China; "Hope and Glory," a comic version of World War II as seen through the eyes of a 10-year-old English boy; "Fatal Attraction," a thriller about what can happen to a man who cheats on his wife; "Broadcast News," a satirical look at the inner workings of a television network news division; and "Moonstruck," a comedy about love in Brooklyn.

Missing from the best-picture category, as well as all other major awards, is Stephen Spielberg's "Empire of the Sun."

The Academy members were divided on this picture, with some calling it excellent while others believed it was technically skillful but manipulative.

Another surprise was that James L. Brooks was not nominated for best director for "Broadcast News."

The best picture of the year is determined by the vote of all 4,400 members of the Academy, while best director nominations are made by the Academy's 257 directors.

Movies that are released late in the year tend to have a better chance of winning an Oscar simply because the excitement at the box office and among critics is still active.

With this in mind, "Moonstruck" and "The Last Emperor" have an edge on the competition because they are still fresh.

Many were surprised that "Fatal Attraction" received a nomination for best picture because the Academy tends to shun extremely successful movies.

In the best actress category, nominees are: Glenn Close for "Fatal Attraction," making this her fourth nomination in seven films; Meryl Streep for "Ironweed," who has had seven nominations in 14 films; Cher for "Moonstruck;" Sally Kirkland for "Anna;" and Holly Hunter for "Broadcast News."

Nominees for best actor are: Jack Nicholson for "Ironweed," his ninth nomination; Michael Douglas for "Wall Street;" William Hurt for "Broadcast News;" Marcello Mastroianni for "Dark Eyes;" and Robin Williams for "Good Morning Vietnam."

Presenters at this year's ceremony include Marlee Matlin, Glenn Close and Paul Newman.

This year the Academy's Board of Governors has voted to award the prestigious Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award to writer-director-producer Billy Wilder.

Wilder has long been regarded as a leading motion picture creator.

He has won six Academy Awards and has had 21 nominations since 1939.

Some of Wilder's works include "Stalag 17," "Some Like It Hot," "Romeo and Juliet" and "The Apartment."

The honor is given to "a creative producer whose body of work reflects a consistently high quality of motion picture production."

Small community to receive help from student workers

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

About 50 students will be taking a road trip Saturday.

Not a road trip in the true sense of the phrase — their trip has a mission.

The group is going to Barnes, a town about 70 miles northwest of Manhattan, to work on its first project in the Community Structural Assistance Volunteer Effort.

While there, the students will lend a hand painting, doing light yard work, cleaning the city park and repairing a one-room school house which will be used for small meetings by community groups, said Nick Sedivy, a Barnes resident who is helping to coordinate the project.

Much of the work that the group is scheduled to complete Saturday could not be completed without help lended to the community from somewhere, Sedivy said.

"A lot of the home and yard work will be done for older people who can't get around very well," he said. "Ordinarily, this work wouldn't get done."

"I think this is a great project," Sedivy said. "This will give the students a taste of small-town living and give them a chance to experience the friendliness of a small town."

Barnes' population is about 250.

"Everybody knows everybody here. We're just like people you would meet in any other place," Sedivy said.

Anne Brandsberg, Community SAVE's public relations director, said the philosophy behind the project is to teach students the rewards gained from volunteering and to assist in aiding the rural crisis in Kansas.

"It's turned into a real neat opportunity," she said. "I'm trying to convince people that even though they are involved in campus activities or have jobs, most of them still have time to help people, and that helping people is good."

Steve Schmitt, senior in psychology, is one of the students who volunteered for the project.

"Some of my friends are involved, and I did some professional painting for two years," he said. "I just thought this would be a fun way to spend the day."

Follow-up seminar to examine language's effect on ill people

By The Collegian Staff

How language affects an individual with a disease is the topic of Saturday's seminar sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education.

Registration for "Responding to Disease Past and Present" will begin at 8 a.m., Saturday, in Union 213. The cost is $10.

The seminar is a follow-up to Wednesday's convocation given by writer Susan Sontag, "Illness as Metaphor." Her book, by the same title, was written while Sontag was battling cancer several years ago. It stresses how language usage affects the experience.

A videotape of Sontag's lecture will be shown at 9 a.m. following registration. A discussion of Sontag's lecture will precede lunch.

Afternoon presentations include Albert Hamscher on "Disease and History," Jana Hesser "People and Pathogens: Their Natural History," Sarah A. Merrill "Moral Stress: New Models for the Conflicts Present in Illness and Epidemic" and Leland E. Warren on "Illness as Metaphor in Literature."

The seminar is funded in part by the Kansas Committee for the Humanities which is being organized by the Division of Continuing Education.

'Cats to host 500 area athletes

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

A track meet boring? Heaven forbid. That's profanity to John Capriotti, the K-State men's and women's track coach.

"Most people who think track is boring are the ones who haven't been to a track meet," Capriotti said. "I think Americans like action, and that's what a track meet is. There's always something going on."

With that in mind, the Wildcats are set to host the KSU/Pepsi Invitational Saturday at R.V. Christian Track.

Several factors, including the weather and K-State's track facility which can hold up to 6,000 spectators, is making the KSU/Pepsi meet one of the top attractions in the Midwest.

"We've had some good weather in the past, and that makes it a good opportunity for teams to get some good times in the Midwest. This time of year in the Midwest, (the weather) is kind of unstable," Capriotti said.

"Plus with our facility, everything is done right in front of (the fans) which is good for them and the athletes," he added.

Five Big Eight Conference schools and 15 other teams will send representatives to the non-scoring meet which gets underway at 9 a.m. The turnout — as many as 500 athletes are expected to compete — suprised Capriotti.

"We are happy with the turnout. It is bigger than anticipated," he said. "It's turning out to be a real big meet."

"Low key" has been the term Capriotti has favored most of the 1988 season to describe the Wildcats' meets. But after last week's second-place finishes in the outdoor opener, the second-year head coach has somewhat changed his outlook.

"We're still not concerned about team scores. We'll be concerned about that at the Big Eight Conference meet. As far as individual efforts, low key would not be the words to use now. Some of our athletes need to start performing better to get into the bigger meets down the line," Capriotti said.

Though Capriotti said many of his athletes "didn't have a lot of intensity" last week at Lincoln, Neb., he admits entering a scoring meet that early was a mistake.

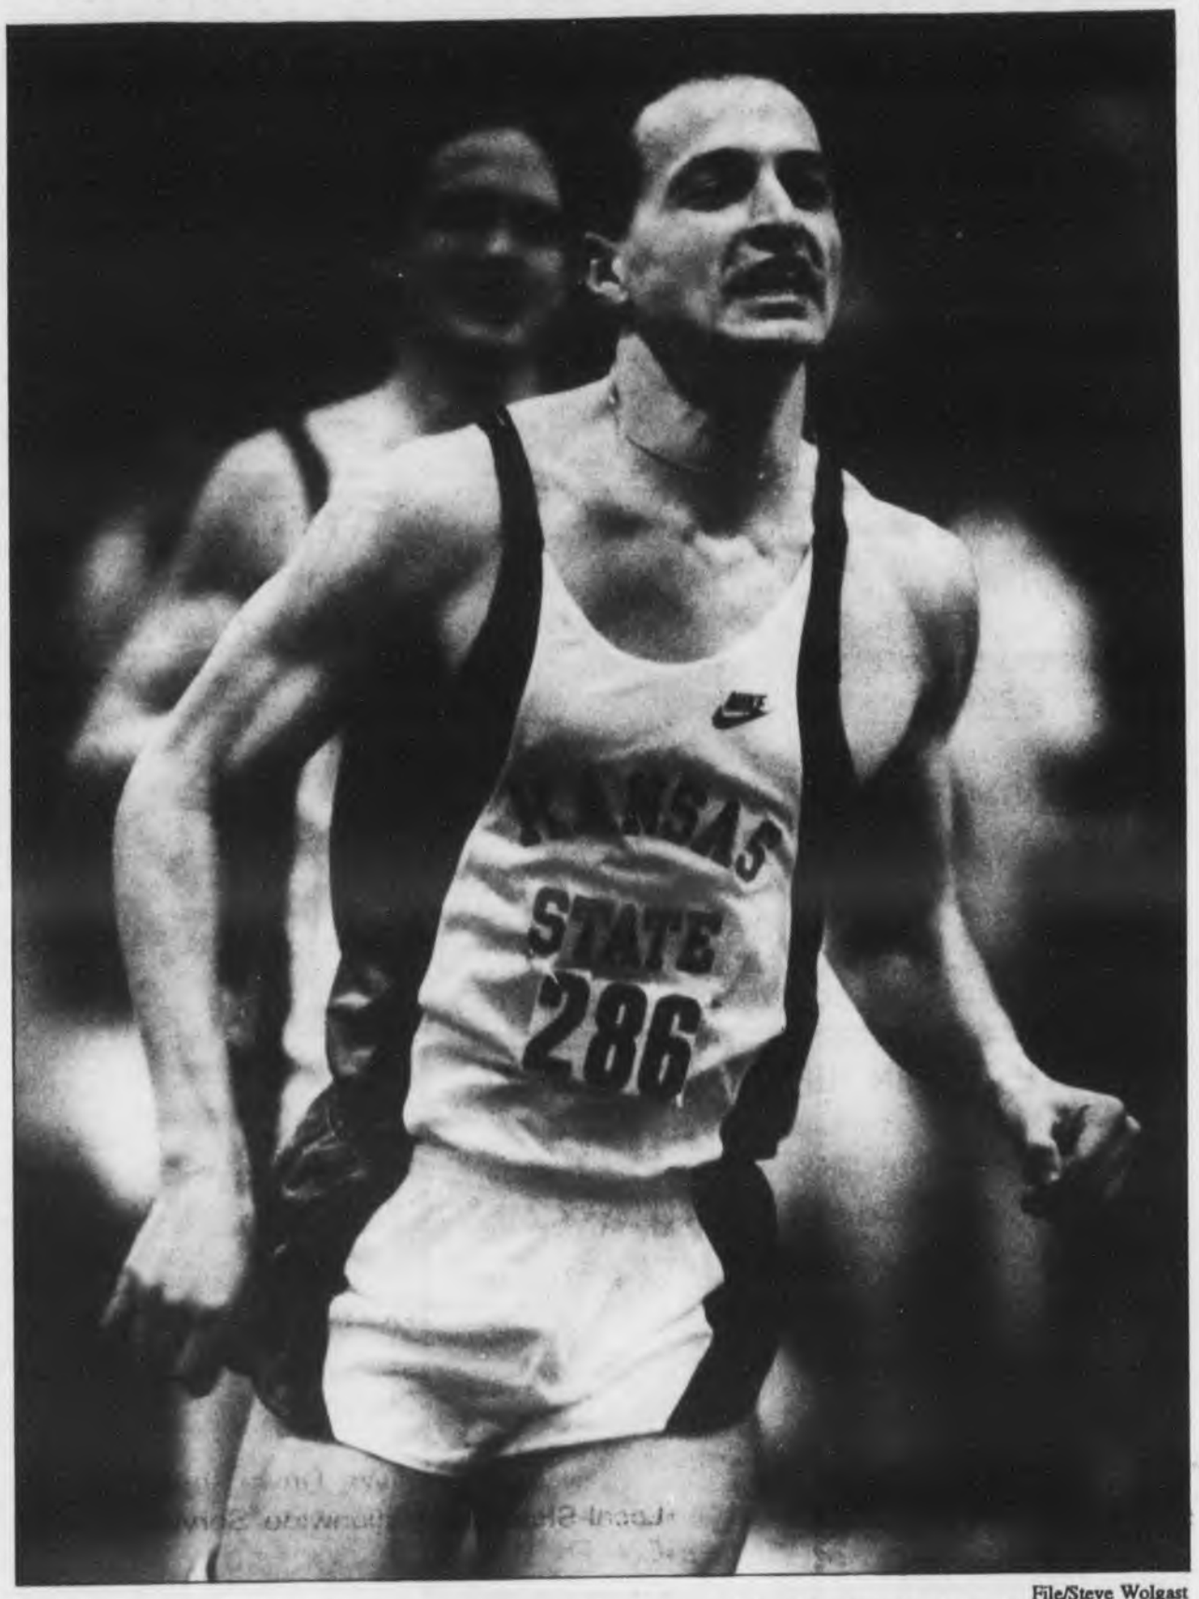
"It's so early in the year. You don't want to run people in events ... just to score team points," Capriotti said. "To get those points in the Big Eight meet, you have to bring each athlete around individually during the year."

Remember when K-State's football team had its "Bataan Death March," this season, playing nationally ranked Oklahoma, Nebraska and Oklahoma State in successive games? The track team has its own grueling three-week schedule ahead of it following Saturday's meet with an outing at UCLA, the Kansas Relays and the Drake-Penn Relays.

This makes the transition from the indoor to outdoor competition a difficult one.

"It's because of the level of competition," Capriotti said. "It doesn't give the athletes, especially the younger ones, the time they're used to to prepare for their state meets at the end of the year. They have a meet that's like their state meet the second or third week out."

K-State athletes to watch for Saturday are: senior sprinter Jeff Reynolds, senior distance runner Ron Stahl, junior distance runner Pat Hessini, junior thrower Dan O'Mara, junior sprinter-hurdler Kim Kilpatrick, senior jumper-sprinter Felicia Curry, senior distance runner Jacque Struckhoff and senior middle distance runner Anne Stadler.



Making his debut for K-State's track team this weekend is sophmore high jumper-decathalete Steve Henson. He is expected to compete in the high jump and javelin.

Senior world-class triple jumper Kenny Harrison, who is training for the 1988 Olympic Trials, is not expected to compete with K-State again until the Big Eight's outdoor meet.

"Before this season started, I told Kenny I expected him to compete in the Big Eight and national meets. Other than that, I'll be lenient," Capriotti said. "But he's been great. He competed more for us in the indoor season than he was supposed to."

NOTES: The javelin and long jump competition get underway at 9 a.m. Saturday. The shot put and high jump are slated for an 11 a.m. start, with the pole vault and discus scheduled for 1:30 p.m. Running events start at noon with the women's 5,000-meter run. Sprint events start with the 400-meter relays at 12:40 p.m., and will last unitl 5:30 p.m. There is a $1 admission charge.

Teams entered in the meet in addition to K-State are: Nebraska, Iowa State, Oklahoma State, Kansas, McPherson College, Wichita State, Bethany, Northern Iowa, South Dakota, Central Missouri State, Southwest Missouri State, Morningside; and Kansas community colleges Garden City, Dodge City, Cloud County, Barton County and Johnson County.

One of the Wildcat athletes to watch for Saturday is sprinter and hurdler Pat Hessini, who will be one of about 500 participants in the KSU/Pepsi Invitational track meet at R.V. Christian Field.

Netters to meet OU, OSU

By The Collegian Staff

Competing against the top two women's tennis teams in the Big Eight Conference in the same weekend isn't an easy thing to prepare for.

K-State will travel to Norman, Okla., Saturday for an afternoon match against the University of Oklahoma on Sunday. The following day K-State plays Oklahoma State in Stillwater. Both matches are set to start at 1 p.m.

"It's hard (to prepare for the marches) in the sense you need to be playing well when you go down there or they are capable of blowing you right off the court," K-State coach Steve Bietau said.

"We're considered to be an underdog going in so we have nothing to lose, but everything to gain. The players and I have no reservations about playing Oklahoma and Oklahoma State," he added.

K-State, 6-5 in dual matches, is 1-1 in conference matches after defeating Missouri 9-0 in in it's Big Eight opener. The Wildcats lost to Kansas 7-2 earlier this week.

Oklahoma State has dominated the Big Eight in women's tennis for nearly a decade. The Cowgirls have won the conference seven consecutive years and is the favorite to claim the title this season.

Matching up against O-State, one of the top teams in the nation, is hard to do for any conference school, but Bietau said K-State is capable of competing at any position.

"We are capable of winning at any spot if the girls are willing to compete and do put it all on the line," he said. "We have something to prove. Four out of the six girls had their personal best matches Tuesday against Kansas."

Kentucky team asks Chandler to resign

By The Associated Press

VERSAILLES, Ky. — Former baseball commissioner and Kentucky governor A.B. "Happy" Chandler apologized Thursday for a racial remark he made, but calls continued for his resignation from the University of Kentucky's Board of Trustees.

Kentucky's football team halted spring drills for a day. The team will resume practice on Friday, but will participate in a rally calling for Chandler's resignation.

Chandler denied he was a racist and said his record on race issues should be enough to convince anyone of his concern for minorities.

"I don't reckon there's anybody in this lifetime has made any greater contribution to race relations and good feelings between black and white people than your humble servant, and I think the record will show that," Chandler said at a news conference.

The remark that touched off the furor was made Tuesday when Chandler, 89, was attending an investments committee meeting of the University of Kentucky Board of Trustees. The university decided in 1985 to dispose of its investments in South Africa because of its racial policies.

"You know Zimbabwe's all nigger now. There aren't any whites," Chandler said.

The comment prompted a storm of protest, including the football team's action.

"He doesn't realize that this is the '80s. This is 1988 and we don't like being called that anymore ... I mean we never did like being called that. The term is not acceptable," said team spokesman Dave Johnson, a defensive back from Louisville.

Gov. Wallace Wilkinson, a political ally who restored Chandler to a voting position on the board this year, said Wednesday Chandler should apologize.

Wilkinson did not ask for his resignation from the board, but during a conversation Thursday, "took me to the woodshed" for the remark, Chandler said.

"I didn't intentionally mean to be offensive to anybody," said Chandler.

When he was growing up in rural Henderson County, Chandler said blacks were called "niggers" and "they didn't dislike it."

Chandler said he would not agree that the remark was a "racial slur" and heatedly denied being a racist or sexist.

"Only the ignorant would have even accused me of that," Chandler said.

He used the opportunity of a news conference at his Versailles home to recount what happened when he was commissioner of baseball in 1946 and Brooklyn Dodgers owner Branch Rickey wanted to sign Jackie Robinson as the first black man to play major league professional baseball.

Rickey came to Versailles to discuss the matter and Chandler said only he could approve of the move, even though all other club owners were against it.

"I said, 'Someday they may ask me why I didn't let this boy play and (if) I say it's because he's black, that might not be a satisfactory answer,"' Chandler said.

Golfers win Creighton Invite

OMAHA, Nebra. — K-State men's golf team began defense of its Nebraska Cup title by winning the 16-team Creighton Invitational contested Thursday at the Dodge Park Golf Club in Omaha, Nebr.

The Wildcats claimed the team championship on the second hole of a playoff. Both K-State and Emporia State had finished the regulation round of 18 holes with identical 309 scores.

Leading the way for the 'Cats was senior Chris Gomez who tallied a 76 which was just two strokes off the top individual round of the day. Following Gomez were Troy Keller (77), John Shields (77), Todd Fowler (79) and Jeff Sedorcek (80).

K-State will win the Cup if it has the best combined score from the Creighton Invite and today's Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational. Action for the Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational will begin at 1 p.m.

Area crews to race in regatta

K-State and Manhattan High School crew members will be competing Saturday in the First Annual Washington University Crew Classic in St. Louis, Mo.

The K-State men's varsity-eight will be racing in the regatta against stiff competition that will test the togetherness of the crew, said K-State crew coach Don Rose.

"The men's varsity-eight has been having trouble swinging and rowing together," K-State crew coach don Rose said.

K-State will also be entering two men's freshmen-eight and two women's freshmen-eight crews in the regatta. Manhattan High School will be racing the women's varsity-eight against the college freshmen crews.

Shockers lose to Kansas, 10-1

LAWRENCE — Center fielder Pat Karlin, making his first start in a month, knocked in three runs and four Kansas pitchers stopped Wichita State on four hits as the Jayhawks beat the Shockers 10-1 Thursday night.

The loss snapped Wichita State's 15-game winning streak.

Karlin had an RBI bunt single in Kansas' five-run sixth inning and added a two-run triple in the seventh to increase the Jayhawks' lead to 9-1.

Tom Bilyeu, 4-2, pitching in relief of KU starter Brad Hinkle, got the win. Mike McCloud and Craig Stoppel finished up.

Jeff Williams, 1-1, who relieved Shocker starter Jeff Bluma in the third, took the loss.

Stillwell hits HR, Reds down Cards

By The Associated Press

Royals 7, Blue Jays 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Going hitless in his first games with the Kansas City Royals left Kurt Stillwell with a little something extra just when he needed it.

Stillwell hit a two-run, inside-the-park home run Thursday night as the Kansas City Royals beat the Toronto Blue Jays 7-4.

"I was hurting when I got to third base," said Stillwell, who had gotten his first American League hit when he doubled in the fifth inning.

"I guess I had some energy saved up by not being on base the past two nights. I went around third and I saw the guy holding his hands up (signaling Stillwell not to slide) and I said, 'What did he do? Kick it over the fence?"'

Stillwell hit a drive that bounced near the base of the foul pole after Jamie Quirk had reached on a two-out throwing error by second baseman Nelson Liriano. The ball skipped away from right fielder Jesse Barfield as Quirk and Stillwell scored for a 6-3 lead in the sixth inning.

"My first reaction was I hit it real well," said Stillwell, acquired in the off-season from the Cincinnati Reds for pitcher Danny Jackson.

"I was able to get the head of the bat on it and I haven't been able to do that. They were throwing me a lot of changeups and jamming me inside. On that particular pitch, I was able to stay back and go to the opposite field. That felt good because I had been pulling the ball too much."

Danny Tartabull hit a three-run home run in the first inning for Kansas City. Stillwell also homered off starter Jim Clancy, 0-1.

The Royals held George Bell hitless in three official trips after Bell had eight hits in his first nine at-bats with three home runs. The Blue Jays also made three errors.

Kevin Seitzer hit a solo home run and RBI single for the Royals. Mark Gubicza, 1-0, pitched six innings for the victory.

"Gubicza is tough," Blue Jays manager Jimy Williams said. "George is a human being, and Gubicza pitched him tough. I've seen better (defense). It's just a physical part of the game."

Tartabull homered after Seitzer walked and George Brett singled. Stillwell doubled in the fifth for his first American League hit and scored on Seitzer's single for a 4-2 lead.

Fred McGriff hit a solo homer in the Toronto sixth and Seitzer homered in the seventh.

Royals claim first victory

Reds 8, Cardinals 1

CINCINNATI — Danny Jackson pitched a three-hitter and drove in two runs in his Cincinnati debut Thursday, leading the Reds to an 8-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Eric Davis and Kal Daniels also drove in two runs each to help the Reds sweep their rain-shorted two-game series with the defending National League champions.

Jackson, acquired last November from Kansas City, overcame control problems to win his first appearance against the Cardinals since he beat them in the fifth game of the 1985 World Series. Jackson walked seven, but allowed only a bunt single in the third by Tom Herr, a soft double by Tony Pena in the fourth and a solo homer by Bob Horner in the eighth.

Jackson was 9-18 for the Royals last season, but he pitched 11 complete games and two shutouts.

PERSONALS 18

BETH, HOW 'bout those Jayhawks! Bet you're jealous! Love your KU friend, Debbie. (128-137)

PAULA, YOUR love is everything to me! Let's keep going like we are. Love, Kevin. (132)

TRABBIT, THERE is no getting over you! Please come back, I want it! Bonnie. (132)

SCOTT H. I have a friend who thinks you're hot, she's afraid to tell you but I'm not. Pre-party at 4 and then you'll eat, then to Brownell's pad some friends you'll meet. This gig is a formal so dress your best, you'll party till 1 then . . . you know the rest. Today's the day to celebrate, by the way your date is 1st rate. A concerned Kappa. (132)

DU GOLFERS—Today's the day that we will play, "fore" is the time, the slab is the place, and when the fun is over and done we're sure you'll have made a "hole in one!"—See ya on the greens!—Love, the AX's. (132)

SCOTT H. Yes, interested? How about that coke! You set the time. Me. (132)

TO THE men of Sigma Chi: Yesterday morning when we got you out of bed, you Hot men were looking awfully dead! We brought you beer and donuts; all of it was free. We wish you luck on Saturday for the win: year number three! Love from your Pi Phi coaches, Becky, Sue and Denise. (132)

T.U.P.—A treasure I found to warm my heart. These birds of yours are very smart. You write. They read. What more do I need? (Clues!) Poems, I've gotten. A fingerprint, too. A misprinted number? That's not like you. The adventure was welcome and a pleasure to me, but this dancing is all very new. I wish I knew more about you. Dancing in the dark for some can be scary. Read this you feathered friends and with it don't tarry. The dusk is preferred as you're probably aware. It's news of you I want to share. More than curious. (132)

DU BRAD H.—Ho what? Ho No! HoHoHo—It'll be Christmas before I get my dinner! Better set the date, 'cause I've got the place! Love, your Favorite Blonde. (132)

JIM AND Sean. Have you seen any trolls? Or do only "real men" see them? Respond if you see any, trolls that is! West at Quinlan. (132)

NATHAN—THANKS for the calculus help and good luck Saturday. Karen and Janie. (132)

AGR AND Rhomates. Don't forget to come play the tables at Casino Night Saturday, and save your winnings for the ??? Auction afterwards! (132)

CHERYL, HAPPY 21st Birthday. Get ready for this weekend. Have a great day. Love, Robin. (132)

THETA WENDY; May the next year be more fun than this past year has been. Remember I'm only two hours away. I Love You, Gary. (132)

TO THE lucious babes of Alpha Chi, Our function draws near as the day goes by. The putters are ready to go nine holes, but the tenth hole's the best as we let the good times roll. We'll drink and dance on the slab in the sun, our springtime party will be outrageously fun! This function together is long overdue, we can't wait to see you.—The men of D.U. (132)

PIKE 75TH Dates—Cheers to your 75 years, as we consume at least 75 beers! The ADPi's know the time has come to have some serious fun. Looking forward to Saturday night because it's certain to go just right!—Erin, Lynnette, Beth and Robin. (132)

BLONDE AND Brunette waiting for a tennis court Wednesday night about 10 on the bleachers at the rec. Wanna play doubles? Respond via personals. (132)

ADPi FORMAL Houseboys: Friday's the night, just can't wait! So excited that you're our dates. Get psyched for a great time!!! Jill and Tracy. (132)

GREG S.—Are you still curious? Meet me in the Union Cats Pause Monday at 9:30. De De. P.S. Mona will be there, too. (132)

DELTS—TAKE me out to the ballgame! We're going today. It's the Delts and the Darlings to watch the Royals play. The bus and kegs leave town at 3, so Delts get pumped, grab a cup—a great time—you'll see! Love, the Darlings. (132)

OLIVE, YOU beat the hell out of spinach, I'm glad you're here. Love, Popeye. (132)

DELTA SIG Dave H.—Good luck in Fite Nite. Love ya, Carole. (132)

PHI DELT HM—Even though there will be no pool table to hide under, I know you'll do great Sunday, but will you live up to your other nickname tonight? Blue. (132)

HOSS—I am so excited you're going to be in K.C.! We're going to have a wonderful summer—"the best!" I Love You, know what I mean? Vern. (132)

Agreement may be at hand to end Afghan war

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union and Afghanistan said Thursday agreement is at hand on ending the Afghan civil war and urged that a formal accord be signed in Geneva so the Kremlin can begin withdrawing its troops May 15.

The target date is two weeks before Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev and President Reagan begin their summit in the Soviet capital. Agreement on Afghanistan would resolve an issue that has troubled relations for nearly a decade, prompting a U.S. grain embargo and keeping Americans home from the 1980 Olympics in Moscow.

Gorbachev and Afghan leader Najib issued a joint statement after meeting in the Soviet Central Asian city of Tashkent.

"There is certain to be a signed agreement on political normalization," Tass quoted Gorbachev as saying while he toured a collective farm near Tashkent after the meeting. "I think both Pakistan and Afghanistan will come to agreement, and that we and the Americans will agree to be guarantors."

The joint communique, distributed by the Tass news agency, published on the front page of the government newspaper Izvestia and read during the nightly news program "Vremya." It omitted the usual criticism of positions taken by Pakistan and the United States at the Geneva peace talks. This omission could mean some behind-the-scenes compromise has been forged.

President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq said the Geneva accords were ready for signing, but U.N. mediator Diego Cordovez indicated problems remained.

"There are very difficult decisions and the only good thing — I think that is important — is that the political will is obviously there to take them," he told reporters in Geneva after the Soviet-Afghan statement was issued.

Gulbaddin Hekmatyar, head of the seven-party Afghan guerrilla alliance, said in Islamabad, Pakistan, said it was the "first step toward victory" and a "defeat for the Russians." He said the guerrillas "will try to intensify" the war.

Draft documents in Geneva call for an end to outside aid for the rebels and U.S. officials have pressed for "symmetry," a simultaneous end of Soviet military aid to Najib's government.

Zia, quoted by Pakistan's official news agency, said: "According to unofficial reports, the two superpowers have agreed on the symmetry under which both would be able to provide continued assistance to their respective allies in Afghanistan."

No details of the alleged agreement were given.

Sources in Washington called the Gorbachev-Najib statement a positive sign of accommodation on the symmetry question but the State Department's public comment was limited .

Co-op

"We've been a tremendous team and that's what I'm really going to miss."

Despite Bolsen's feelings about Gray's departure, she said she views the coming months as a "new era" for the co-op. She said the staff will focus on recruiting children to fill the co-op once new rates go into effect June 1 and that efforts to make the public more aware of child care issues will continue.

In addition, she said that even though co-op officials didn't get the financial commitment for which they were hoping, their task has been made easier now that they have a defined set of financial parameters within which to work.

Despite the suggestion by Krause last week that the co-op should consider the possibility of closing, Bolsen allayed any fears of that Thursday.

"We will be open," she said. Furthermore, she said Gray's resignation will not prompt her to do the same.

"My commitment is here right now," Bolsen said. "Now is a really good time to stay with the co-op and help it into its new era. That's my commitment."

Hijackers propose trading Kuwaiti hostages for fuel

By The Associated Press

LARNACA, Cyprus — The hijackers of a Kuwaiti jumbo jet offered to trade passengers for fuel Sunday and threatened to crash the aircraft into Kuwait's royal palace. They also warned of a "slow and quiet massacre" of their hostages if their demands were not met.

A flight engineer said the hijackers, who are demanding the release of 17 pro-Iranian terrorists imprisoned in Kuwait, had started to hurt one of the passengers.

It is believed there are still 53 people aboard the Kuwait Airways Boeing 747, including three members of Kuwait's ruling Al-Sabah family and at least six hijackers.

In Lebanon, a pro-Iranian group threatened to kill kidnapped American and French hostages if any attempt was made to storm the plane.

A statement from the Islamic Jihad terrorist group was delivered to the Reuters news agency in west Beirut, along with photographs of journalists Terry A. Anderson, an American, and Jean-Paul Kauffmann of France.

"To the families of the hostages, we declare that we shall execute the Western captives in Lebanon if the plane and holy warriors (hijackers) aboard are subjected to any military foolhardiness," the statement said.

In Cyprus, the Arab hijackers, who have killed one passenger since seizing the plane Tuesday, threatened to kill their captives, but a noon deadline passed without any additional slayings.

One minute before a second deadline expired four hours later, the engineer, relaying the hijackers' messages to Larnaca Airport control tower, said, "They've already started to hurt one of the passengers."

He gave no details.

Later, the hijackers offered to free 20 of the passengers in return for fuel, but that was rejected at Kuwait's insistence.

Negotiators talked with the hijackers for 20 minutes late Monday and Cypriot government spokesman Akis Fantis said, "There was an important contact right now, and by tomorrow morning we shall know the result that we would hope to be what we wish to have."

"It's the same offer always, the release of the hostages for fuel," he said. "There is no change in the offer. We want the hostages to be released, then we refuel. But there is a new element, not changing the offer, but maybe changing their attitudes. The element is good and gives a certain hope and that's all."

Fantis did not elaborate and when asked about the mood of the hijackers he said, "They wished us a good night." He then was asked about the possibility of police action and he replied, "No comment."

In a morning statement, one of the hijackers told the control tower, "'We hereby re-announce our refueling request due to our intention to (go to) Kuwait, the concerned country. And if Kuwait refuses us, a crash landing will take place on the ... prince's palace."

Afghan guerrillas shoot down Soviet-built plane, killing 29

By The Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Afghan guerrillas shot down a Soviet-built passenger plane near the Soviet border Sunday, and all 29 people aboard were killed, Afghanistan government radio reported.

Radio Kabul, monitored in Islamabad, said the Antonov-26 passenger plane was flying between Maimaneh, in Afghanistan's northwestern Faryab province, and Mazar Sharif, in the Balkh province. The cities are about 145 miles apart.

The report said the dead included two children and that the plane was shot down at 3:10 a.m. The plane carried 23 passengers and six crew members, according to the report.

It did not say whether the plane was a Soviet transport or a civilian airliner of the domestic Bakhtar airline. Both fly the Antonov-26.

The Afghan airline also has been known to carry commercial passengers in planes with military markings.

The reported downing came three days after the United Nations announced an agreement to end the war between Moslem guerrillas and Afghanistan's Soviet-backed government and clear the way for the removal of Soviet troops.

Radio Kabul, quoting Afghanistan's official Bakhtar News Agency, said the guerrillas attacked with anti-aircraft rockets.

"Once more, extremist opposition elements carried out a terrorist action," the radio said. "As a result of this savage action by extremist elements, 23 passengers and six crew were martyred."

There was no immediate comment from the guerrillas on the radio report.

Afghan President Najib expressed sorrow and sympathy to the families of "those who have been sacrificed to this criminal action," the report added.

The Afghan guerrillas have said they will continue to fight Najib's government, despite the reported peace settlement, until it is deposed. The civil war began 10 years ago when a communist coup brought to power a government friendly to the Soviet Union.

On Sept. 13, 1987, Afghan guerrillas shot down an Antonov-26 near the northern city of Kunduz. Reports said 14 to 17 people were killed.

Legislature adjourns; major issues unresolved

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — When Kansas legislators closed shop on the regular 90-day session Saturday night, they walked away without resolving the two biggest issues they faced. That inaction likely ensures a long and contentious wrap-up session in two weeks.

How much of an income tax windfall to return to taxpayers by revising state tax laws and how ambitious a prison expansion program to embark upon are the two overriding questions lawmakers must address before shutting down the 1988 session for good.

Neither of those issues came close to being settled Saturday as the House spent three hours in parliamentary impasse discussing whether to exempt new farm machinery from the state sales tax, then didn't have time to address the prison issue adequately.

The Senate, which seemed poised to make some final decisions on tax and prison bills, watched the House fritter its valuable debate time away and finally gave up and went home.

Left undone were major decisions on:

- How large a prison expansion program to launch in order to meet a federal court order to reduce inmate population at Kansas State Penitentiary by 400 by September, as well as ensure that the glut of prisoners doesn't recur in a year or two.
- How much of the $135 million or more income tax windfall the state is reaping because of federal tax changes should go back to the taxpayers who paid it, and in what form of tax relief.
- How much of the Kansas Board of Regents' Margin of Excellence program should be funded to upgrade university programs and faculty pay.

The MOE program will be debated in conference committees during the next few weeks, as committee members attempt to reach an agreement between recommendations made by both the House and Senate. The House amended the bill to include $1.7 million to fund non-teaching salaries. The Senate's addition of $4.5 million for targeted investment programs leaves a gap of $2.8 million. The committee's debate is a "process of compromise," said Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City and conference committee member.

'Level-headed' student disappears

No foul play suspected by police in departure

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

A K-State student described by a friend as "level-headed" has mysteriously disappeared, and those who know him have been left wondering why.

The student, Mark Carlson, freshman in arts and sciences undecided, hasn't been seen since last Tuesday, said Matt Hampton, junior in business management and Carlson's Haymaker Hall roommate.

"I've checked about every place to check and I don't have any idea where he's gone," Hampton said Sunday afternoon. "(Tuesday) was the last time he was seen."

Although he hasn't been seen since Tuesday, Hampton said a statement from Carlson's bank in Wichita indicated that he withdrew the balance of his checking account Wednesday. Hampton said he was unsure how much money Carlson apparently received.

Carlson's father, Gene Carlson of Wichita, confirmed Sunday night that Mark had withdrawn the remainder of his checking account Wednesday. However, he too was unsure how much money was in it.

The senior Carlson, who said this is his son's first year at K-State, said he believes Mark left of his own free will.

"There's no reason for us to believe otherwise at this point," he said, adding that he and his wife had "checked out all the possibilities" of their son's whereabouts.

Hampton agreed with Carlson's father that Carlson probably left on his own since some personal items — including his clothes and golf clubs — are gone.

"It looks pretty obvious that he just left," Hampton said. "He did not usually do stupid stuff. I think he knew what he was doing when he left.

"He's a very level-headed person."

Hampton, who said he has known the 19-year-old Carlson since the two started working together at a Pizza Hut restaurant in Wichita about three years ago, said his roommate's disappearance came as a complete surprise.

"He did not give any indication at all (that he was leaving)," Hampton said. "Nothing in his behavior changed."

However, Hampton said Carlson had been frustrated with classes and that he may have left for that reason.

"I know he's very tired of school," he said, further speculat-

Ammunition dump explodes in Pakistan

By The Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — A huge ammunition dump exploded Sunday, sending flames 500 feet into the air and grenades and anti-aircraft missiles screaming in all directions. Officials said more than 60 people were killed and almost 800 wounded.

The Pakistani capital looked like a city at war after the exploding dump showered it and adjacent Rawalpindi with weapons of all shapes and sizes.

"It's the worst disaster we've ever had in Islamabad," said an emergency room doctor at the National Medical Institute as he directed ambulances with a bullhorn.

Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo ordered a high-level investigation into the blast, which officials said was apparently caused by a fire.

Casualty counts were still unofficial Sunday night in the twin cities, which have a combined population of more than 4.5 million.

"Our hearts are broken and our eyes are welled up," said President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq in a statement from Kuwait, where he was to attend an Islamic summit.

He announced he would return immediately to Islamabad.

The initial explosion occurred at 9:55 a.m. shortly after the start of the Moslem work week.

Within minutes, hundreds of grenades and missiles took off, some landing and exploding more than six miles away.

5 test-tube babies born in 1 day

LONDON — Five test-tube babies, including two pairs of twins, were born on the same day at a city hospital, its spokeswoman said.

Three women gave birth to the children — four boys and a girl — Friday at Humana Wellington Hospital, the spokeswoman said Saturday. The hospital representative, who spoke on condition of anonymity, also withheld the mothers' identities.

Test-tube babies develop from a woman's egg fertilized in a glass dish and then placed in her womb.

Parody angers Communists

BERLIN — The East German Communist Party is not laughing about a parody of its official paper that was smuggled in from West Germany and reported plans to turn police archives into a public library.

In a commentary Saturday, Neues Deutschland, the target of the parody, accused a Hamburg magazine of "gross intrusion" in the country's internal affairs.

Tempo magazine late last week admitted that it had printed 6,000 copies of the parody edition and smuggled them into East Germany.

South Africa riot injures 25

DURBAN, South Africa — Rioters at a music festival Sunday stomped on a pregnant woman and shot a 12-year-old boy in the thigh in a melee that left 25 people injured, authorities said.

Police said they fired shots in an effort to quell the rioters at Durban's Kings Park rugby stadium. Their gunfire hit no one, but some people suffered wounds from low-velocity bullets, possibly from homemade guns, police said.

FBI marksman kills fugitive

SPERRYVILLE, Va. — An FBI marksman ended a 19-hour siege Sunday by killing a Connecticut fugitive who had been lured out of a farmhouse where he was holding his 3-year-old son and the child's mother, authorities said.

A single shot felled Charles A. Leaf II, 30, as he ran from the house to a nearby FBI helicopter, said agent Terry T. O'Connor. He was holding the woman, Cheryl Hart, 27, and their 3-year-old son, Charles Leaf III, at gunpoint, O'Connor said.

Leaf was accused of kidnapping the two April 2 from their Trumbull, Conn., home.

Hart and the boy were shaken but uninjured in the shooting, which occurred shortly after 3 p.m., O'Connor said. Leaf was pronounced dead on arrival at the University of Virginia Medical Center.

Trumbull police Capt. Frederick Nacovitch described Leaf as a construction worker who moved from place to place and had a history of domestic violence involving Hart.

Authorities here began looking for Leaf after finding his 1973 Chevrolet April 3 in a remote area of Rappahannock County, about 50 miles west of Washington, D.C.

1,000 arrested in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES — More than 1,000 people were arrested in a weekend police blitz against drug dealers and street gangs responsible for waves of violence that have been claiming hundreds of lives a year in the City of Angels.

A 1,000-officer task force flooded streets in gang areas Friday night, and Police Chief Daryl Gates ordered the officers out again Saturday night.

Between Saturday evening and 1:30 a.m. Sunday, police reported 481 arrests, almost half of them on the gang-infested southside. About 190 of the arrestees were suspected gang members, Officer Joe Mariani said.

Task force officers made 592 arrests Friday night and Saturday morning during round one of the unprecedented crackdown on gangs that have terrorized neighborhoods in the nation's second largest city.

Jury finds Ferraro's son guilty

RUTLAND, Vt. — Former vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro says she blames herself in part for her son's cocaine conviction, and says the family will appeal the verdict to the Vermont Supreme Court.

"We still believe he was set up," said Ferraro of her 24-year-old son, John Zaccaro Jr.

A Vermont District Court jury deliberated for slightly more than two hours Saturday before finding Zaccaro guilty of selling one-quarter gram of cocaine to an undercover police officer while he was a senior at Middlebury College two years ago.

No sentencing date was set, and an appeal could take two years. The felony conviction carries a maximum sentence of five years in jail and a $10,000 fine.

Junction City senator to retire

TOPEKA — State Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City, a 10-year veteran of the Legislature, announced Sunday he will not seek re-election this year.

Werts, chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and vice chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, first was elected to the Senate in 1978 when incumbent Donn Everett of Manhattan resigned in mid-term.

"Politically, I have never had the desire to be more than a civilian legislator," Werts said in a statement. "From the outset, it was my intention to serve not more than two or three four-year terms. Since by the time my current term is completed I will have served 10 years, this would seem to be an appropriate time to retire."

Homemaker's chance pays off

Older students to receive scholarships today

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

In the fall of 1981, Clara Myers decided to take a chance. She enrolled at K-State.

"It was very frightening because for 20-some years I was a homemaker and did not participate in activities outside the home, except for some social activities dealing with children," said Myers, senior in fine arts and mother of two. "I decided, for some unknown reason, to take two classes in the fall of 1981.

"I waited until my last child started grade school. I wanted to make sure she was doing fine in grade school before I started college."

Myers will be one of three students honored at the FENIX Scholarship Recognition Program at 4 p.m. today in Union 212, which is for those students who are 25 years old or older and have a 3.0 or better fall-semester grade point average and a cumulative GPA of a B or better.

Myers was one of 91 applicants for the three scholarships which are donated by Ruth Hoeflin, FENIX director. The other scholarship recipients, who will also be honored are Debra Gustafson, junior in elementary education, and Kimberlee Kluesner, junior in social work and women's studies.

The three will each receive a $250 scholarship for the 1988-89 school year. This is the third year the scholarships have been awarded.

"I try to recognize the older students and give them all the help I can," Hoeflin said.

Statistics show that 39 percent, or 771 of 1,800 adult students at K-State, have earned a GPA of B or better.

Hoeflin said a reason for the higher GPA of older students could be because of their drive for success.

"They have high motivation," she said. "It is their own money, and many have family responsibilities, but they have good concentration, and many are going to do good no matter what.

"Many people who come back are single parents, divorced parents, or people who cannot advance in their job until they get a college degree," she added. "A college degree today is like a high school degree (was) 30 years ago."

At the FENIX Scholarship Recognition reception, the students will be addressed by Virginia Moxley, associate dean of human ecology.

"I decided she would be a good role model for the students because she has three degrees, two children and commutes from Council Grove," Hoeflin said. "She is the example of a woman who kept the perseverance to get the second degree and then move up to the third degree."

For Myers, what she began seven years ago is about to pay off. She will graduate in December 1988.

Myers, who works at Lee School as a playground supervisor, said she has been enrolled as a part-time student every semester except for one, when she took 12 hours.

"I'm hoping that the statement of my life is that it doesn't matter what your age is — there is still value in your life. In searching for this value, you should work on your talent and go for it," Myers said.

"Our talents are our lights, and they shouldn't be hidden under a bushel basket," she said.

Debaters finish fifth nationwide

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's debate team has ended its season with a fifth-place national ranking.

The rankings, which are put out monthly by the Cross-Examination Debate Association, are dependent on the records of each debate team, said coach Ed Schiappa, instructor of speech. He said that during the season, which began in mid-September, K-State has placed as high as second but never lower than 10th.

Schiappa said this year's squad is one of K-State's largest in quantity and quality, and he attributes its success to three factors.

"First of all, we had a very good assistant coaching staff. Second of all, a year ago (President Jon Wefald) gave us our first substantial scholarship help, and the third reason is that this is the first year that we have had good budget support," Schiappa said.

This year's topic at the national tournament Easter weekend in Colorado Springs, Colo., was: "The American Judicial System has Overemphasized Freedom of the Press." It was the third year for the tournament and the third year that K-State has sent a team.

The four-day tournament, which attracted 220 teams, was at the Air Force Academy. K-State sent four teams, all of which placed in the top half of the tournament.

"Three of our teams were in the top third, and one of our teams made it to the top 15 percent of the tournament," Schiappa said.

Early enrollment begins today

By The Collegian Staff

Enrollment for summer and fall classes begins today and continues through Friday.

Enrollment for transfer students will be April 25 and 26.

Students enrolling for summer courses may also enroll for the fall semester at the same time, said Don Foster, University registrar.

"This is the second year we have done this, and it seems to work quite well. It makes more space in classes and increases the availability of advisers," Foster said.

Foster recommended that all students seek advisement before enrolling to ensure that the chosen courses meet their degree requirements.

"If an instructor is unavailable, some colleges have peer advisers to assist in enrollment," Foster said.

Order of enrollment is determined by the number of hours completed, he said.

Students may pick up enrollment forms from their advisers or at the dean's office of their college.

Bennett's education views need adjustment

Since he was appointed education secretary, William J. Bennett has entertained the U.S. taxpayer with some extraordinary ideas concerning public education in the United States. What he proposed last week to a convention of the National Catholic Education Association is about as good as it gets — and is an insult to teachers in public education around the country.

From the man who wanted to bring prayer to public schools, provide funding for racist ones, and cut funding to public education, we are now introduced to the parochial alternative for educating the problem students in America's public school system.

"Seek out the poor, the disadvantaged, the disruptive, the dropout, and take them in, educate them, and then ask society for fair recompense for your efforts. ... Show educators around this country what works," Bennett told the Catholic educators. He wants the parochial schools to enroll these children and then ask for compensation from the public school districts for educating them.

While parochial schools do receive a small amount of government funding — mainly as compensation for services they provide the community — they are not and should not be subsidized for educating problem students from public schools.

If those students' parents want to send them to private or parochial school then that is their choice, but public money should not pay for their education. With the current interpretation of separation of church and state, that is the way funding should remain.

Also, Bennett is the person who is charged with looking after the well-being of the U.S. public school system. Why didn't he propose something that would help the public schools, instead of implying that those teachers are incapable of teaching problem students?

Bennett has slashed funding and programs for public education under the banner of Reagan's deficit reduction, until public school teachers have exhausted their means of educating.

It is time Bennett and the Reagan administration stop finding ways to undercut public education in this country and start finding ways to improve it. Then they might find they won't need to spend more money, in the wrong places, to fix a problem that they should have corrected a long time ago.

Missile-carrying trains would jeopardize safety

In days gone by, the circus traveled between performances via the railroads. However, if the Air Force gets its way, something very different may be coming to town on the railroads.

The Air Force plan calls for 50 MX missiles to be deployed on 25 special trains that would circulate around the Midwest and the western United States on commercial railroad lines.

Ordinarily, the trains — which would be disguised as regular freight trains — would be parked at military installations. In a time of international crisis, however, the trains would travel the regular lines — in effect, hiding among the other trains.

Called the "rail-garrison" basing system, the plan has received opposition from the public and members of Congress.

The Air Force plan totally disregards environmental issues, concerns of the public and even some military questions. It is not uncommon for accidents and derailments to occur on the U.S. railway system.

In addition, the missiles would not always be in unpopulated areas since the rail system passes through most major cities. And there would inevitably be routine training missions so that the trains would be on the tracks even during peaceful times.

Finally, questions have been raised about the security of the system since it would depend on civilian railroad employees who direct the trains.

It is clear that there are serious problems with the "rail-garrison" system from both a public and military point of view. There have been accidents with missiles sitting in fortified concrete silos, so one can only imagine what will happen if missiles are roaming the American railway system.

Life much more difficult for women

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

In my high school everyone had to take a class called Marriage, and in this class they showed a film of a live human birth.

I do not know why they showed the film. Maybe they wanted to discourage marriage. The guys laughed at the film because they will never have to give birth. The girls, however, turned white.

Childbirth is the first and biggest of the many reasons I am glad I am not a female. The second is rape.

Reasons No. 3 through No. 9 all occur monthly and involve what supposedly discreet TV ads call "feminine hygiene." I am male and do not know details — and so will skip them.

The 10th reason involves etiquette. Men do not have to do anything to be polite. I have opened doors before; it is not hard. The same goes for pulling out chairs and helping with coats.

Man's great coup was the barbecue. My mom cooks supper all week. But on Sundays my dad waltzes in and slaps a slab of meat on the grill. My mom still cooks all the other Sunday dishes.

Reason No. 11 is jobs. Women raise themselves by taking traditionally male jobs, but men lower themselves by taking traditionally female jobs. Women can aim to be doctors, principals or executives, but men do not aim to be nurses, secretaries, or teachers in elementary schools.

Marie Laurie in "How to be a Good Secretary" addresses her readers as "girls" and the reader's boss as "him." If the boss blames the secretary for his own mistake, Marie says the female should not protest but say, "I'm sorry, Mr. Brown, that I made that error. I probably did not hear you correctly."

The 12th reason is clothes. Women have to put more effort into dressing up. We can just pull on a nice shirt and pants. We do not have to mess with shoes and hats and hose and purses and others things males like me do not know about.

Several years ago, Madeline Strony and Irene Place wrote "The Road to Secretarial Success." Their outdated ideas are still around. They claim that women must be "smartly dressed and well-groomed at all times." They make no such demands on the male bosses.

Madeline and Irene ask their readers "What would YOU do?" if your boss asked you to attend a meeting but you had come to work without a hat? Would you "(A) Go without one?; (B) Make excuses that you are not suitably dressed and suggest someone else take your place?; or (C) Borrow a suitable hat?"

Madeline and Irene would borrow a hat, but most of us would ask, "Who cares about hats?"

The hats are not the bad part — it's the belief that women need "What would YOU do?" exercises. Do women really need to be told that "it is difficult to use the telephone efficiently when wearing large earrings?"

The hat example, however, shows that attitudes can be changed. Women used to have to wear hats in church so that their hair did not distract men from their prayers.

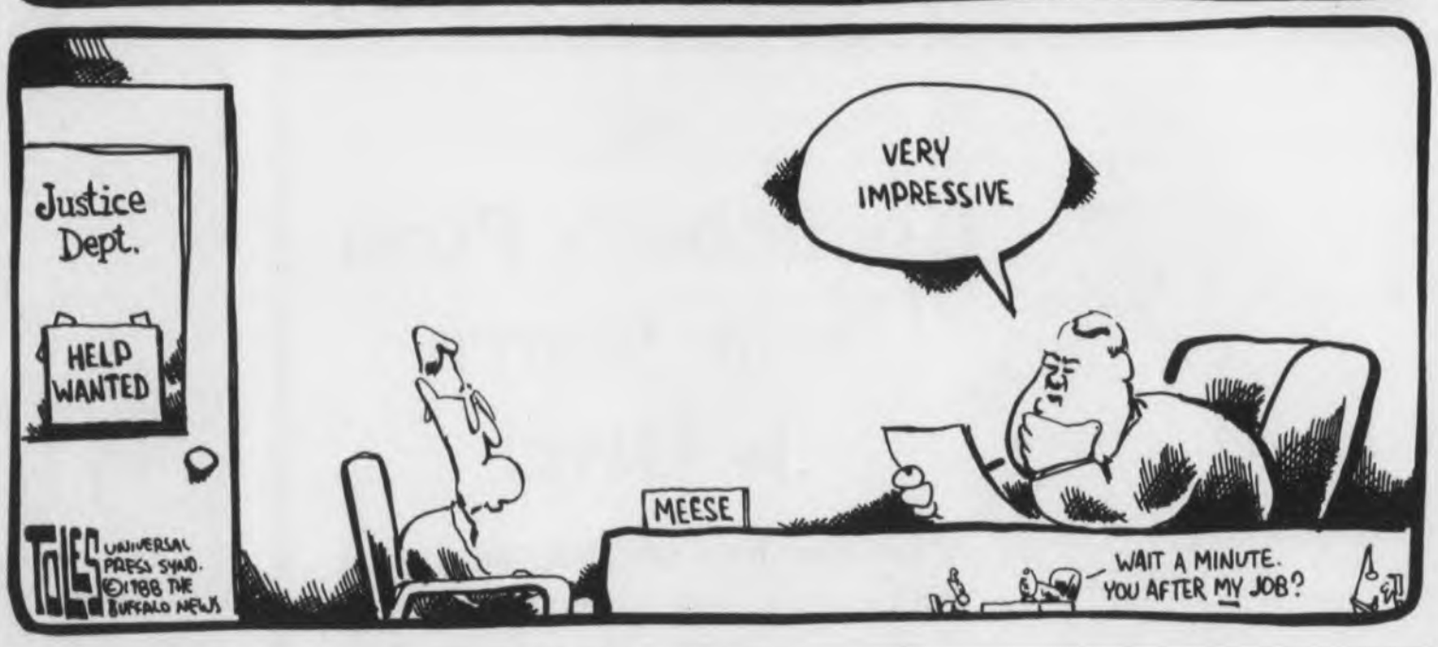
The assumption that some female quality other than holiness would distract men brings us to reason 13. Women are expected to be good-looking.

"Listen," a friend said to me once. "For a girl, the most important thing in the world is looks. Period. There are ugly male executives, ugly presidents and exceptionally ugly male rock stars, but tell me of one ugly female in any of these positions. There are none."

So women, who are not expected to be smart, must make up for it with makeup. Marie tells us, "The truth is, with the aid of cosmetics we are today able to make ourselves look attractive."

This is wrong. I know girls who look better without makeup. I often want to give a girl plastered with makeup a note asking her to use less.

Also, the demand for good looks is a double standard. Madeline and Irene tell their readers that "your best friend in the morning can be a full-length mirror," only to turn around and say there is "no objection to your being pretty — if you can't help it."



"Those few people who are exceptionally good-looking have a tendency to lack charm and personality," Marie says. "Because they know they are beautiful, they sometimes become vain and self-centered."

I agree in most cases. If all a girl needs is looks and she has them, why bother with being naive?

Females even make fun of themselves. I have seen a girl insult a boy by calling him "girl." This is like saying, "You are so bad that you are like me."

A friend of mine did not know he was a boy until he was 5. He did not know if he was a boy or a girl or a tree or what. His mom finally told him. "I was so happy," he said. I wonder how he felt when his mom got around to telling him he was a person and not an animal.

Poor support

Editor,

Our Wildcat baseball squad has suffered a sorry attendance at its home games, which directly reflects the team's lack of promotion. It has an inadequate budget that is heavily overshadowed by the bigger revenue sports, basketball and football.

Thus far, the 'Cats have compiled a 20-10 record with little help. An athletic fee would complement our baseball program, increase attendance and boost our team's morale. I understand the issue of an athletic fee was disapproved by students last year by a close vote. The issue needs to be dealt with again. Let's show some well-deserved support for our Wildcat sluggers.

Parking problem

Editor,

The parking problem has been haunting our campus for years. So why make it worse by letting faculty who have money buy a reserved stall as a guaranteed spot to park when they come to campus? Faculty already have more spaces per permit than students do.

There were 5,182 student permits issues this year, and 3,048 faculty/staff permits issued. According to the 1987 parking- lot count, students were only allotted 545 spaces, faculty/staff 1,775 spaces, and both together another 2,049 spaces.

This means that for students there are approximately three spaces for every 10 permits sold, or a 30 percent chance of getting a parking space. And for faculty, there are nine spaces for every 10 permits sold, or a 90 percent chance of getting a parking space. Students need to leave campus to work and various other things just like faculty, but we aren't and won't be guaranteed spots when we come back.

We all buy a permit for parking and most students and faculty can't afford another $110 a year for a "parking guarantee." Money doesn't buy everything, and it definitely shouldn't buy parking spaces.

Elizabeth Cowan-Rundus
sophomore in business

Bare essentials

Editor,

I don't want to say we should be exactly like the University of Nebraska, but I think it has the right idea in requiring all graduate teaching assistants to take an orientation workshop on teaching strategies before they are allowed to teach.

When asked if he thought it was feasible to require some instruction in teaching methods, instructional media, etc., before anyone is allowed to teach at K-State, President Jon Wefald said: "I suppose it is feasible, but far more difficult to implement than you may imagine. You must remember KSU has a heavy research and development mission. I realize students do not fully understand this responsibility, but without a top performance by faculty in research, we simply cannot be a university."

What Wefald says is true, but I'd venture to say that without students, the University would also perish.

Ahearn becomes site of circus

Shriners sponsor event to help crippled children

Fireworks exploded into multi-colored displays above the crowd Friday night as Ahearn Field House yielded its floor to the Shrine Circus. Trapeze artists, elephants and tigers replaced K-State basketball teams while clowns, instead of referees, were the brunt of jokes and laughter.

Shriner Kenneth Rhea said bringing the circus to Manhattan is important to the Shriners.

"We feel the people in Manhattan deserve a good show," Rhea said. "And this is a good, clean circus."

The George Carden Circus, hired by Isis Temple Shriners, performed for a crowd of 4,800, circus chairman Max McClintock said.

The crowd looked pleased as wide-eyed children watched tigers jump through rings of fire. Laura Kilpatrick, tiger trainer, said working with tigers is a constant challenge.

"It's crazy out here. (Performing) really gets my heart pumping," she said.

Kilpatrick has been training tigers for three years, and said preparing tigers for the ring is a long process.

"It takes months of training and day to day care with the cats," she said.

Tigers may scare some people, but Kilpatrick said their personality makes up for it. "(Tigers) have character. They're loving, yet dangerous," she said. But there is one drawback.

"The worst part is cleaning up," Kilpatrick said.

The tigers didn't completely steal the show. Tight rope walkers turned flips near the rafters of Ahearn putting audience members on the edge of their seats.

"Cotton candy! Popcorn! Peanuts!" shouted venders. But the temptation of food wasn't enough to keep parents or their children away from the clowns.

"I just love kids," said Beau-Bow the clown, played by Leonard Parks, a Shriner from Ellsworth.

Clowns appear at shows by their own discretion, Parks said. The circus doesn't pay the clowns, but their travel expenses are defrayed by concession stand profits.

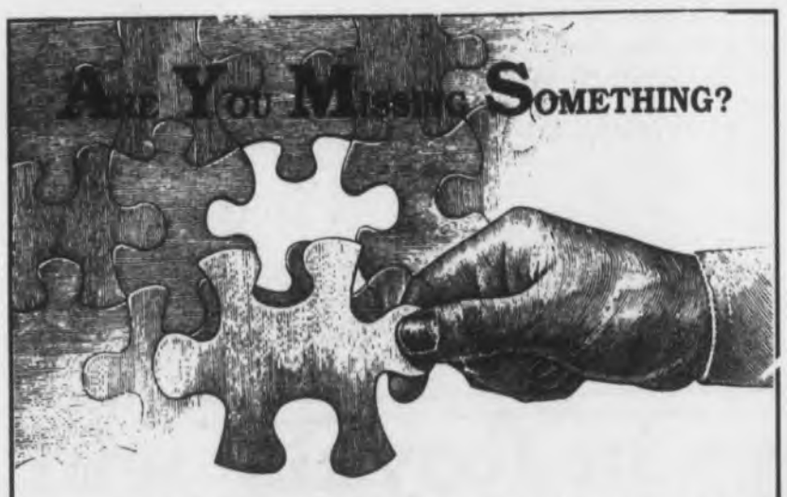
The money from concessions is divided equally by the number of Shrine clowns present, he said.

Twelve-year-old Janelle Logerstron, from Marysville, said she hasn't outgrown three-ring entertainment.

"I like jugglers the best and the cotton candy," she said.

The Shrine Circus was brought to Manhattan by the Isis Temple Shriners and the K-State Block and Bridle Club. Proceeds go to Block and Bridle and the local Shriners Crippled Childrens' Fund.

Block and Bridle takes its cut from the concession stands, said Miles McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry and co-adviser of the club. The Shriners get a percentage of ticket sales said circus chairman McClintock.



The Shriners use the money to transport crippled children in the Isis Temple region to and from various hospitals, said Manhattan Shriner Dale Thierolf.

Traveling expenses for the families of crippled children are also covered by the fund, he said, adding that there is one restriction — the injury or illness must occur before age 18 for the child to be eligible.

The Isis Temple region extends east from the Colorado border to Wamego. The national budget for 1987 Childrens' Fund was $187 million, Thierolf said.

Fite Nite draws more entrants, fans

By The Collegian Staff

It's not for a national title, but the Ninth Annual Sigma Phi Epsilon Golden Gloves Fite Nite offers fun for K-State students and money for the American Heart Association.

Fite Nite, which began Sunday and continues at 7 p.m. today and Tuesday in Weber Arena, is an annual event sponsored by Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

The event is a boxing contest for K-State men at all weight levels, said Danny Green, senior in marketing and Fite Nite chairman.

Most of the contestants have had little or no boxing experience before. The reasons for fighting vary among each of them. Some are in the ring out of curiosity while others have nothing else on their minds but winning.

"I guess it is kind of a challenge or something," said freshman Mike Boos, a boxer from Phi Gamma Delta. "I've never had any experience before and I thought it was kind of interesting so I went ahead and decided to do it. If I win my first fight I'll be satisfied. I'm just hoping to last out there.

"This is the first time I've ever seen (a Sig Ep Fite Nite), but I think it has been going really well. They've had a pretty good crowd all throughout the night," he said.

In previous years, all the contestants were from fraternities. However, men from residence halls are allowed to participate this year.

"We are opening it up to the dorms for the first time," Green said. "We have a limited number of guys from residence halls participating this year. We have wanted to get them involved in the past, but there has never been room."

"It seems like every year the fighters get better prepared. I don't know if the fighters know they are going to be in for a good fight no matter who it they meet or what, but every year the fighters get better."

—Danny Green

With the addition of boxers from residence halls and a change in the number of fighters in each weight class, the Sig Ep Fite Nite has more than 90 participants this year.

"We used to have only a certain number of fighters in each weight class, so we knew there would only be 64 fighters," Green said. "It was first come, first serve, but that turned out to be a big problem with fighters coming up to us and saying they wanted to fight but there wasn't room for them. To get away from that we opened it up and we've ended up with 20 more fighters than we've ever had."

Even though there are more fighters involved with the competition this year, the quality of the fights continues to improve year after year, he said.

"It seems like every year the fighters get better prepared," Green said. "I don't know if the fighters know they are going to be in for a good fight no matter who it is they meet or what, but every year the fighters get better."

The number of boxers competing isn't the only change that has taken place with Fite Nite this year.

In previous years the event has been held at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar, which limited the number of people that were able to see the fights each night. It was decided to move the event to Weber Hall to solve the problem of a shortage of seating available for spectators and also allow more boxers to participate in the three-day event.

"We've wanted to be able to have more people involved, but space was always limited and we've had problems with not having enough seating available where we used to have it," Green said.

"This year we are trying to make some changes. It seemed like it has pretty much been the same kind of event for three or four years in a row. So this year we tried something new — tried to make it bigger and more of an extravaganza type of deal and we got Weber Hall," he added.

Green and the other tournament directors decided to promote the event more in the local media this year in hopes of drawing a bigger crowd. The extra exposure appears to have had more of an impact than they expected, though.

"The turnout has been outrageous tonight," Green said Sunday night. "We've sold out of tickets at the door. I bet we are nearing 600 people tonight, so it's turned out really great in that regard. We didn't have any idea what would happen with the crowd after moving it to Weber."

The fights are officiated by Golden Gloves referees. Each fight consists of three 1½ -minute rounds with a one-minute rest period between rounds.

The event also offers a Miss Knock-Out contest for sorority members.

The delegates' pictures and a jar for donations are placed in the Union during the event. The delegate who raises the most donations will be declared the winner Tuesday night.

"(The Miss Knock-Out contest) gives us the chance to get everyone involved — something we want to do," Green said.

Last year, $3,000 was donated to the American Heart Association.

"This year I am hoping for a $4,000 donation, but we'll have to wait and see," Green said.

Baseball squad ends frustration

By David Svoboda
Sports Writer

Seven years of frustration are over.

For the K-State baseball team, a 22-game losing streak against the University of Oklahoma that began in 1981 ended Sunday afternoon when the Wildcats handed the visiting Sooners a 3-2 defeat in the first game of a double-header at Frank Myers Field.

The win was also K-State's first at home against the Sooners since 1980.

Oklahoma rebounded to win the second contest 9-5, but it was K-State's performance in the opener that may have been the shot in the arm the Wildcats needed after dropping their first five Big Eight Conference contests.

The series opened Friday night with Oklahoma taking an 11-9 win. The Sooners rallied from deficits of 7-1 and 9-4 before storming back for the victory. That's what made Sunday's first game — played after rain and wet grounds had washed out Saturday's scheduled double-header — all the more significant.

Momentum was firmly on the side of the Sooners entering the contest. The visitors had rallied from a seemingly insurmountable deficit in the series opener, and K-State was obviously reeling following what Coach Mike Clark termed "one of our toughest losses of the year."

Through the first six innings of the opener, K-State appeared to be still suffering the effects of its tough loss Friday, as Oklahoma starting pitcher Jim Huslig held the Wildcats to just three hits.

The Sooners, meanwhile, had put single tallies on the board in the first and fifth innings against K-State starter and eventual winner Jeff Peterson (5-1).

As dominant as Huslig was in striking out nine and allowing just three walks, the Wildcats still had one shot left against the Prairie Village native and made the most of it.

With the Sooners up 2-0 starting the bottom of the seventh, second baseman Sean Collins opened the inning for K-State with a double to left center. After center fielder Kent Gleason struck out, Collins scored when first baseman Mike Rosenboom singled to left, cutting the gap to 2-1.

Oklahoma then brought right-hander Chris Burgin out of the bullpen, and he was greeted rudely by third baseman Jim Donohue's double to right on an 0-2 pitch that moved pinch runner Kris Meis to third.

After an intentional walk to designated hitter David Chadd loaded the bases and put a potential inning-ending double play in order, Burgin walked shortstop Scott Spangenberg to force in Meis with the tying run.

With catcher Jeff Hulse at the plate and the score now tied, Burgin short-hopped a delivery in front of the plate and Donohue scored on the wild pitch to give K-State the 3-2 win.

Peterson, who scattered four hits and walked only two in going the distance for K-State, now had gone from a probable tough-luck loser to a winner in a matter of minutes, and Clark was happy for his ace right-hander.

"Pete (Peterson's nickname) threw a real nice ballgame and he kept us in there until our offense finally came through," Clark said. "I was happy to see his strong effort rewarded with a win."

Clark said Donohue's double off Burgin, 2-2, was the key blow in the seventh inning rally, especially since Burgin had Donohue behind in the count.

"Jim battled him really well, and when you get behind 0-2 and can still deliver, it says something for you," Clark said.

Clark was less than happy about what the second game of the twinbill said about his club, as the pitching woes that spelled defeat Friday night — when K-State pitchers surrendered 13 walks and hit two batters — reared their ugly heads once again.

Oklahoma showed no adverse effects of the loss in the opener, scoring two runs in the first inning and three in the second to take a 5-3 lead after two innings of the nightcap.

K-State, however, tied the game at five with two runs in the third, and appeared to be in position to gain a double-header sweep.

The wheels came off the cart in the fourth inning, however, as Oklahoma broke the game open with a three-run inning.

The Sooners took advantage of an error by Donohue and two walks in scoring their three runs. The key blow for Oklahoma was Wade Inman's two-run single.

The Sooners added a single run in the seventh for the final 9-5 margin. Kevin King, 2-2, picked up the win for Oklahoma, working 3⅓ innings of shutout relief while striking out four and walking only two.

Reliever Jim McClellan, 2-1, took the loss for K-State.

Clark said his team's miscues both offensively and defensively and the seven walks surrendered by K-State pitchers were just too much to overcome in Sunday's second game.

"Against good clubs like we have in the Big Eight, you can't do stuff like that and expect to win," Clark said.

The split left Oklahoma at 25-10 overall and 2-1 in Big Eight play. K-State moved to 21-12 and 1-6. The final game of the four-game series is scheduled for 1 p.m. today at Frank Myers Field.

K-State crew wins medals in St. Louis

By Chase Clark

After a dismal performance in the season opener three weeks ago, K-State's crew turned things around Saturday and captured three medals at the Washington University Crew Classic in St. Louis, Mo.

The K-State men's varsity eight crew easily defeated defending regatta champion, Washington, by more than three boat lengths. K-State's time of 4:41.4 in the 1500-meter event broke the previous regatta record by six-tenths of a second and was nearly 11 seconds better than the second-place boat.

"Our men's varsity-eight, while bearing no resemblance to 'Jaws' yet, certainly has come back a long ways," K-State coach Don Rose said.

The men's varsity eight had been having problems with its timing before the race. To try and correct the problem, Rose switched the seating order of two of the rowers.

The Manhattan High School women's varsity eight placed third in the collegiate women's freshman eight. The MHS women finished less than 23 seconds out of first place, with a time of 5:58.1, behind Washington's "A" (5:36.9) and Wichita State's (5:44.2) crews. The K-State women's freshman eight finished fifth in 6:22.9.

K-State's women's varsity eight came in third in its race with a 5:36.2.

The men's freshman eight finished sixth overall among the 11 crews after winning it's first heat.

Wilson, Seitzer keys in Royals' win

By The Associated Press

Willie Wilson and Kevin Seitzer each had three hits and Charlie Leibrandt scattered seven hits in eight innings Sunday, leading the Kansas City Royals to an 8-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Seitzer, George Brett and Jim Eisenreich hit RBI doubles in the first inning to give the Royals a 3-0 lead against Doyle Alexander, 0-1.

Jamie Quirk ignited a four-run seventh against Alexander with a leadoff triple and scored on a single by Kurt Stillwell. Singles by Wilson and Seitzer made it 6-1 and a throwing error by left fielder Luis Salazar put runners at second and third.

Indians 6, Orioles 3

Jay Bell hit a two-run triple and continued home on a Baltimore error to cap a four-run fourth, and Carmen Castillo had three hits and two RBIs as the Cleveland Indians beat the Orioles 6-3 Sunday in Cleveland.

Baltimore, 0-5, matching its worst start since the 1955 Orioles went 0-6, has been outscored 36-5. The Indians, 5-1, are off to their best start since the 1966 team opened with 10 straight victories.

MLB Roundup

Dodgers 3, Braves 1

Orel Hershiser allowed five hits over 8 1-3 innings, taking a shutout into the ninth inning until Atlanta snapped his streak of 17 scoreless innings, but the Dodgers held on to beat the Braves 3-1 on Sunday in Atlanta.

Hershiser retired 10 batters in a row during one stretch. He shut out San Francisco 5-0 with a five-hitter last Tuesday night.

Yankees 7, Brewers 6

Former Royal Don Slaught went 4-for-4 Sunday, including a tie-breaking two-run single in the eighth inning, leading the New York Yankees to a comeback 7-6 victory Sunday over the Milwaukee Brewers and their first 5-0 start since 1933.

Six balks were called, setting an American League record and tying the major-league mark. Five were committed by Milwauke and two of them led to the run that tied the game 4-4 in the seventh inning plus the run that capped a three-run eighth and proved to be the game-winner.

Mets 4, Phillies 3

Mookie Wilson hit two home runs, including a two-run, seventh-inning blast that carried the New York Mets to a 4-3 victory over Philadelphia on Sunday, snapping the Phillies' three-game winning streak.

Dwight Gooden, 2-0, pitched the first six innings, allowing three runs and five hits. Gooden struck out three and walked five. Roger McDowell worked the next 2 1-3 innings before he was bailed out of a ninth-inning jam by Randy Myers, who earned his first save.

Cubs 10, Expos 7

Former Expo Vance Law singled home Manny Trillo to break a 10th-inning tie, and the Chicago Cubs scored three runs in the 10th inning to beat the Montreal Expos 10-7 Sunday.

Astros 12, Reds 3

Kevin Bass hit a grand slam and Glenn Davis drove in four runs with a sacrifice fly and a three-run homer Sunday to lead the Houston Astros to a 12-3 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Mike Scott, who pitched a seven-hitter, reached the 1,000-strikeout mark by fanning eight and improved his record to 2-0.

Twins 4, Blue Jays 2

Dan Gladden's RBI double and Greg Gagne's two-run single keyed a four-run fifth inning that gave the Minnesota Twins to a 4-2 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays on Sunday.

Frank Viola, 1-1, allowed seven hits in 7 2-3 innings.

Rangers 4, Red Sox 1

Paul Kilgus pitched a four-hitter over seven innings and the Texas Rangers exploited Boston mistakes in the fourth inning for a 4-1 victory over the Red Sox on Sunday.

Brown fools 'em all by remaining at KU

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

Larry fooled 'em again.

On Friday afternoon, before 300 curious onlookers in Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence, University of Kansas basketball coach Larry Brown announced he was staying at KU and spurning an offer to return to the University of California at Los Angeles as the school's head coach.

In doing so, Brown once again threw a curve ball to the media and fans that have followed his career over the past several years.

When he came to Kansas five years ago, Brown had the reputation of being a wanderer, a man that seemingly had a mission everywhere he went but never stayed around long enough to see it completed.

Through his years in Lawrence, rumors followed him every season. This year he was leaving to coach the New York Knicks, that year he was going to another school in the collegiate ranks.

Yet Brown never left Mount Oread, a testiment to his devotion to his team and his star performer — Danny Manning.

But last Monday, as has been documented all too well over the past week, Brown's team reached the pinnacle of achievement in college basketball: it won the NCAA national championship.

And Brown's superstar, Manning, had completed his eligibility and would be going on to the pro ranks.

When UCLA, a school that Brown had led to the Final Four in 1980, came calling, it seemed like a sure bet that the nomadic coach would be on the next plane to L.A. and would be the Bruin head coach quicker than you could say "John Wooden."

After all, he'd kept his promise to Manning by staying until the end of his career, and he'd taken KU to a national title. What more was left to accomplish in Lawrence?

When CBS television reported Friday morning that Brown had agreed verbally to coach at UCLA, those at Kansas had no reason to believe otherwise. And when the UCLA sports information department called for biographical information early Friday afternoon, the handwriting was firmly affixed to the wall.

Then Brown came back to Lawrence and that all changed.

As K-Staters learned in a similar situation two weeks ago, when a coach returns to the city and the campus he's called home for the past few seasons, strange things can happen.

Lon Kruger and Larry Brown, whether most K-State fans want to admit it or not, are really not all that different. Both have tremendous loyalty to their universities and players, and both are driven at times by emotion. It isn't visible emotion, but it is emotion nonetheless.

Brown had to be impressed by the 30,000 fans that turned out in Memorial Stadium in Lawrence upon his team's return home from Kansas City last Tuesday. He had to be impressed at how that crowd had chanted for him to stay at KU.

Friday afternoon they found out how important all their support had been.

In taking the advice of several friends and drawing on his own feelings, Brown came to the only decision he could — to stay at Kansas, a place that now feels like home to him.

Brown's a big-city boy, and his ties to places like New York and Los Angeles will always lead to speculation that he's just one step away from leaving Lawrence for greener and bigger pastures.

For now, however, he's staying put.

In making this decision, Brown has made Jayhawk fans everywhere extremely happy, and has given increased credibility to the Big Eight Conference as a basketball power on a national scale.

As was the case with Kruger, Brown's decision is one that leaves me feeling extremely happy that a good friend has decided to stay at home.

Larry fooled 'em again, and I'm sure glad he did.

Ron Stahl, Pat Hessini and Brian Zwahlen round a wet corner during heat one of the men's 1,500-meter run at the KSU/Pepsi Invitational track meet Saturday at R.V. Christian Track. Stahl, Hessini and Zwahlen took the top three places in the heat.

Tracksters say rain, rain go away

Inclement weather forces some field events indoors

It's getting to be monotonous. For the second time during the outdoor season, K-State's track teams not only had to go against stiff competition but also the weather.

"There was no way I was going to stop the meet. We had teams here from South Dakota, Drake and Oklahoma State."
—John Capriotti

Heavy rains and wind put a damper on the KSU/Pepsi Open Track Meet Saturday at R.V. Christian Track. Wildcats' coach John Capriotti had his team do some adjusting due to the weather.

"We weren't going to record good times," Capriotti said. "We were here to compete. Everybody got to compete in this. (The athletes) can't let outside circumstances affect them. In an NCAA meet, we'd compete.

"I was real happy the way the kids raced. You have to be positive. I wanted to see how they competed under these conditions. It would have been real easy to go out there and not do anything. There were some good things that happened," he added.

Due to the weather, the javelin and running events were held at the R.V. Christian Track while the shot put and high jump competitons were held in the Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

"There was no way I was going to stop the meet," Capriotti said after a coaches' meeting early Saturday morning. "We had teams here from South Dakota, Drake and Oklahoma State. We all decided what we wanted to do, then we picked our events."

Ron Stahl, Jeff Reynolds and Pat Allen took top honors for the K-State men's team. Stahl won the 1,500-meter run in 3:59.45. Reynolds won the 800-meter run in 1:56.85 and Allen captured the javelin with a throw of 210-3.

Brad Speers finished second in the high jump with a jump of 6-9½. Todd Eggers finished second in the 1,500-meter run in 4:05.41 and Doug Brown finished second in the javelin with a throw of 207-7.

In the women's division for K-State, Anne Stadler and Wendy Adkins were the lone winners. Stadler won the 1,500-meter run in 4:39.84. Adkins won the javelin with a throw of 117-3.

Becky Ives won a second-heat race in the 1,500-meter run in 4:51.38. Kim Richeson won the second heat of the 400-meter dash in 1:00.16. Kelly Abernathy placed second in the shot put with a 45-10 and Laura Ostmeyer was second in the 800-meter run in 2:15.33.

OSU blanks 'Cat tennis team

The Kansas State women's tennis team lost 9-0 to defending Big Eight Conference champion Oklahoma State Sunday in Stillwater, Okla.

K-State could not gain a set against the powerful Cowboys although Annika Emtell did battle to a 7-5, 6-3 loss at No. 2 singles for the 'Cats.

With the victory, Oklahoma State improved to 16-7 on the year and 4-0 in conference play. K-State's record is now 1-2 in the Big Eight and 6-6 overall. Next action for the Wildcats will be Monday when they continue their road swing in Oklahoma by taking on the Oklahoma Sooners at Norman.

Golfers snare Nebraska Cup

The K-State men's golf team successfully defended its Nebraska Cup title by winning the 21-team Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational played Friday at the Par 72, 6,400-yard Dodge Park Golf Course in Omaha, Neb.

The Wildcats claimed the invitational crown with an 18-hole team score of 311. That total bettered runner-up Central's score of 312.

When combined with Thursday's 309 score when K-State captured the Creighton Invitational, the 'Cats finished with a two-day total of 620 to give them their second straight Nebraska Cup crown. Emporia State, who Kansas State had defeated yesterday in a playoff for the Creighton championship, finished second to K-State in the race for the Nebraska Cup with a 36-hole total of 630.

Senior Chris Gomez carded an even par 72 to claim medalist honors for the Nebraska Wesleyan Invite. Gomez's 148 total from the two tournaments also gave him top honors in the Nebraska Cup individual standings.

Besides Gomez, other K-State individual scores included John Shields 77-79—156, Troy Keller 77-79—156, Todd Fowler 79-81—160 and Jeff Sedorcek 80-82—162.

Rangers' left fielder draws boos, pine time

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — Left fielder Pete Incaviglia of the Texas Rangers drew waves of jeers and boos while going hitless in the first three games of the season.

Then he was benched for two games.

But General Manager Tom Grieve insists the 1985 College Player of the Year figures prominently in the Rangers' plans.

"I don't think anyone should read anything into his sitting out a couple of days," Grieve said Saturday.

"He didn't play yesterday (Friday) or today, but if you want to make a safe bet, it would be that he will play 150 to 155 games this year, hit 25 to 35 home runs, knock in 80 to 100 runs, and average between .250 and .280.

"He's struggling, but when you're a powerful hitter like him, you work out of it."

The fans booed Incaviglia constantly in the Rangers' season-opening three-game series against Cleveland, when he went 0-for-12, struck out six times and hit only one ball out of the infield.

Incaviglia said he can tolerate the fans' booing, but felt Manager Bobby Valentine singled him out for the team's batting slump by benching him Friday.

During their first five games, Texas was 1-for-32 with runners in scoring position. After winning their first game, the Rangers scored only three runs in the next four games.

"Bobby has to hang with me when I'm going good and bad, just like he does with the others" in the lineup, said Incaviglia, who starred at Oklahoma State before joining the Rangers. He is one of only three active players never to have played a game in the minor leagues.

Two other key players in the Texas lineup — Ruben Sierra and Larry Parrish — were only 1-for-11 in the early going.

Top-ranked O-State blanks SMSU, 19-0

By The Associated Press

STILLWATER, Okla. — Robin Ventura, Jeromy Burnitz and Benny Castillo all hit solo home runs as top-ranked Oklahoma State routed Southwest Missouri State 19-0 Sunday at Allie P. Reynolds Stadium.

The victory was Oklahoma State's 24th in a row, raising its record to 31-1 on the year.

Ventura's 12th home run of the season moved him into a tie for second place with Jimmy Barragan on the Cowboys' all-time home run list.

Burnitz, a freshman, hit his fourth home run in the last five games. The Cowboys, who have hit 66 home runs this year, have hit 44 in their last 14 games.

Brad Beanblossom led the Cowboys 16-hit attack with a single and a double to extend his hitting streak to 10 games.

Bryan Gore, 4-0, pitched six scoreless innings giving up five hits.

Dale Bowling, 2-5, held Oklahoma State to two runs in the first three innings before the Cowboys erupted for 17 runs in the next three innings.

The Bears, who committed four errors, are now 20-10.

Lyle wears Masters' green jacket

By The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Sandy Lyle didn't expect to birdie the 18th hole.

Mark Calcavecchia didn't expect Lyle to birdie the 18th hole.

But he did.

"You've been there so many times over the years," Lyle said. "You try to put things out of your mind, concentrate on the line, the read, the stroke.

"It all came together. Bingo," the burly Scot said Sunday of the 10-foot downhill putt that dropped into the cup and made him the first British subject ever authorized to wear the green jacket of a Masters champion.

It wasn't the putt that had Lyle worried. It was the 1-iron tee shot that caught the first of two huge fairway bunkers on the final hole of the Augusta National Golf Club course that had brought a furrow to his brow.

"I thought it was over," Lyle admitted. "I didn't think I'd have a chance to get to the green from that bunker."

But he did, lashing a 7-iron from the sand onto the green beyond the flag. The ball bit into the green, paused for a second, then backed up toward the pin while the gallery pleaded for still more roll.

The ball stopped some 10 feet above the cup.

"I didn't expect him to birdie the 18th hole under the circumstances," said Calcavecchia, who had the lead alone with three holes to play.

The recovery from the trap and the putt climaxed a great comeback for Lyle, who once was teetering on the brink of collapse. It broke a tie with Calcavecchia and left the American thinking of what might have been.

But Calcavecchia had no complaints.

"I'm happy with myself. I did all I could do," he said. "I'll be back."

Lyle's victory, secured with a final-round 71, was his second in as many weeks — he won the Greater Greensboro Open last week — and enabled him to become the first man to win three titles on the American PGA Tour this year. He is also the first player to win consecutive tournaments since Bernhard Langer of West Germany won the Masters and the Heritage Classic in 1985.

"It's a great accomplishment for me," Lyle said after posting a 281 score, seven under par, that provided him with his second major-tournament title. He also won the British Open in 1985.

This one almost got away.

"A bit annoying," Lyle said of blowing a two-shot lead in the run around Amen corner, the 11th, 12th and 13th holes.

Calcavecchia, a man from the wrong side of golf's tracks and a caddy as recently as three years ago, finished second with a 2-under-par 70 in the bright, warm sunshine. He had a 282 total, six under par.

Craig Stadler, the 1982 Masters winner, once had a share of the lead, but dropped back with a 16th-hole bogey and finished third at 283. Stadler, who bolted into contention with a 12-foot eagle putt on the eighth hole, had a closing 68.

Another former champion, 1984 winner Ben Crenshaw, followed at 284 after a hard-won 72.

Musical groups, composers to participate in week's events

By Julie Hanna
Collegian Reporter

This week is the 1988 Panorama of American Music featuring Gunther Schuller. He is a composer, conductor, teacher, author and music publisher and will be speaking about music to elementary school children as well as K-State students and faculty.

Beginning today, a week of events has been planned featuring Schuller and various musical groups.

A concert at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium will include music by Schuller. The K-State Choir will sing "O Lamb of God" and "O Spirit of the Living God," followed by "Fantasy" for the unaccompanied cello, "Episodes" for solo clarinet, "Piano Trio" and "Josephine."

"Meditation" for band and "Combination March" will be performed by the K-State Wind Ensemble.

Also to be performed is "Journey into Jazz," a story about a boy who is told he isn't good at playing jazz, but he learns how to play it well. Ralph Titus, professor in the Department of Extension Communications, will be the narrator and the Jazz Quintet and K-State Orchestra will provide musical accompaniment.

A reception to honor Schuller and the other performers will follow the concert at 9:30 p.m. in the McCain Green Room.

A concert featuring chamber music by Schuller will be performed by students at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday in All Faiths Chapel Auditorium.

International Week to begin

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

It doesn't take a trip abroad this week to capture a look at international culture.

International Week, sponsored by the International Coordination Council, begins today and ends Friday.

The week-long events are ones that everyone should participate in, said Yemi Ogunrinola, president of ICC. Ogunrinola is a graduate student in food science and is from Nigeria.

"We are proud to be an international group. This (week) shows how we can be different; yet we can come together as one," he said.

This year, 17 countries will be represented by associations on campus. The presidents from each association comprise ICC, said Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center.

A fashion show by children from Marlatt School, a school for children whose parents live in Jardine Terrace Apartments, will begin the celebration at noon today in the Union Courtyard.

Two films, "The Weeping" and "Lawrence of Arabia," will be shown at 3:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre today and Tuesday.

Students from the different countries in ICC will have cultural exhibits in the Union all week. Students from Pakistan will be giving Cricket lessons at noon Thursday, and a potluck dinner at 6:30 Saturday night will be the finale to the week's events.

"The food is always good," Davis said. Members of ICC and their families bring native dishes to share. The public is welcome.

Ogunrinola said not many Americans have attended the festival in the past. However, he hopes that will change this year.

"We hope a lot of Americans will (come and) get to know us," he said.

Davis said not enough students take advantage of what the International Center has to offer.

Kansas women face AIDS risk

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

Women make up less than 1 percent of the total reported cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in Kansas, but they should be just as concerned as men about the spread of the deadly disease, said a representative of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

As of March 1, women comprised seven of the 121 reported cases of AIDS in Kansas, said Janice Dunwell, the state director of Public Health Nursing from the KDHE, during the Friday noon lecture: Focus on Women. Nationally, 7,000 of the 58,000 AIDS patients are women.

However, these figures are misleading because they don't include people in the beginning stages who don't show signs of the disease but can still be infectious, Dunwell said.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop estimates that the number of people infected with the AIDS virus in the United States is approximately 1.5 million.

"It's still a man's disease in terms of numbers, but it is not a man's disease in terms of the way it is transmitted," said Dunwell.

An added concern of health care officials is that women with the virus are usually of childbearing age, she said.

A pregnant woman with AIDS becomes ill more rapidly than other women with the virus, Dunwell said.

Approximately one-third of the children born to AIDS-infected mothers will also be infected with AIDS, she said. These children also become ill rapidly and normally don't live past 18 months.

"It's a tragedy for women and children, but their numbers are small," Dunwell said, adding that four cases of children with AIDS have been reported in Kansas.

The fear of AIDS is probably more prevalent in Kansas than the disease itself, she said.

"There is more misinformation, more fear, more homophobia than AIDS," Dunwell said.

AIDS is transmitted through semen, blood and blood products, and vaginal secretions, not "sitting next to someone in class with AIDS or from a toilet seat or from a restaurant worker or from showering or swimming or bathing (with someone with AIDS)," she said.

Dunwell said people should confront the fear to better understand the disease, and university women — and men — should take responsibility for their actions to prevent exposure.

Rush entertains with new sound

By Judd Annis
Collegian Reviewer

Three days and 15,000 Jayhawks later, Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., was the site of what it was built for — rock shows of monstrous proportions.

The musical collective known as Rush, Thursday's rock act at the home of this year's basketball Final Four, proved both interesting and entertaining.

The Canadian trio opened the show with "Big Money," and then reached back a few albums for "Subdivisions" and "Limelight."

The group's newer material was introduced with "Marathon" from the album "Power Windows," followed by "Turn The Page" and "Prime Mover" off of the band's most recent release "Hold Your Fire."

Journeying back to its 1977 album "Farewell to Kings," Rush, and most of the audience, sang "Closer to the Heart," a song that remains a crowd favorite.

Concert Review

"Red Sector A" brought the audiences attention back to the band's recent material, setting the mood for "Force 10," "Time Stand Still," "Distant Early Warning," "Lock and Key" and "Mission."

Closing the show, Rush finally recognized its roots and performed "Spirit of Radio" and "Tom Sawyer," the most well-received songs of the night and the high point of the concert.

The band played one encore, thrilling its die-hard fans with the intro to its 1976 album "2112" and "Temple of Syrinx," followed by "In The Mood" from its first album.

Starting in 1969, this 19-year-old band has long been known as one of Canada's musical innovators, featuring a blend of rock and technology with a dose of social awareness.

In 1978 and 1979, it picked up Juno awards (Canada's equivalent of the Grammy) for best group, and had one of the top rock albums of the year in "Permanent Waves."

This year's Rush, however, is a sleeker and more commercialized model that falls short of "new and improved."

As in the past several tours, Rush makes full use of a significant laser and light show, and a giant backdrop for rear-screen projection segments. To an audience weened on videos, this may be fast becoming the standard for rock shows, and lends a needed visual aspect to a band that is rather lazy on stage.

Percussion aficionados were not disappointed by drummer Neil Peart, who was simply blazing all night. Peart displayed an updated version of his classic and often imitated solo on "YYZ," proving he is the best drummer touring today and will remain a standard for stickmen to come.

The other members of the group, bassist and vocalist Geddy Lee and guitarist Alex Lifeson, displayed their talents as well.

The show concentrated on newer material from the last three albums, "Grace Under Pressure," "Power Windows" and "Hold Your Fire," embodying a high-tech sound that leaves older fans shaking their heads.

Audibly, however, it's one of the cleanest concerts on the road today.

Rush promoters like to term it "surrounding sound," and whatever it is, it's well worth hearing.

As for where "that old sound" is, I haven't a clue. That magic that gave Rush one of the most loyal followings in rock 'n' roll seems to have gone through too many recording executives, and when reproduced on stage, comes across as one step beyond a previously admirable progressive vein.

Kansas City's own Rainmakers (previous members of the local favorite Steve, Bob and Rich) opened the night with a short 25-minute workout. While drawing a rousing response from loyal supporters, the band remains better suited for smaller venues.

Sorority collects for charity in 'plunge'

By The Collegian Staff

About $2,800 was raised by fraternity and sorority members during the Pi Phi Plunge, sponsored by Pi Beta Phi sorority Saturday at the Natatorium.

The funds will be sent to the Arrowment Settlement School in Gatlinburg, Tenn., to help people in the mountain region develop job skills, said Timirie Van Dam, junior in elementary education and Pi Beta Phi philanthropy chairman.

Members of twelve fraternities competed in events judged by representatives from five sororities, Van Dam said.

Sigma Chi fraternity won first place with a total of 512.5 points. Sigma Alpha Epsilon took second place and Lambda Chi Alpha placed third.

Eric Harrison, fifth-year senior in architecture and a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity, was awarded the title of "Mr. Plunge" by the housemothers from the fraternities.

Fraternity members competed in racing events, synchronized swimming, stunt diving and a kick board relay.

"The sweatshirt race is a lot of fun. Members of each team have to wear sweatshirts in the water and switch shirts with team members when they finish their leg," Van Dam said.

Fraternities were awarded points based on a percentage of T-shirt and ticket sales and performance during the competition.

Fraternities donated $75 each to enter the competition. Sororities donated $30 and elected one member of the house to judge the competition.

"The committee must decide between the two limits (set by the Legislature)," he said. Although Werts said he is unsure whether the program will be fully funded, he said refuses to lose faith in the Senate's proposal.

"I'll be giving it my best shot (to ensure approval of the amendment)," he said.

Besides MOE, the qualified admissions bill would also have had a direct effect on regents universities. The bill, which was initiated by Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, failed this spring in the Legislature. Apt said she doesn't expect the bill to be brought up again during this session, but believes the issue is far from dead.

"If I'm re-elected, I'll bring it up again," she said. "The bill is having some impact. Superintendents are beginning to offer college curriculum courses and students are taking them. I don't feel like it's been a total failure."

Also left undone were decisions on the following:

■ Whether Kansas' tort laws should be amended to try to reduce amounts of damage awards in negligence and malpractice lawsuits.

■ Whether to spend larger-than-expected treasury balances to enhance children, education and welfare programs, or bank a large portion of the extra money to provide property tax relief next year when new valuations from statewide reappraisal are expected to produce big shifts in property taxes.

Those heavyweight issues make what has been accomplished so far pale in comparison. About the only major issues settled are school finance and creation of KanWork, a program designed to get people off welfare by requiring them to get training and experience so they can take permanent jobs.

The Legislature last Thursday voted $30 million worth of property tax relief — $15 million to cities and counties and $15 million to school districts — but Hayden used his power of line item veto Sunday to wipe out that effort at property tax relief, calling it "an election-year budget buster."

The Senate had passed the bill 38-1 and the House approved it 77-47.

ing that Carlson may be with someone else.

Hampton said he has contacted friends in Manhattan, Lawrence, Oklahoma City and Colorado in an attempt to locate Carlson, and that so far has had no luck. Furthermore, Hampton said, he has been told by local law enforcement officers that since it appears foul play isn't involved, the scope of their investigation is limited.

"They said there's really not a whole lot they can do," Hampton said, adding that if Carlson remains missing for three weeks to a month, a missing persons report can be filed.

Although Hampton had contacted the Riley County Police Department for assistance, a spokesman said the investigation is being conducted by K-State Police.

Lt. Robert Mellgren of the campus police said there are no leads in the case, which is being investigated as a simple disappearance and not foul play.

"Basically, we've made contact with all of the known contacts in this area and his friends in Wichita," Mellgren said.

He asked that anyone with information on Carlson's whereabouts contact campus police immediately.

Gunmen demand release of terrorists

Arabs throw second body from plane

By The Associated Press

LARNACA, Cyprus — Arab hijackers on Monday killed a second hostage, tossed his bloody body from a Kuwaiti jet and threatened to kill the rest of the nearly 50 captives if the plane wasn't refueled.

The gunmen said the dead man was a "Kuwaiti officer." He was the second of three Kuwaiti military men aboard Kuwait Airways jet that the hijackers have slain during the weeklong ordeal.

The hijackers have demanded that Kuwait release 17 pro-Iranian terrorists convicted in 1984 for bombing the U.S. and French embassies in December 1983.

Sources close to the negotiations said, however, that the hijackers on Monday demanded freedom only for the three men among the 17 who have been sentenced to death. Kuwait apparently rejected the modified demand.

In Kuwait, Foreign Minister Sheik Sabah al-Ahmed al-Sabah said his country is prepared to lose more hostages rather than give in to terrorism.

"We will try our utmost to protect our dear ones aboard the plane, but we will not surrender to any blackmail, even if we lose more of them," he told a news conference.

There are 52 people aboard the Boeing 747, including three members of the Kuwaiti royal family, as well as the hijackers, who are masked by blue hoods fashioned from airline pillow cases and armed with grenades and handguns.

Sabah said there are at least eight hijackers, all of them Arabs, carrying forged passports. Four of the hijackers have Bahraini passports, three have Iraqi passports and one has a Colombian passport, he said.

He sidestepped a question about whether the jet would be stormed, saying that was a matter for the Cypriot authorities since the plane was on their territory.

The man killed Monday was pushed from the blue-and-white plane at 3:07 p.m. (8:07 a.m. EDT) after Cypriot officials ignored two deadlines to refuel the jet. An ambulance picked up the body 30 minutes later.

Doctors at Larnaca morgue said he had suffered injuries to the side of his face, apparently from a beating. They said he had been shot twice in the head at close range before his body, hands bound behind his back, was thrown onto the tarmac at Larnaca Airport.

"We have executed a Kuwaiti officer," a hijacker told the control tower. "We also reconfirm that the craft must be refueled immediately, immediately, before we take more dangerous steps."

At dusk, the hijackers put one of the passengers, identified as Fadl Marzouk el-Oteibi, on the radio.

Speaking in Arabic, he told the control tower: "The hijackers say that if you don't give us fuel they will kill all the passengers. Please listen to this and greetings to my family."

The hijackers said they wanted about nine hours' worth of fuel so they could fly to an unspecified "neutral country."

Local vineyard to be first winery in Kansas

Winemaking tradition continues

By Nancy Chartrand
Staff Writer

It may well be the toast of Kansas.

This summer will mark the first year that the grapes at Fields of Fair Vineyard will be picked for the manufacturing of wine.

"We plan on making sweet, semi-sweet and dry wines," said Jim Fair, owner of the Fields of Fair Vineyard.

Fair got the idea of starting a vineyard from his father.

"Dad had a vineyard," Fair said. "As a kid on the farm, we had grapes and made a little wine, but it wasn't as good as it could have been."

The endeavor was started six years ago when Fair decided to leave his construction business to his sons, Dennis and Mont Fair, and try his hand at making wine better than what his father had made on the farm.

His sons soon developed an interest in their father's idea and a three-way partnership was formed.

According to Fair, Kansas is just as suitable for a vineyard as California. The problem was finding a grape suitable for the land and climate of northeast Kansas.

After considerable research, Fair and his sons found what they believed to be the perfect grape for their vineyard: the vinoli.

"We tried several varieties because we didn't know what would do well," Fair said.

The vinoli was chosen for several reasons, one being the fact that birds are a major problem in vineyards. The vinoli has a grayish color that is difficult for birds to spot and also has a very tough skin that makes the grape unappetizing to birds.

The other reason for choosing the vinoli was, of course, its ability to survive the temperatures of Kansas.

Fields of Fair, located east of Manhattan, is now a 55-acre vineyard that includes a 15-acre recreation area.

Fair said the family got the idea of including a recreation area with picnic tables, baseball diamonds and other facilities from the vineyards in California, where Fair said families are allowed to visit the vineyards and stay to have a picnic and enjoy the recreation area.

"We are further along than any other vineyard in Kansas," Fair said. "We hope to get our (manufacturing) license in May."

Currently, the Fair family is working on getting their small manufacturing facility in working order.

"We will probably make about 1,000 to 2,000 gallons this year, but we don't know for sure," Fair said.

Fair is working with other Kansas vineyard owners to gain passage of a bill that would provide more lenient farm winery laws.

The bill would allow wineries to sell their products to retailers, clubs, drinking establishments and caterers as well as distributors. Wineries are now only allowed to sell to distributors.

The Fairs plan on marketing their wine directly out of the vineyard.

Fair said the family does not as yet have a name for the wine. In keeping with the family theme, he has left that up to his daughters-in-law, Marsha and Deborah. The one thing he does know for sure about the wine is that it will have a Fields of Fair label.

Fair said he doesn't see the vineyard getting too large, but there is potential for growth. He said he believes the future of the vineyard looks promising as his grandson, Todd Fair, junior in marketing, eventually plans to assume the family's new wine-making business.

After graduating from K-State, the younger Fair said he plans on going to a college in either Texas or California to study wine-making.

"I can really see the vineyard growing," Fair said. "My grandfather wants to establish it as the first winery in Kansas."

Staff/Neal Hinkle

Jim Fair looks over his vineyard early Monday morning before another day of pruning and cultivating gets underway. Fair started the 55-acre vineyard six years ago, and is planning on producing about 1,000 to 2,000 gallons of white wine this summer.

Douglas, Cher win Oscars

'Emperor' takes eight

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Cher won the Oscar as best actress Monday night for her role as a widow who discovers love in "Moonstruck," while Bernardo Bertolucci's "The Last Emperor," a tragic epic of modern China, dominated the ceremonies with eight awards.

Michael Douglas was named best actor at the 60th Academy Awards for his role as a ruthless inside trader in "Wall Street."

Best supporting performers were Olympia Dukakis, as Cher's outspoken Italian mother coping with a wayward husband in "Moonstruck," and Sean Connery, the hard-fisted, incorruptible Chicago beat cop in "The Untouchables."

Douglas, who also starred in last year's box-office smash "Fatal Attraction," thanked his father, actor Kirk Douglas, for helping "a son step out of his father's shadow."

"Emperor," directed by the Italian Bernardo Bertolucci, had the most nominations — nine — and won awards for original score, art direction, cinematography, sound and editing. The sweeping story of China's last imperial ruler had been widely favored to win the most honors, including best picture, at the 60th annual Academy Awards.

"OK, Michael, let's go!" a jubilant Olympia Dukakis whooped after accepting the gold statuette. The reference was to her cousin, Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for president.

Connery, Hollywood's original James Bond, addressed his accep-

Hayden signs bill increasing minimum wage

People over 60 years old receive pay compensation

From Staff and Wire Reports

Gov. Mike Hayden signed into law Monday a bill that raises the state minimum wage from $1.60 to $2.65 an hour and applies it to persons over 60 years of age.

Kathy Peterson, Hayden's press secretary, said the signing of the minimum wage bill "recognizes that those persons not covered by the federal minimum wage law are due an increase in minimum compensation."

While organized labor is pleased with the change, Wayne Maichel, executive vice president of Kansas AFL-CIO, said it was just an interim step and labor will continue to work to raise the state minimum wage to $3.35 an hour, the current level of the federal minimum wage.

"We feel it is still terribly inadequate," Maichel said.

"But teen-agers still are exempt, and employers can pay them anything they want," he said. "We're pleased the Legislature passed it and the governor signed it, but we feel we need to come back next year and improve it."

The state minimum wage covers employees of businesses who are not engaged in interstate commerce, but exempts agricultural and domestic workers, salespersons, professionals, executives and persons who work as volunteers for non-profit organizations.

However, this wage law will not affect K-State student employees who participate in work study or are on the campus payroll.

"(The students) have to receive at least the federal minimum wage," said Larry Moeder, associate director of Student Financial Assistance. "Many departments on campus have a progressive wage scale, where the student gets a raise after one year or one semester. And some start higher than the (federal) minimum wage."

"This is just one of many issues affecting working people in the state, and it certainly doesn't change our feelings for Hayden," Maichel said.

Hayden has pushed to eliminate too many things labor wanted, for his signature on the minimum wage bill to change Kansas AFL-CIO's attitude toward him, he said.

Maichel cited repeal of the prevailing wage law, elimination of the state Apprenticeship Council and elimination of the labor liaison with the Job Training Partnership Act program as action he considers hostile toward labor.

"We feel it is still terribly inadequate."
—Wayne Maichel, Kansas AFL-CIO

"These are things that are very important to working people," Maichel said. "Governor Hayden does not have a good record as far as we are concerned toward the working people of this state."

Maichel praised Rep. Arthur Douville, R-Overland Park, chairman of the House Labor and Industry Committee, and Rep. Anthony Hensley, D-Topeka, for their efforts to get the bill passed.

He also said he wasn't surprised Hayden signed the bill. He said he thought the legislative leadership sent the governor a message that it wanted the bill signed when it had the Senate Labor, Industry and Small Business Committee back up and resurrect the measure after once killing it.

93 dead in Pakistan explosion

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — U.S. and Pakistani bomb disposal experts Monday began defusing thousands of deadly missiles and grenades strewn around the capital after an explosion at an ammunition dump killed 93 people and injured 1,100.

Security forces and rescue teams also searched flattened buildings for hundreds of people still unaccounted for after Sunday's blast.

President Mohammad Zia Ul-haq, who cut short a visit to Kuwait, called the explosion an "extraordinary accident."

Zia refused to speculate on the cause of the fire which ignited the ammunition dump explosion at Ojeri camp between the twin cities of Islamabad and Rawalpindi.

Commenting on reports that some of the ordnance was earmarked for Moslem guerrillas in Afghanistan and that some empty casings bore Chinese labels, Zia said: "It's nothing but speculation — a high measure of speculation."

Witnesses saw burning trucks Sunday near the depot bearing Afghan license plates. Pakistan is a conduit for foreign military supplies and other aid to the Afghan insurgents fighting the communist government in Kabul backed by an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops.

Zia, who disclosed the number of dead and injured, received messages of sympathy from various heads of state, including a message from Afghan President Najib.

Problems found in Boeing jets

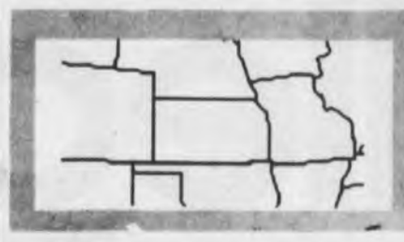
SEATTLE — Boeing Co. declined Monday to comment on reports that four major airlines had reported defects in the aerospace company's 747 and 767 widebody jets.

The problems reportedly ranged from wrong parts to incorrectly installed firefighting systems.

T. Craig Martin, a spokesman for Boeing's commercial airplane division, deflected questions about the reports, saying the company planned to hold a news conference today to discuss the matter.

The newspaper accounts said Boeing had received complaints of defects from American Airlines, Japan Air Lines, All Nippon Airways and British Airways.

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer said Monday that All Nippon, a Japanese domestic carrier, disclosed it told Boeing of several instances of poor workmanship in 747 and 767 airliners, mostly on newly delivered planes.



Dean Thornton, head of Boeing Commercial Airplanes, was quoted by the newspaper as saying a jetliner "is a big complicated piece of machinery."

Two escape injury in crash

AUSTIN, Texas — An Air Force reconnaissance jet slammed into a row of mini-warehouses Monday moments after its two crew members ejected from the cockpit and parachuted to the ground, officials said.

The crash ignited a fire in the warehouses about one mile from Bergstrom Air Force Base, but there were no injuries on the ground, said Austin Fire Chief Bill Roberts.

Col. Roger Grimsley, 47, of Leesburg, Ohio, and Capt. Terence Ganiko, 30, of Honolulu, were taken to a Bergstrom hospital for treatment, said Lt. David Fruck, an Air Force public information officer. Grimsley was pilot of the RF-4C Phantom II plane. Ganiko was its weapons officer.

Area man placed on probation

LEAVENWORTH — A Junction City man who pleaded guilty to vehicular homicide for accidentally running over his brother with a pickup truck has been placed on probation for two years.

Leavenworth County District Judge Frederick N. Stewart took the action Friday in the case of Damon Helmig, 26, suspending a prison sentence of one to two years.

When Helmig pleaded guilty March 9, it was under an agreement that he would get probation if all his brother's survivors requested it. Charges of driving under the influence and failing to report a fatal accident were dropped by Leavenworth County Attorney Frank Kohl.

Darren Helmig, 23, also of Junction City, was fatally injured Jan. 28 at the Kansas Turnpike rest area near Lawrence.

Fourth skull linked to Berdella

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Another skull said to be linked to a man who has been under intensive investigation since being accused of sex offenses has come to light, police said Monday.

Sgt. Laura Mulloy, a spokeswoman for the Kansas City Police Department, said someone reported having purchased a skull from Robert Berdella, a flea market merchant, and wondered if police were interested in it.

Mulloy said she believed police got the skull "late last week," and that it apparently was of the type used in medical schools because it has an artificially hinged jaw.

"But we're checking it out anyway," she said.

Berdella, 39, is being held without bond after being charged last week with seven counts of sodomy, one of felonious restraint and one of first-degree assault.

The alleged offenses involve a 22-year-old man who escaped from Berdella's Hyde Park area April 2, saying he had been held there for five days of torture and sex abuse.

Police who went to investigate reported finding two skulls, one of them identified as human, another artificial, inside the home. Later, another skull identified as being human was unearthed in the backyard, along with bone fragments of undetermined origin.

New state university alcohol policy set by regents

By Nancy Chartrand
Staff Writer

The passage of a bill by the 1987 Legislature has made it permissible to consume alcoholic beverages in non-classroom space on campus. In accordance with this new law, the Kansas Board of Regents has adopted a policy for state universities.

But before students go running to the Union to pop a beer, they should realize there are many regulations regarding the consumption of alcohol on campus. Alcoholic liquor is defined as all alcoholic beverages, except cereal malt beverages containing 3.2 percent or less alcohol.

The regents have also specified that "alcoholic liquor may only be served at luncheons, dinners or receptions which honor individuals and which occur in connection with official university events and/or fund-raising activities for university programs."

According to University requirements passed March 15, non-classroom areas in the following buildings and their immediately adjacent outside grounds are approved:

- K-State Union;
- McCain Auditorium;
- Farrell 315;
- Durland Hall foyer;
- Nichols Hall foyer;
- Derby Food Center;
- The Big Eight Room in the Football Office Building;
- Bramlage Coliseum Hospitality Room;
- Hollis House, Alumni Association and KSU Foundation;
- and Weber Hall arena.

In order to obtain permission to serve alcoholic beverages at a function, the host organization must request approval 15 days in advance of the event to President Jon Wefald.

This request must include such items as the number of people expected to attend the event, the type of alcohol that will be served and the address of the president or other responsible officer hosting the event. If the event is to be at the Union, permission must also be obtained from the Union director.

The sponsor must also "make arrangements for the provision of liquor through a drinking establishment license or a temporary permit from the director of Alcohol Beverage Control or through a licensed caterer."

The caterer and host are responsible for ensuring that no person under the legal drinking age of 21 is allowed to consume alcohol. Non-alcoholic beverages and food must also be made available in the same area as the alcoholic beverages, and be featured as prominently.

Whenever feasible, the host will require that the caterer, supplying alcoholic beverages, agree that K-State and the regents are not held responsible for any and all liability caused by the negligence of the caterer.

Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, said the new policy will benefit organizations such as the Friends of The Library and the Foundation, organizations which frequently sponsor fund-raising events for the University.

The regents policy does permit the use and sale of cereal malt beverages (3.2 percent beer) under appropriately controlled conditions. The consumption of 3.2 percent beer is not permitted on University property except for the following instances:

- K-State policy states that 3.2 percent beer may be possessed or consumed by those of legal drinking age in private rooms and approved public areas of residence halls;
- Beer may also be consumed by those of legal drinking age in outdoor areas, surrounding the residence halls, if it is done in areas away from the public streets.

The Association of Residence Halls will determine the area's suitability.

Tentative allocation of funds topic at Senate forum tonight

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

Student Senate will discuss tentative allocations for International Coordinating Council, Black Student Union and Sports Club Council at 6 tonight in the Union Big Eight Room.

International Coordinating Council requested $4,486.55, and the Senate Finance Committee recommended an allocation of $4,310.28. No debate is expected from ICC because this allocation is more than it has received in the past three years, said Doug Folk, Senate chairman.

Black Student Union requested $3,225.10, and the Finance Committee recommended an allocation of $776.20.

Folk said there may be a debate over BSU's allocation because of the difference between the request and the recommendation. Also, BSU received $828.40 in allocations this year.

One significant difference between the requested allocation and the recommendation is the amount allocated for lodging. About one-third of the $3,325 was to be used for lodging purposes, but only $88 is to be recommended for that use by the Finance Committee.

Sports Club Council, representing rugby, parachute, men and women's soccer, sailing, rodeo and gymnastics clubs, requested $11,743.57. The Finance Committee's recommendation is $876.80.

There is a good possibility a "heated debate" may take place over those recommendations, Folk said. The sports clubs generally don't receive the amount they request, he said.

The recommended allocations break down to $93.20 for rugby, $133.20 for parachute, $122.20 for women's soccer, $139.60 for men's soccer, $112.20 for sailing, $183.20 for rodeo and $93.20 for gymnastics.

Soviet life to be discussed

Video clips to help in understanding

By The Collegian Staff

"VREMYA-Direct from the USSR!" is the scheduled multimedia day beginning at 2 p.m. today in the Union Ballroom.

George Feifer will be the featured speaker at 8 p.m. in the Forum Hall. His lecture, titled "Love, Vodka, Laughter, Tears: A Look at Soviet Life Under the Surface," will use unedited video clips to create a better understanding of the Russian way of life.

Feifer is a world-renowned Sovietologist.

This is the major event of the year sponsored by the UPC Issues and Ideas Committee. The open house will continue until 5 p.m. and the evening lecture will include a question-and-answer session.

The scope of the lecture will include the answer to how 271 million Soviets see the world from behind the "Iron Curtain."

Student organizations who wish to speak to Feifer can call 532-6571 to set aside time to do so. Others are welcome to speak informally with Feifer.

Feifer received his degree from Harvard University in advanced studies of the Soviet Union and a doctorate from Columbia University-Harriman Institute. He studied two years at the Moscow State University and resided behind the Iron Curtain for 10 years as a free-lance journalist.

Feifer has written nine books on the Soviet Union and has been a contributing writer on others.

'Compromise' key word in delegating windfall

The Kansas Legislature finally decided what to do with part of the windfall money, but Gov. Mike Hayden decided it was not the right plan. So he vetoed it.

Kansans are wondering whether anything will be done with the $135 million that was generated from changes in federal tax laws. Officials have researched, debated and voted on the money issue for months.

Now the session is over, and the state still does not know what will happen to the money. There's something to be said for careful planning, but when the state stagnates because elected officials cannot come to an agreement, it's a different matter.

The Legislature's plan, which was passed 115-48, would have sent $30 million to counties and school districts. This would drive down local taxes while not hurting schools, the Legislature said.

Hayden, however, said the plan would increase taxes next year, and there was no guarantee the districts would lower taxes if they received more money from the state.

A war should not be declared between the governor and the Legislature. For effective policies to be developed, both sides must be willing to compromise.

Public officials should remember this when formulating policies. And they should also remember to keep in mind what is in the public's best interest.

Older students offer much to university life

It's never too late to learn.

And the FENIX scholarships awarded Monday afternoon are a perfect example.

FENIX is a program designed to help adult students beginning or returning to the university experience. The FENIX staff advises students on enrolling, finding their way around campus and learning how to study again.

For the past three years, scholarships have been awarded to students who are 25 years old or older and have a 3.0 or better fall semester grade point average and a cumulative GPA of a B or better.

While the stipends are only $250, the ideals they represent are invaluable. Studies have shown that on the average, older students have compiled a higher grade point average than their younger peers. In fall 1986, 60 percent of undergraduates age 26 and above earned a 3.0 or higher GPA, compared to only 35 percent of students age 18-22, according to a FENIX pamphlet.

And the numbers of returning to school are growing rapidly. From 1978 to 1986, the number of non-traditional undergraduate students at K-State climbed from 1,300 to more than 2,700. Nationwide, more than 24 million students have returned to college.

Why are they doing so well? Do older students have a higher degree of motivation than younger students? It looks that way.

Some may argue that younger students are busier and have more activities in which to participate than older students. Hardly. At K-State, two-thirds of the older students are married, many have families, most work from 20 to 40 hours a week and three-fourths are full-time students.

Another reason is that, unlike many younger students, the non-traditional students are financing their educations, as opposed to having Mom and Dad foot the bill. So they do their best to do their best.

The FENIX program was named after the fenix, a bird which, according to Egyptian legend, had the power to renew its own life. Since then, it has become a symbol of inspiration for those who have the courage to see the possibilities in life rather than the limitations.

The fenix should not only be an inspiration for non-traditional students — it should be an inspiration to every K-State student. The examples set by these hard-working older students are ones that could well be followed by everyone. For, as one woman, who quit college 30 years ago and has since returned, said: "It's not easy. But when you want something, you're willing to work for it."

The Jackson candidacy

Fear of being labeled 'racist' has silenced many of the would-be president's critics

Commentary

CHRIS KIPPES
Collegian Columnist

One month ago Jesse Jackson was making headlines. It seemed that his campaign would be hanging on until the very end, and by robbing Dukakis of an outright victory going into the Democratic National Convention, Jackson would be able to act as a power broker in what would be an exciting and close race for the nomination; the media were beginning to wonder what political favors Jackson would demand in exchange for his pledge of support, and Dukakis was beginning to get a little scared.

Last week Jackson was front-cover material for Time and Newsweek; he was making headlines again. He had captured 55 percent of the Michigan vote compared to Dukakis' 28 percent, and the media were no longer wondering what Jackson would be asking for at the convention. The answer had become clear: Jackson expects the nomination and wants to be president.

In one month, it has become clear that the momentum of the race for the Democratic nomination has been all Jackson's. Even with Dukakis' wins in Wisconsin and Colorado, Jackson is overwhelmingly capturing the black vote and can now consistently count on 20 percent to 25 percent of the white vote. More than 95 percent of Wisconsin is white, and one-fourth of the white Wisconsin Democrats voted for Jackson. And his white support is growing.

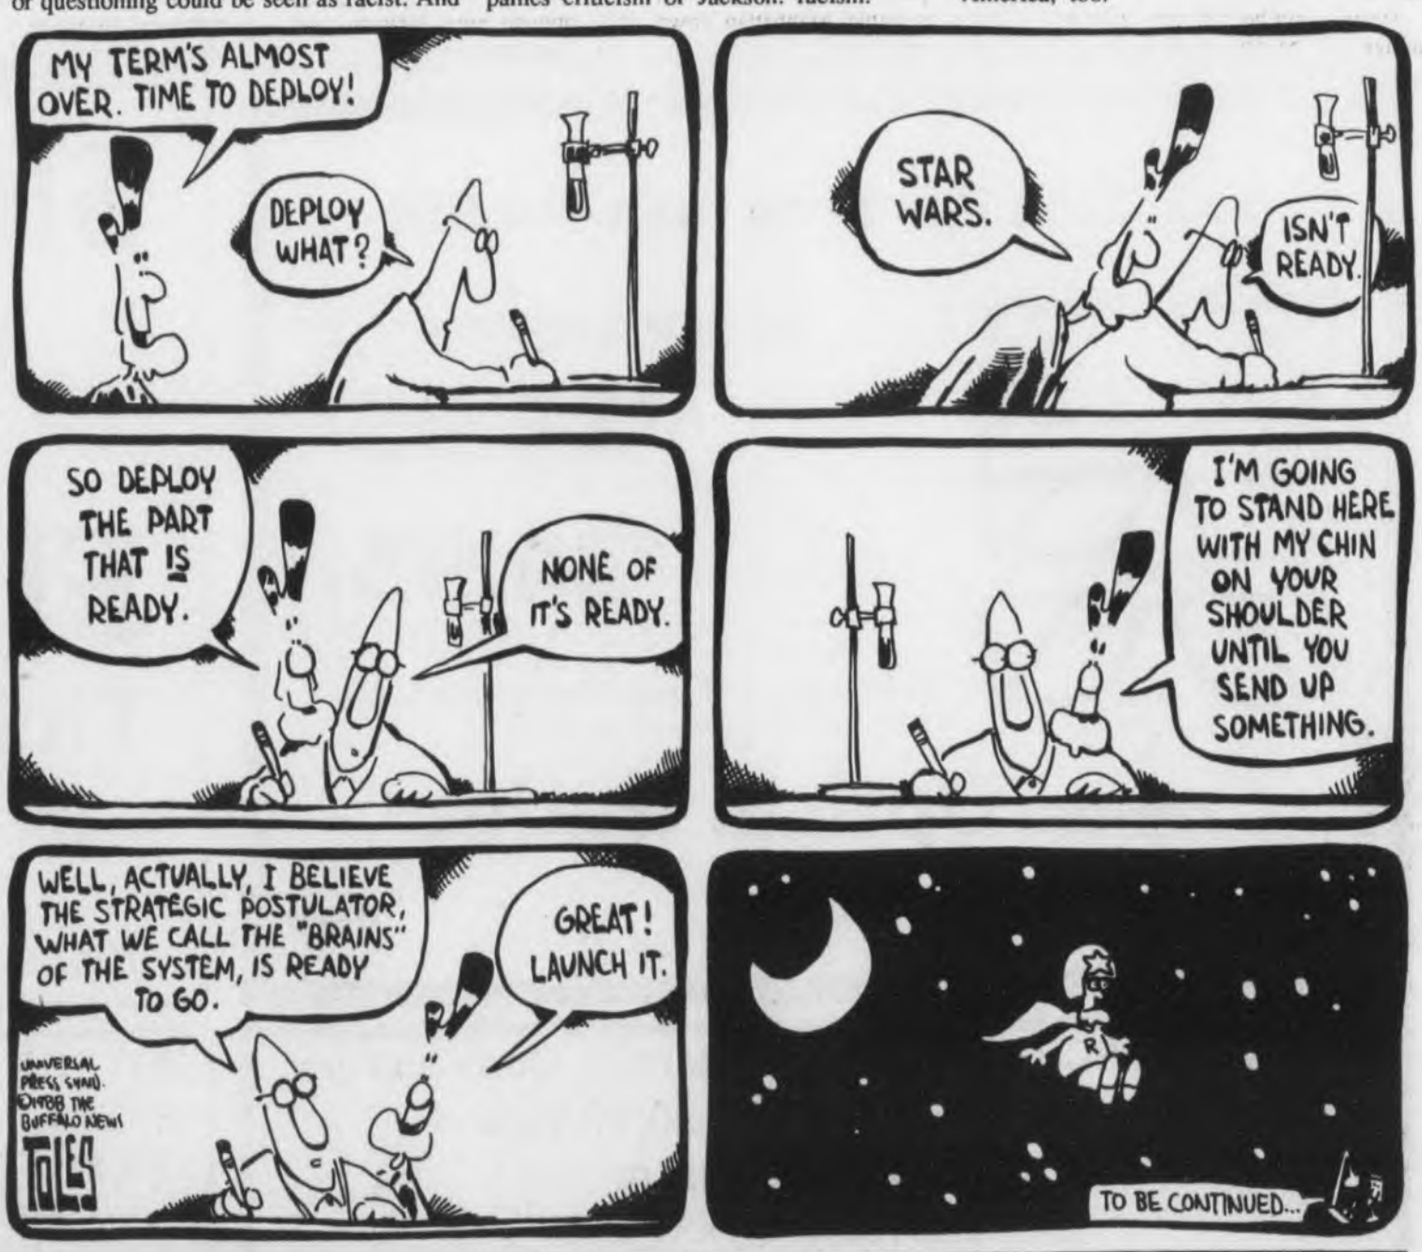
Jackson is a definite contender for the nomination. He has all that it takes to make a serious shot at the presidency of the United States: the broadly appealing campaign, the political connections, the rhetorical talent. And like so many of the candidates this year, Jackson has a questionable past as well. However, the Jackson past is being left alone by Dukakis, the other candidates and — until recently — the press.

One of the scarier things about Jackson running for president is that his past is being allowed to be forgotten, unlike the past of any other presidential candidate. There is an overwhelming fear that any kind of criticism or questioning could be seen as racist. And everyone involved is being careful to avoid racism. So careful, in fact, that many things which would be the center of attention with other candidates are being ignored when it comes to Jackson.

There are many moments in Jackson's past that he would probably prefer to be forgotten. One of the strangest was the "bloody shirt" episode in 1968, one day after the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. Announcing that he had held the dying King in his arms, Jackson appeared on television wearing a blood-stained shirt. By many accounts, the scene was exhibitionist and self-serving. What is more troubling is that, according to many of King's closest followers, Jackson was never with the dying man; many suspect it was all a fabrication.

There have been other controversial moments in Jackson's past, like his association with Louis Farrakhan that tarnished his 1984 campaign but has been almost forgotten in 1988. Since 1986, Jackson has had little to do with the Black Muslim leader, but he has never really explained his association with the man who in 1984 called Hitler "a great man." Farrakhan is one of the most militant black leaders in the country, and Jackson has been quick to distance himself from such controversy.

The incident after King's death, the relationship with Farrakhan and, recently, several errors of fact — these have been largely ignored because of a fear that always accompanies criticism of Jackson: racism.



It is a difficult situation to confront because racism still maintains an ugly presence in America. The most recent example of this was an "Application for Employment to Jesse Jackson's Staff" that was being circulated around the Kansas statehouse as a joke that wasn't very appropriate.

The "application" is full of blatantly racist questions that some anonymous office comic thought might be just tasteless enough to lighten his co-workers' day. The applicant is to answer questions like "How many words can you jive per minute?" or "Circle machines you can operate: 1) Pinball 2) Crowbar 3) Switchblade 4) Trojan Dispenser." The last question is an essay: "In 50 words or less, state your greatest desire in life (other than a white woman)." And then there is a final note: "It is not necessary to attach a photo since you all look alike."

This is the kind of grass-roots criticism that Jackson is receiving, and it is deterring the legitimate questions of character and politics. There are serious questions that need to be addressed, and raising these questions has turned into confusing and serious business for Jackson's critics because of the intrusion of racism.

The New York primary next week could provide an interesting picture of Jackson under fire, or it could be another example of Jackson escaping the flames. In 1984, Jackson gave New York City the label of "Hymietown" and immediately came under fire as a racist and bigot. New York is an important but decidedly Jewish state, and to take it from Dukakis will be a challenge; the huge Jewish vote may be crucial.

But will Jackson earn New York by standing up and defending himself, or will he simply never be asked questions that dig deeply? The question of race is a sensitive one, and no one knows quite how to deal with it. But as Jackson pushes on, people are becoming more and more aware of what Jesse Jackson is all about — and about America, too.

Political views

Editor,

I am writing in regard to using student activity fees to fund student groups that advocate political views. While I may or may not agree with Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights, there are many groups not currently requesting funds that I would definitely not agree with. I wouldn't want my funds spent on these groups.

Most importantly, funding these groups sets a precedent, and eventually these ideological decisions would have to be made in Student Senate (about which groups to fund). I don't think activity fees should be involved in such a case.

Wise spending

Editor,

What political groups is Student Senate going to support next — college Republicans or Democrats? It is already funding Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights, so why not others?

Why not? Because I don't feel I should be told by Senate that I'm going to pay student activity fees to support groups like these. I'm sure many other students feel the same way, yet that's exactly what Senate is doing when it uses part of our fees to fund these groups.

As student fees increase, does that mean the funding for political groups will also increase? Hopefully by then Senate will have found a way to spend our money that is more beneficial to all of us on campus.

Political concern

Editor,

I would like to express my agreement with Bernie Giefer's objection to Student Senate's funding of such groups as Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights.

Funding for groups with political concerns like these should not come from any portion of the student fees we pay each semester. If I am going to spend money on a group of political conviction, I want to be able to choose that group myself and not have Senate do it for me.

Amnesty's aims

Editor,

Re: Bernie Giefer's objections in Friday's Collegian about funding of allocations to the campus organization Amnesty International.

Mr. Giefer seems to be laboring under a misconception as to the aims of Amnesty International. Amnesty International is an avowed non-political human rights organization that works for the release of people imprisoned solely for their beliefs, race or ethnic origin who have neither used nor advocated violence.

Amnesty's success specifically rests on it being perceived as a politically impartial organization. Hence, Mr. Giefer's assertion that Amnesty is politically motivated undermines one of the most basic and effective principles behind Amnesty's existence.

We thank those student senators whose support ensured us funding for the upcoming year and will enable us to continue our efforts to increase human rights awareness. Recently, the efforts of K-State's Amnesty chapter were rewarded with the release of our adopted prisoner of conscience in Yugoslavia.

On April 14, the students and community will have an opportunity to support Amnesty's 1988 campaign (Human Rights Now!), which celebrates the 45th anniversary of the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We are staging a benefit concert in Aggieville featuring four local bands. We encourage all to attend and learn more about Amnesty International.

Manhattan Town Center

A Dynamic 6 Months

ABOVE: Several shops were vacated when local businesses relocated to the Manhattan Town Center. RIGHT: Steve's Floral and The Roundtree Boutique are two of the businesses that have opened on Poyntz Avenue in downtown Manhattan since the mall opened in October 1987.

A reflective look back by businesspeople, city administration and the management of the Manhattan Town Center indicates the mall is alive and well. But mall manager Chris Heavey believes much can and should still be done for the redevelopment of downtown Manhattan.

"The primary indicator we have to look at to see if we are meeting our objectives is the sales tax returns," said James Pearson, assistant city manager for Manhattan.

The objectives were to increase retail sales and retention of retail sales in Manhattan, he said.

"We projected, with the opening of the mall, approximately a $400,000 increase in sales tax revenues," he said. "For the first three months that we have revenue figures during operation of the mall, we are right on target for that estimate of increase."

Heavey, although "not surprised" by the mall's progress, said he believes the mall can do better, even though it is meeting expectations.

"We were surprised at some of our sales during the first six months — they were way above expectations," he said. "On the other side of the coin, we were amazed at what happened when one-third of the military went on maneuvers and spring break occurred and how that affected our business."

Heavey said he believes "a lot of things" can be done with the downtown area.

"The point is, when are we going to do something?" he said. "It's all well and good to come up with a plan, but we're starting to move down the road now and we haven't materialized anything that we're really doing to recruit new business for downtown.

"I am very fed up with the talk because that's exactly what it is," he said. "We need a group of people as strong as the group who brought the mall to fruition to finish the job."

Heavey said there are many plans for the future development of the mall.

"From a market study in 1984, it was determined that this population would really love a Red Lobster (restaurant)," he said. "We went to Red Lobster time and time again to try to get them to come to Manahttan, even if it were not to the Manhattan Town Center."

Heavey said he learned a certain term in college that sums up the mall's relationship with Manhattan: Community center.

"It goes all the way back to the general store, where everybody would come inside and they would have a little of everything. But as we have evolved as an industry, million-square-foot malls have put us in a position that we don't have to be a community center," he said.

On the other hand, Heavey said, Manhattan Town Center — because of its uniqueness, location, involvement with the city government and because of all the people who "sacrificed" to make the mall happen — is part and parcel of the community.

As an example, Manhattan Town Center is sponsoring the Manhattan High School prom and the Boy Scout Jamboree, as well as its weekly community hour.

"If I can't get the community involved in our center, then our businesses will suffer and it will not become a place of comfort for the customer to come inside," Heavey said.

Kathy Cornwell, manager of the Brass Buckle for Guys and Gals, said, "The mall is the only place to be."

Cornwell said she had experienced an increase in sales since moving to the mall and keeps a staff of 21 busy.

Cornwell said she believes the mall needs more promotional events.

"We need to give people a reason to come to the mall even if they don't buy anything," she said.

Funding and taxation of the mall is a point of discussion in many local forums.

"From the outset of the project in 1978, the concept was that the mall be developed without any expense to the taxpayer," Pearson said. That changed when it was decided the taxpayer would pay no more for this project than for any other city project.

"From our perspective, there's no tax increase directly related to the mall," he said.

All acquisitions and relocations were accomplished through grants and other kinds of arrangements, he said. The mall construction was accomplished by the developer.

Prior to the development, there was a "fairly low" established tax base for that area because of the condition of many of the buildings in the development area, Pearson said.

Heavey said unlike a number of restaurants, Red Lobster has a set of demographics, and if the numbers do not fit by population, a restaurant is not built.

"They're still going to have the same management headaches, and their profit margins in this market place will be limited compared to a major metropolitan area," he said.

"We are into serious negotiations with two restaurant concerns for a full line restaurant in the Manhattan Town Center," he said.

He said mall officials are "maybe five steps away" from having a full-line restaurant in the mall, and should have a decision within the next month as to whether it will happen.

Heavey explained a full-line restaurant as having a full bar and entrees at an average price of $7 or $8 and a sit-down lunch at a reduced rate from the evening meal.

A cafeteria-type restaurant in the mall has also been considered, with such possibilities as Wyatt's and Furr's cafeterias, he said.

Heavey said plans are being discussed for a sports-oriented bar targeted at the the crowd more than 25 years of age.

He explained that a mall is designed around women's consumer demands. However, he said, many men don't necessarily enjoy that particular environment for long periods. If there is a place the men can go while the women shop, couples will come to the mall more often, he said.

"It's been proven in other malls ... ," he said. "I don't want to give the impression that I'm trying to create a (Aggie) Station or a Last Chance. That's not what I want.

"If there's anything to compare to what I'm talking about it would probably be (something similar to) a Kennedy's Claim," he said.

Heavey said the Manhattan Town Center is also awaiting announcement of the name of the third anchor store.

"It has not been announced," Heavey said. "We are waiting for an announcement, but until I am told by our organization to release a name, I can't."

Heavey said he is committed to the mall's role in the redevelopment of downtown Manhattan.

"If (the) downtown fails, Manhattan Town Center and all the thoughts fail. We are one with downtown, whether we want to be or not ... and we certainly wish to be," he said.

The area where the mall is located created a base for what Pearson called "tax increment financing," which allows the city or an individual to make improvements. The taxes netted from those improvements go into a separate fund to pay for other improvements such as the streetscape project and the plaza, he said.

The mall is paying the same tax rate as any other business, he said. Its taxes are separated into a base amount, which continues to pay for basic city services, and the increment amount, which is used to pay for other improvements.

Pearson said the mall is actually paying two taxes — its base tax, that amount paid paid by all former businesses that were in the development area and the incremental amount.

"The mall is paying a big chunk of the property taxes in Manhattan," he said. "I don't think there is any basis for anyone to say the mall is creating more taxes for other properties.

"Our commercial retail community is in a state of flux right now and how it ultimately settles down is an unknown," Pearson said.

Heavey said Manhattan Town Center pays a higher tax than any other malls in the states of Kansas, Missouri and Illinois.

"It certainly has affected our leasing negotiations because the people we deal with certainly look at what the variable expenses are they have to face ... and the tax issue comes up again and again," Heavey said.

Clyde Scott, owner and manager of Brown's Shoe Fit Co., said, "Some of the things we expected haven't come to pass — if people park on the east side of the mall, that's as far as they get.

"I'm not anti-mall. The best place to put it was downtown. The mall in Hutchison is outside of town and it hurt downtown."

Bill Boyd, president of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said, "Our objective is to capture the weekend shopping and draw customers within a 30-mile radius of Manhattan."

There are adequate retail dollars available to support all the retail space in Manhattan and the mall, he said.

"If you take the dollars available in the retail market, there's enough for $70 per square foot in annual sales," he said.

The Chamber of Commerce is developing a Retail Development Program and is starting a full-time retail department which will be responsible for promotion of events, he said.

One aspect of the program is a spinoff of K-State athletic events, with goals to sell basketball tickets and increase football ticket sales.

A weekend package of overnight in a motel, shopping and attending the game will be promoted by the Chamber of Commerce, she said.

Douglas Copeland, associate professor of economics and private consultant, said, "If the mall is successful, property taxes should go down; if it fails, property taxes will no doubt go up.

"Manhattan needed the mall, it helps the town's image and gives it an upbeat feeling," he said.

When businesses are optimistic, they "feed upon themselves," becoming more optimistic and expanding and increasing employment, causing an increase in sales tax revenues, he said.

The multiplying effect of dollars spent in the community that would otherwise be spent elsewhere creates an injection in the local economy, Copeland said.

Dollars spent become someone else's income, who then spends part of it and it becomes someone else's income and so on, he said.

The result can be that every dollar spent becomes $2 to $5. It burns itself out over time, but there are still constant injections from outside spending, he said.

"The smartest thing they ever did was to put the mall downtown. Unlike so many other small towns, the Manhattan downtown is being kept up," Copeland said. "In the short term there may be some setback to businesses, but in the long run it will help to bring more business to Manhattan."

Dan Weir, co-owner and commercial property manager for Coldwell Banker Hallmark Home Inc., said the buildings vacated on 4th Street comprise about $60,000 square feet, which equates to about $30,000 a month in rent.

Weir said annual rental costs for commercial property in downtown Manhattan is about $6 dollars a square foot.

"Property owners who are trying to keep their property rented by upgrading it are able to keep their property rented," he said.

"I believe the tenant mix in the downtown area must be supportive of the mall as well as competitive," Weir said. "More and more, everyday people are realizing the value of property downtown.

"I think we'll see some more new businesses in the downtown by next fall," he said.

Auto care essential for car's longevity

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

If your car has a rattle, a squeak, a flat tire or maybe a more complex problem, there are several steps you should take before deciding on an automobile mechanic.

The category of "new cars, used cars and repairs" had the most complaints of all other categories received by the Consumer Protection Agency in Topeka in 1987, said Deanne Peel, special agent with the Consumer Protection Division. This automobile category yielded 532 actual complaints, or 12.2 percent of all complaints filed during that year.

Marilyn White, operations manager for the Better Business Bureau in Topeka, said the first thing a consumer should do when experiencing car problems is to find out what is under warranty.

"An ignition control may have a 50,000-mile guarantee on that part," she said. "You must know what's under warranty."

If the faulty equipment is under warranty, the individual needs to take the car back to the dealer, White said. If not, the consumer should look for a specialist in that particular area.

The most important thing for a consumer to do when taking a car to the shop is to "get everything in writing before the repair is done," Peel said. Car owners should never just leave their vehicles at the shop with instructions to "fix it."

Consumers should also try to obtain an actual cost of the repair expense, not just an estimate, she said. If the charge increases or decreases after the mechanic begins work on the car because of additional or different problems, the business should notify the customer and provide the new cost before the repair is done.

When deciding which repair shop with which to do business, a consumer should find out which have been around for a long time, Peel said. Those businesses are usually more reputable.

Obtaining references from people is a good indication of reliable auto shops, White said. Friends and coworkers can be very dependable sources.

Wilbur Hunter, owner of Parkside Conoco & U-Haul, said he has found this to be true.

"What other people think is very important," Hunter said. "Reputation is everything."

The cleanliness of a shop is also a factor the car owner should be aware of, White said. The way a business takes care of its equipment and establishment is a good indication of how it will take care of your car.

Once a consumers decide on where to take their cars, they can verify whether a mechanic is certified, she said.

Mechanics can be certified through the National Institute for Automotive Service Excellence. This is a non-profit organization that tests mechanics for specific qualities in eight categories. A mechanic may be certified in one or all of the eight categories.

Area service stations and dealerships look at certification differently. Some make it a requirement in hiring mechanics; others don't.

Clay Umscheid, owner of Clay's Auto Service, said he does look at a mechanic's training in the field, but added that he doesn't believe "certification makes a good mechanic."

Umscheid said he has known many worthy mechanics who couldn't answer the questions. His criteria for hiring are based more upon references and honesty.

Experience or training is mandatory in order to get a job at Conoco but certification, though encouraged, is not required, Hunter said. Certified mechanics do receive higher pay, however.

He said he has seen some individuals who are not good mechanics receive high scores on the certification tests and vice versa.

"(Certification) is a guide, but not 100 percent foolproof," Hunter said.

All mechanics at Dick Edwards Ford-Lincoln Mercury Inc. are certified through the Ford Motor Company, said Marvin Simpson, service manager at Dick Edwards.

Certification usually takes about three years, and mechanics must go back to the school once a year to be recertified, he said. This is to keep the Ford mechanics updated on new products and technologies.

They are required to attend at least four schools per year, which are sponsored by the Ford Motor Company, and occasionally view videocassettes relevant to their particular work, Simpson said.

At Dick Edwards, each mechanic is specialized in one or two areas, he said.

Mechanics at Manhattan Honda-Mazda-Toyota are not required to have certification, but do need some experience, said Jo Mauk, service department manager. The auto mechanics are not specialized, but have more of an overall knowledge of the cars.

Other steps consumers should take when having cars repaired are to take along a list of what the mechanics are to look at and to keep records of all the documents involved in the transaction, White said.

Some repairs do have warranties, she said.

If the cost of a repair was not within reason of the estimate, a complaint should be filed, White said.

"We think that estimates should be in the ballpark," she said.

Estimates can be easy on some repairs like an exhaust system or brake job, but in other cases, an exact estimate is not possible, Hunter said.

When it comes to paying for the estimates, the charge depends on the amount of time spent on the estimate, Hunter said. If the estimate is involved and uses specialized equipment, there is a minimum estimate charge of $21.50, or a maximum cost of $27.50.

With repairs now being more complex and involving computerized components, "consumers should be prepared for a staggering bill," Umscheid said.

Since Jan. 1 at Clay's, car owners have been charged one hour of labor — $28.50 — for estimates. If the consumer decides not to get the car fixed, the estimate charge must still be paid, he said.

Umscheid said he gives consumers a high- and low-range estimate and calls them back if he finds another problem.

If car owners do experience problems with an auto shop, they can contact the Better Business Bureau, which takes complaints if an auto repair charge is more than 10 percent of the estimate.

Routine automobile check-ups keep vehicles running smoothly

By Steven Zadina
Collegian Reporter

Before you treat yourself to a day at Tuttle, you should make sure your car will make it there by treating it to a spring maintenance checkup.

A maintenance checkup means more than just checking the oil and making sure the stereo is in perfect tone. Although those are important aspects, there are many things that need to be checked to make your car run better and safer.

Before the summer heat sets in, you should have several things done to your car, said Jim Bellinder, service adviser at Dick Edwards Ford.

Those things include giving your car a basic tuneup, checking the car's electrical system, replacing filters and making any other adjustments to make the car run more efficiently.

Also, hoses and belts should be checked and worn ones replaced, the radiator should be checked for leaks, and the antifreeze level should be checked.

Check the transmission fluid level to see if it is up to par.

The air conditioner should be checked for proper freon level, and a complete air-conditioner tuneup should be done.

It is also a good idea to check your vehicle's alignment. When the car is out of alignment, it can cause your tires to wear unevenly and make the vehicle pull to one side or the other. It is also important to have the correct pressure in your tires — not only in the summer but all year long, both for maximum fuel efficiency and safety.

"A lot of people drive them (their cars) until they break down," Bellinder said. Maintenance-conscious people take care of the vehicles before they break down, he said.

The cost of a summer maintenance check ranges from $40 to $100, depending on the type of car and what needs to be repaired or replaced. This may be a small price to pay, however, compared to what it may cost you if you don't have a proper summer maintenance check done.

If you haven't changed your oil and oil filter in the last 3,000 miles, it's also a good idea to do that now.

It is not necessary to use a different type of oil in the summer than you would in the winter, Bellinder said.

"We just use 40-weight oil when we change oil here all year-round. It's a matter of preference," he said.

These maintenance tips should help keep your car running to Tuttle all summer long, so you don't have to run to Tuttle all summer long.

Community Service Program provides grants

Students awarded for service proposals

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

Two mini-grant proposals formulated by three students have been accepted by the Community Service Program for funding this year.

Evelyn Campbell, senior in horticulture therapy; A.J. Roberts, junior in sociology and gerontology, and Jennifer Siebes, senior in anthropology and gerontology, received the grants.

The Community Service Program, which is designed to promote volunteerism among college students, is in its first funding cycle. The program is funded through a federal grant and money raised from foundations and corporations.

"The program is a way to encourage and offer students opportunities to combine their leadership and organizational skills in their own communities," said Janice Norlin, student coordinator for the mini-grants and junior in political science.

Seven applications were received for the Community Service Program which awards up to $500 for each project.

"We were very pleased with this response, and especially since it came up quickly and caught some people off guard," Norlin said.

Each person or team is required to match the award either with money raised elsewhere, supplies or volunteer time. The program plans to offer the mini-grants four times each year.

With the funding, Campbell will publish a manual to help people in the Midwest plan community gardens. The funds are matched by University for Man.

The manual will be based on Manhattan Community Gardens. The published book will be sold to communities and groups, and income from the project will be used to help support the University for Man and the Manhattan Community Gardens.

Roberts and Siebes worked together to get a grant and will use their grant to increase awareness of employment opportunities within the 55-year-old and older community.

They will work with the Older Kansas Employment Program interviewing 100 older people. They will then act as a referral system, contacting prospective employers for the participants.

Their project is budgeted at $350. Roberts and Siebes will match the grant with volunteer labor.

In order to be eligible, applicants were required to write a full grant proposal, including an abstract, a description of the project and a budget.

"The projects were student initiated, written and implemented," Norlin said.

A committee of one student, one faculty member and a community member reviewed the applications. Awards were based on these judgments.

A maximum of six grants could have been awarded by the committee.

"We felt that two (applications) merited the award this funding cycle," Norlin said. "However, all are welcome to re-apply."

Norlin said the mini-grant program had two goals. One was for students to learn the grant writing process, and the second was to get students involved in a community.

The next funding cycle will begin June 1 with later deadlines of Oct. 1 and Jan. 1.

American music to be discussed

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

American music today and one of its "most versatile" leaders will be dicussed by a panel of four at the Pre-Convocation Forum at 6:30 tonight in Union 206.

Gunther Schuller, music director of the New England Ragtime Ensemble and jazz historian, is "one of the most talented people in American music today and probably the most versatile," said Craig Parker, assistant professor of music and a panelist.

Schuller is an established composer, editor, conductor, author, publisher, educator and lecturer, Parker said.

Schuller will speak at the All-University Convocation at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

He will discuss Schuller and his influence on ragtime.

Schuller revitalized ragtime by re-orchestrating the original instrumental "Red Back Book" and touring with it through Europe. The "Red Back Book" is a collection of Scott Joplin's ragtime, Parker said.

Schuller helped make ragtime popular in the mid-'70s and even before World War I, Parker said.

"Ragtime became incredibly popular," he said. The movie "The Sting," featuring ragtime music, became one of the most popular movies of the mid-'70s.

Harriet Ottenheimer, professor of anthropology and a panelist, will discuss the contribution of blues to jazz.

Ottenheimer said she plans to explain the importance of blues' effect on jazz and how blues influenced the development of jazz in the Kansas City area.

Blues is a major component of jazz, she said.

Schuller was one of the major innovators of the fusing of jazz and European styles of music to form what people refer to as classical music, said Bill McFarlin, executive director of the National Associaton of Jazz Educators and a panelist.

With Schuller's help, this musical fusion evolved into the genre that became known as third stream music, McFarlin said.

"Gunther was very influential in breaking down many of the barriers that existed for jazz because he is so accepted in the jazz world as a composer and a performer," he said.

Schuller spent a majority of his time not only performing jazz, but researching it, McFarlin said.

"Through Gunther's work, the audience of jazz music has significantly expanded," he said.

Jack Carpenter, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, will also be a panelist. He will speak on Schuller's role in classical music.

Suicide may be tied to stabbing deaths

By The Associated Press

NEWTON — Police investigating the stabbing deaths of a Newton couple said Monday the case may have ties to a Sunday suicide in Wichita.

Two people, a man in his 30s and a woman in her 50s, jumped to their deaths from downtown buildings late Sunday afternoon, Wichita police said.

Newton Police Department Detective Bruce Jolliff wouldn't elaborate on the possible link and wouldn t say which of the Wichita suicides might be connected to the Newton case.

The father of Janice Hough discovered her body and that of Lee Richardson, the man with whom she lived, about 5 p.m. Sunday in their Newton home, Police Chief Bill Smith said. Both victims were 24, the chief said.

The glass and screen in the front door had been broken, and blood was found on the glass, Smith said. But, he said, robbery was not a motive.

Sooners win last game of series, 12-6

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Oklahoma Sooners picked up their third win in a four-game series with K-State, beating the Wildcats, 12-6, Monday afternoon in the final game of two schools' Big Eight Conference series.

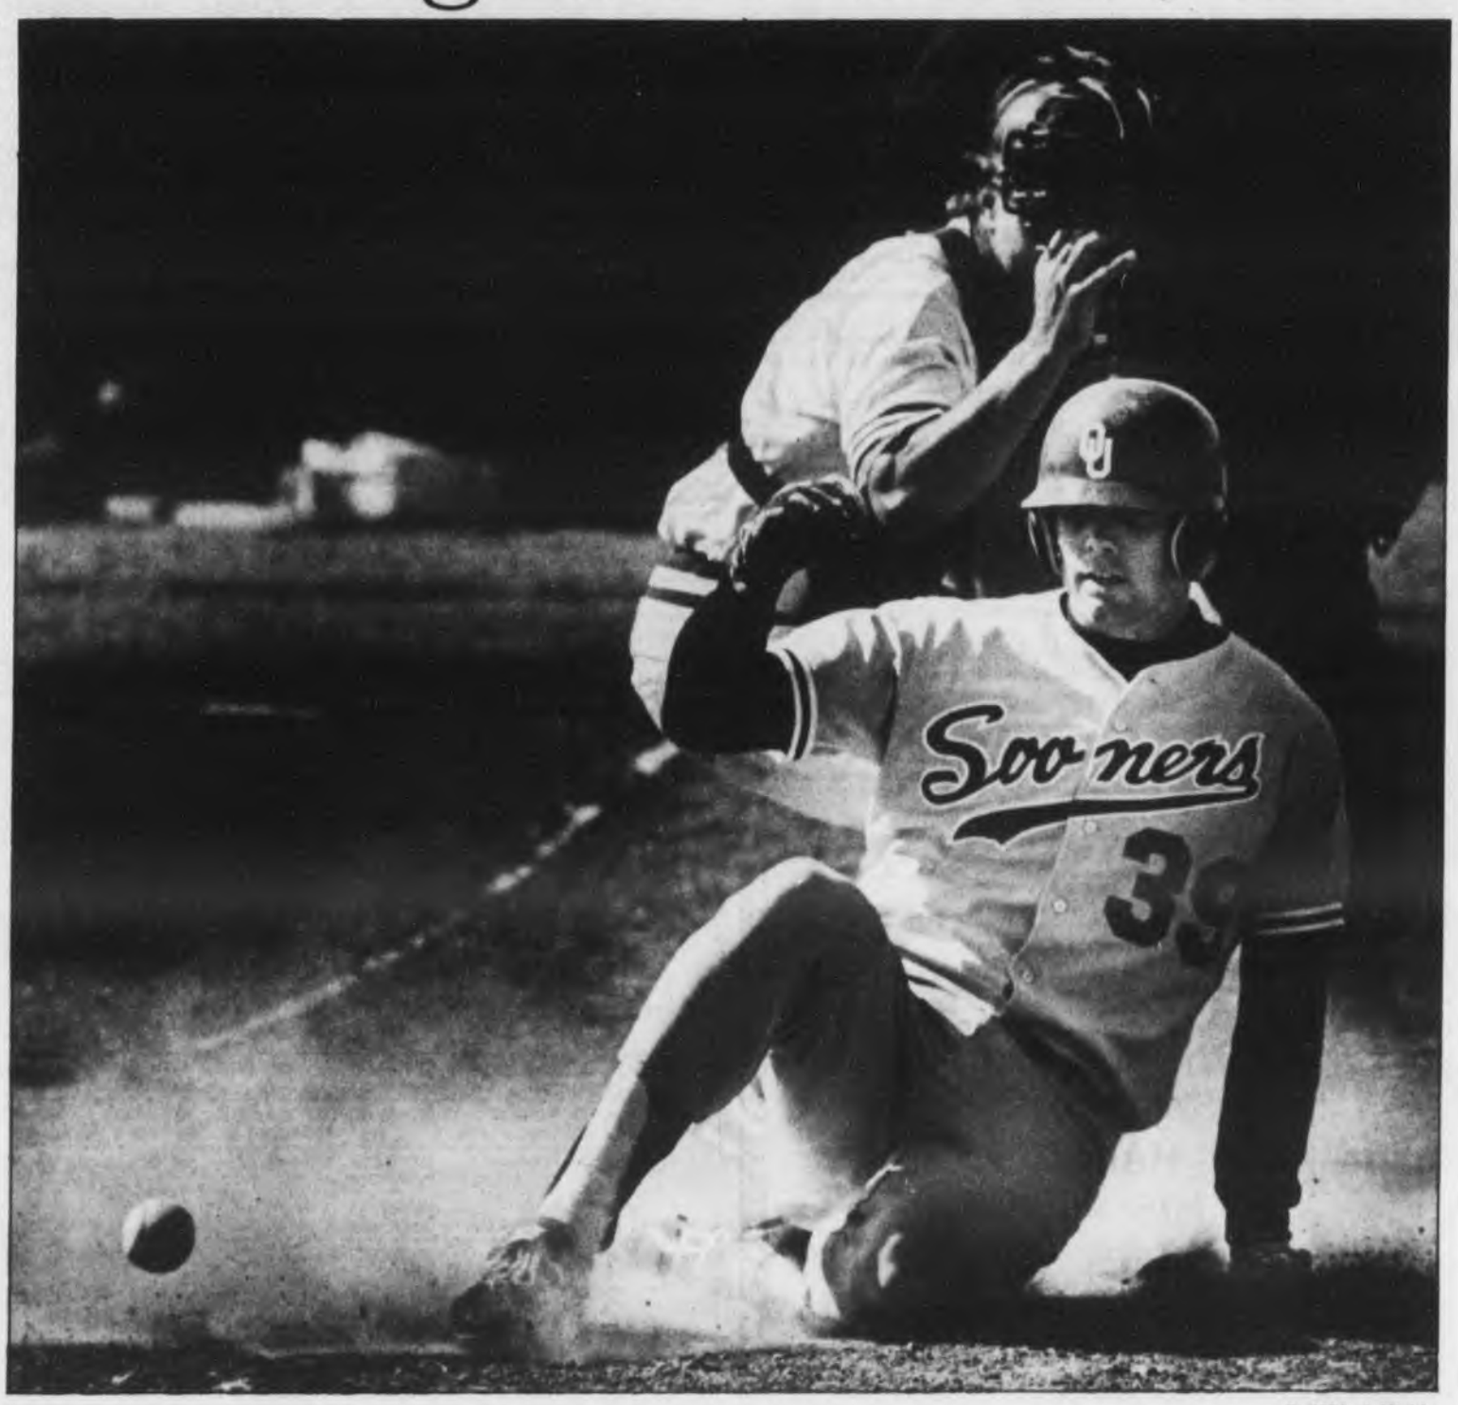
Oklahoma jumped out to an 8-0 lead before K-State pushed across two runs in the bottom of the fifth inning. The closest the 'Cats could come was 9-5 after seven.

However, Oklahoma added three insurance runs in the ninth inning and OU freshman pitcher Kevin King picked up his second win in relief in two days.

"They hit the ball well. When a team comes out and hits the ball well there's not much you can do about it," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "We made some good pitches that they hit. Darryl Rowley threw a lot better today and showed me some things that I was looking for."

Jim Donohue drove in three runs for the 'Cats and Scott Spangenberg added two RBI's.

Offensively for the Sooners, designated hitter Wade Inman was 3-4 at the plate and scored two runs. Catcher Darron Cox also contributed the OU's cause, going 2-3, scoring two runs and driving in two runs.



Bill Schafer suffered his second loss of the season to go with five wins for K-State. Oklahoma roughed up three K-State pitchers for 15 hits, including seven doubles.

"I didn't see a lot of things done bad other than they (OU) hit the ball extremely well. There are going to be games like that.

"We were hoping to get at least a split after the situation we put ourselves in. There is nothing we can do about the past, so all we can do is get ready for the future and work on our mistakes."

The 'Cats will not play again until Friday when they will travel to Lawrence to face the Kansas Jayhawks.

Fite Nite revisited

Commentary

BILL LANG
Sports Writer

You just sit there waiting.

Waiting and just thinking of what is about to happen. You run through your mind thinking of every move. Hoping that tonight, just this night, could be your lucky night.

You've spent hours preparing, months preparing for this moment knowing full well that at any given moment it could be over. Over for yourself or your opponent.

Then it happens. The lights go out and you're waiting at the top of a flight of stairs. Spotlight beams are flying around and then they suddenly focus on you as you make your way toward the ring. Adrenalin is coarsing through your veins and the hunger for the moment is only increasing with every step closer to the ring.

You step into the ring and it hits like a ton of bricks. The bright lights, the crowd noise, the guys in your corner yelling instructions at you. Then the ringing of the bell.

For a moment you're frozen in the moment. You don't know what the hell you're doing here and you think for just a brief second that you might have made a mistake doing it. Then something inside you snaps you back to the reality of what you are about to do. You see your opponent and you go after him.

You don't hear the crowd at this

Oklahoma beats netters

After losing 9-0 to nationally-ranked Oklahoma State Sunday, the K-State women's tennis team needed a victory Monday against Oklahoma.

Instead, just the opposite of what the Wildcats wanted to happen ended up taking place. In a fashion similar to that against OSU, K-State lost 9-0 to OU.

"We're dissappointed with both matches," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "Oklahoma State, of course, has an excellent team and deserves the ranking, but against OU we should have come away with some points."

At No. 3 doubles, K-State freshmen Miste Bitner and Thresa Burcham were the bright spots for the Wildcats, as they narrowly lost to Oklahoma's Julie Vaughn and Bernadette Brennan 5-7, 6-4, 6-4.

"Miste and Thresa showed great leadership," Bietau said. "They took charge of the situation and surprised everyone."

With the loss, K-State falls to 1-3 in the Big Eight Conference and 6-7 overall in dual matches. The Wildcats next action will be Saturday when they travel to Colorado College for a noon match. On Sunday, K-State returns to Big Eight play when the 'Cats travel to Boulder to take on Colorado.

Golf team in sixth at invite

K-State's women's golf team stands sixth out of nine teams after the first 36 holes of action in the Husker Women's Golf Invitational being contested in Lincoln, Nebr. at the Par 71, 5,818-yard Mahoney Golf Course.

K-State fired 18-hole rounds of 352-336 for a team score of 688 after the first day of play. Big Eight Conference foe Iowa State leads the field with a 622 total entering today's final round of 18 holes.

Individually for the Wildcats, freshman Chris Adams tallied rounds of 84-83 for a 167 total to lead the team. Another freshman, Keli Blake, followed at 89-80—169. Other K-State scores included Jill Zientara 85-85—170; Beth Holmberg 94-88—182; and Corey Harlow 97-93—190.

Iowa State's Traci Burgess is the leading individual after the first 36 holes with rounds of 76-76 for a 152 total.

"I am real pleased with the team's effort," K-State coach Rob Sedorcek said. "Everyone improved. I think the 336 is our lowest round of the year. This should be a big confidence builder for us."

Action concludes today with the final round which is set to begin at 8 a.m.

Rugby club wins tournament

K-State's club side rugby team improved its record to 6-2-1 overall by capturing the title at a tournament played Saturday and Sunday in Omaha, Neb.

In its tournament win, the club side avenged an earlier loss to Omaha and defeated Des Moines in overtime to capture the title. In its first-round game, K-State hammered the Golden Goats 20-3, and whipped Omaha 20-6 in the semifinals. Neither the Goats or Omaha scored a try against K-State in those games.

Against Des Moines, a 40-meter penalty kick into a stiff wind sent the match into overtime after K-State had led 4-0 early in the game. Then Kevin Wagner's 60-meter play and Gregg Barnes' conversion in overtime gave K-State a six-point advantage and it held on for the win.

Nerves Rive's biggest problem

Florida native enjoying K-State

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

Curtain opens, narrator addresses audience:

"What brings a talented tennis player, born in the Caribbean and raised in the sunny climate of Florida to the unlikely campus of K-State?"

Enter stage left K-State coach, Steve Bietau, the man whom the answer centers around — along with a little help from the University of Louisville and Mother Nature herself.

Enter stage right the talented player whom Bietau convinced to come to K-State. After graduating from John I. Leonard High School in Lake Worth, Fla. and attending Florida State University, Valerie Rive' was on the verge of signing a letter of intent to play collegiate tennis with the Louisville Cardinals — until he convinced her otherwise.

"I had an offer from the University of Louisville and I had my mind made up to go there," Rive' said. "I had the letter of intent and I was ready to sign it, but Coach Bietau is very persuasive. He kept calling me and everything to get me to go here instead. There were a few mix-ups with Louisville and I just changed my mind at the last minute."

It seems only natural that Rive', who was born into a tennis family, would wield a racquet and compete on the clay courts of Florida.

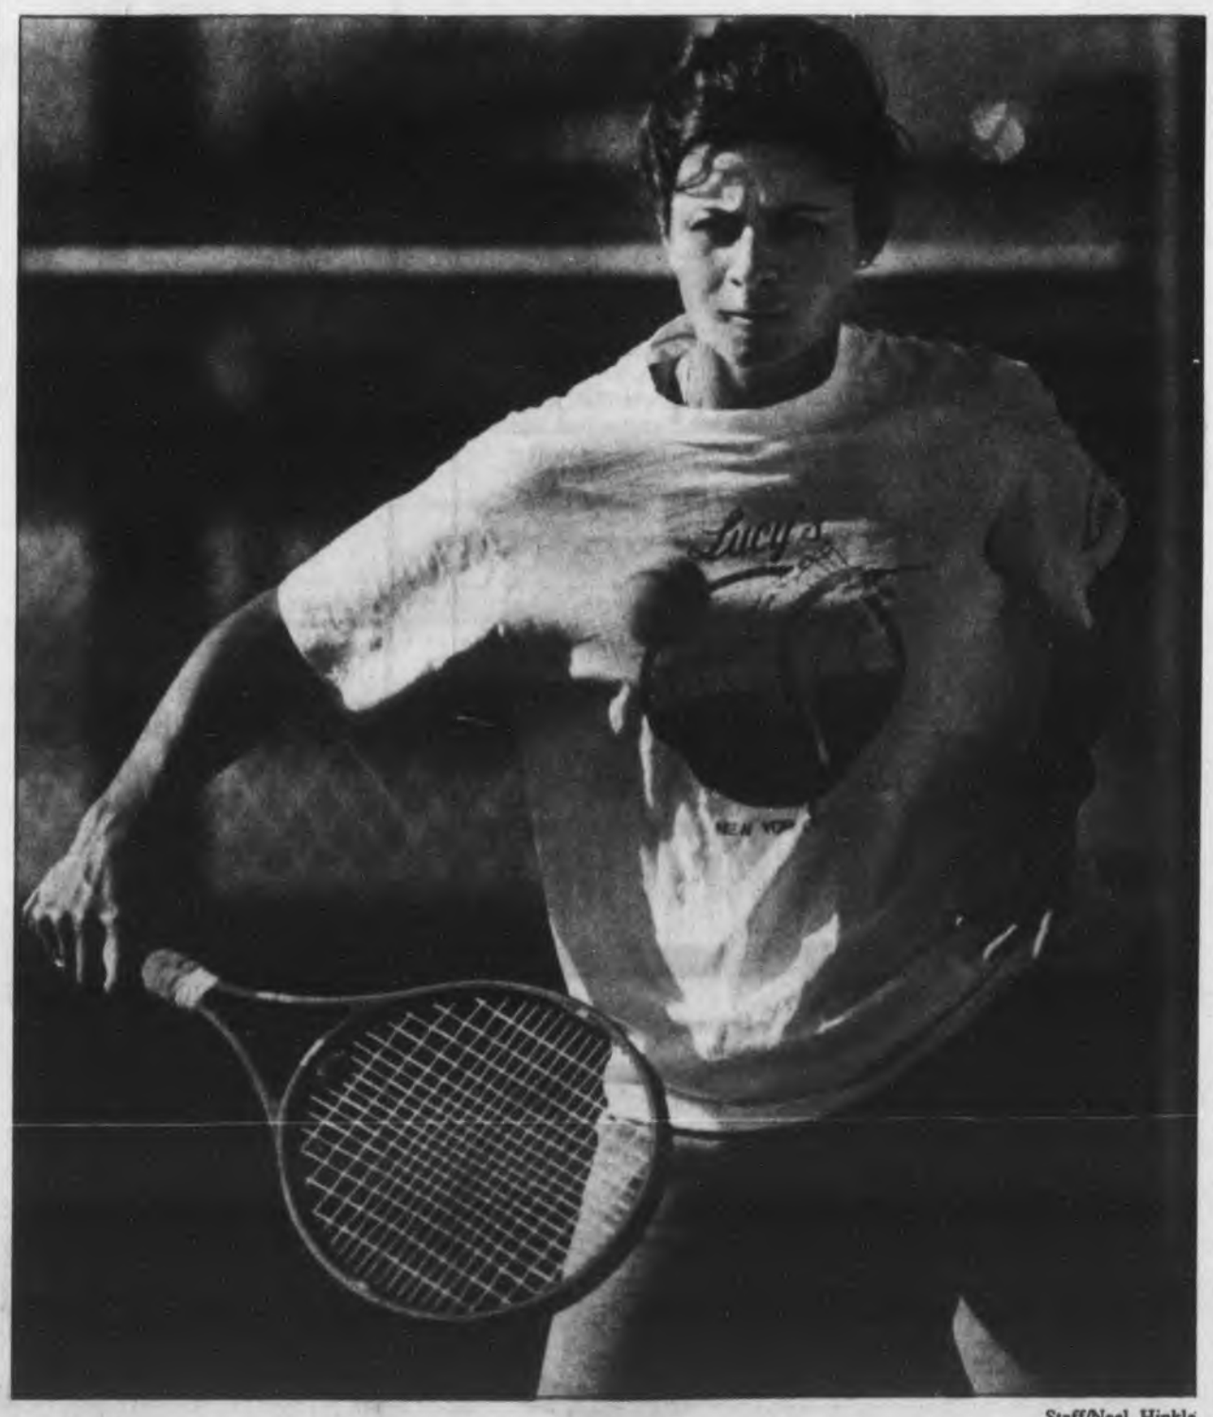
Rive's father is an active tennis coach who once led Palm Beach Junior College to a national championship. Her brother is a strong player in the professional circuit and is ranked by the USTA as one of the top 50 players in the world.

Never having seen snow before except in the movies, Rive' was looking forward to winter and 'Frosty the Snowman' her first semester at K-State.

"I had never seen snow until I came here," Rive' said. "It is really nice when it snows. I like it, but everyone thinks I'm crazy. I had never had a pair of boots before coming to K-State."

Rive' is teamed with Marijke Nel at the No. 2 doubles position. Her strongest point in tennis is her ability to play doubles very well, Bietau said. Doubles is considered to be one of the toughest aspects of tennis for players to learn beyond the basic fundamentals of the game itself.

"I'm pretty strong in doubles — especially serving and volleying in doubles," Rive' said. "My weak point is my serve. It needs a lot of help. We've been working on it, but it's tough to get down."



Even though Rive' said she has been using her head more, improved her consistency on the court this season and developed more confidence in her own abilities, there is still one problem she has yet to overcome.

"I never know when it's going to come up but I get a battle of the nerves on the court," she said. "I don't know what brings it on. I've been trying a lot of mental techniques to try and get over it, but it is going to take a while."

Stomach butterflies aren't the only obstacle Rive' has had to learn to contend with on the playing surface. The gusty Kansas winds play havoc with the fragile tennis balls as they sail across the net with fierce velocity, making it difficult for even the best competitiors to control the ball.

Other players might complain

ROTC chapter members earn national awards

Scholastic achievements help cadets gain honors

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

Two top national honors have been given to the members of the Arnold Air Society squadron, a community service organization for ROTC cadets.

The K-State chapter, one of 150 in the nation, was named Outstanding Arnold Air Society squadron. Also, Kip Mussatt, sophomore in electrical engineering, was selected as the Society's Outstanding Sophomore.

Mussatt was also chosen the Outstanding Sophomore in the K-State squadron and was named the area winner. The K-State area consists of squadrons from Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska. Each of the 16 area winners were eligible for the national award.

"I didn't expect to win at the area level, so I was speechless when I found out about the national award," Mussatt said.

The award is based on the member's academic standing and actives in the Society. Mussatt is the Society's campus commander and is a Master Sergeant in the Air Force ROTC.

He is responsibile for overseeing projects and ensuring their completion. One activity Mussatt organized this year is the group's fund raising project of cleaning the stadium after home football games.

Mussatt also helped to organize a benefit dinner for the Vietnam War Memorial which featured Gov. Mike Hayden.

"Everybody else supported me a lot," Mussatt said. "If it wasn't for everybody doing their job, things wouldn't have gotten done."

The squadron competed in the same three-state area as Mussatt for its national award. Its selection was based on community service projects.

The 48-member squadron was involved in 32 projects over the past year, said Capt. John Taglieri, the organization's adviser.

He said the organization works at the campus bloodmobile, hosts a breakfast for senior citizens and sponsors a Big Brothers and Big Sisters activity.

"I think the clincher for us winning the award was our work on the Vietnam Memorial," Taglieri said.

The group is trying to raise money for a Memorial that will be constructed on campus.

About half of the $20,000 needed for the memorial has been raised.

point. You just see your opponent and then it happens. ...Wham! A right hook lands to the side of you're head and you feel everything rattle.

It's not a good feeling.

You take your swing and it lands on his head. It feels good at the time. It's sort of a little revenge.

You feel the anger rushing through you and all you feel is hatred for the guy who just hit you again on the side of the head. You go after him and then ... you're sitting on the canvas saying to yourself: "I must be some kind of crazy S.O.B. for doing this."

You get back up and re-group your thoughts as the referee gives you the standing eight-count. It's not exactly going as you planned. But then again how the hell does one plan a fight. One just has to "roll with the punches," so to speak.

You go after him again, hoping all the while you can take more of the punishment. You get a few blows in and then ... it's over. You finally realize it's over. The official has called the fight in favor of your opponent. It hurts to lose early in the fight.

You meet your opponent in the middle of the ring and you realize just how much he hated doing what he did. You offer to buy him drink afterwards and you joke around a little bit, too. It was a brief short fight, but you realized you just got done with getting your brains getting knocked in.

You don't seem to mind and you go back home thinking: "I'll be back next year — after I drop about 30 pounds and get into a lighter weight class."

about the wind, but Rive' has made the best of it and said it has helped her improve her game immensely.

"The wind has added a lot to my game," she said. "I have a lot more fight in me. In the wind it comes down to whoever fights the hardest, so in that aspect it has helped me a lot."

Fighting for positions has become a commonplace for the K-State players this season as there is little difference in abilities from the No. 1 spot down to the No. 6 position on the team.

"Our whole team is so even and I think I could play anywhere," Rive' said. "With the addition of the two freshmen, we have improved a lot in our depth. We have always had a pretty good team morale.

"I wanted to play in the top three and I think its best for me right now to play where I'm playing at. I have a good chance to win a lot of matches where at No. 1 it would be a lot harder, she added.

"This year I would like to establish a winning record in the Big Eight (Conference) and get a seed at the conference tournament and do as well as I can at the conference tournament," she said. "Next year and the year after I would like to establish myself as a player to contend with. When people see me I want them to think 'oh my gosh.'" tance to the audience, his friends "and a few enemies" and put in a fervent plea for an end to the strike by movie and TV writers, which has stalled production and disrupted preparations for the Oscar show.

The best original movie song of 1987 was "The Time of My Life" from "Dirty Dancing."

The first prize of the night, for best visual effects, went to "Innerspace," a Steven Spielberg-produced fantasy about a test pilot reduced to microscopic size and accidentally injected into the body of a grocery clerk.

The award for best animated short film went to "The Man Who Planted Trees." "Young at Heart" was best documentary short subject, and "The Ten-Year Lunch: The Wit and Wisdom of the Algonquin Roundtable" was best documentary feature.

More than 1,000 movie fans had packed bleachers hours in advance to cheer celebrities arriving at the Shrine Auditorium for the ceremonies, where much of the excitement focused on whether Cher would triumph as best actress.

Many in the crowd wore shorts and T-shirts, ready for temperatures that rose into the 90s. But the most visible of the lot were seven 30ish women with teased blond hair. They carried rubber daggers and wore long white dresses with "Fatal Attraction" printed on the chest in red.

"We're pulling for Glenn Close to win," one of the women said in referring to the actress's nomination for her portrayal of the vengeful spurned lover in that movie.

In the best acting sweepstakes, most observers thought Michael Douglas, who portrayed the ruthless inside trader of "Wall Street," would be the choice of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

But the actress category sparked the most interest this year, with many critics predicting academy members would pick Cher for her role as a widow who discovers love in the hit comedy "Moonstruck." Miss Close was a strong contender, as was Sally Kirkland.

'Wheel' brings fortune to K-Stater

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

"I'll take a S,R,T,N,L and an E."

Vanna then began to turn around America's most familiar five consonants and one vowel appearing in the "Wheel of Fortune" bonus round puzzle. For Jim Roberts, senior in electrical engineering, winning a new car hinged on the 15 seconds he had to solve the puzzle in front of him.

The puzzle "T-E -ER-E-T -R--E" appeared on the board and the clock began to tick away.

Roberts muttered, "Perfect, perfect ... the perfect crime."

"Yes," said Pat Sajak as Roberts nearly collapsed on stage. He was taking home the $13,530 Mazda MX6 sport coupe.

"This is the main reason I went — I wanted the car," he said.

Roberts wants to give a special thanks to the program.

"I wanted to put PERFECT CRIME on the license plate, but it won't fit, so I'll probably put THX WOF (Thanks 'Wheel of Fortune')," Roberts said.

But before someone can receive prizes won on the show, an accountant determines the taxes that must be paid on the merchandise. There is also a rule in which prizes can be forfeited, and it's just like the prize was never won, so taxes don't have to be paid.

"It's essentially like having a job in California in which one has to pay taxes," Roberts said.

After the taxes are paid, the "Wheel of Fortune" notifies the different companies to start sending out prizes.

Roberts will get his car this summer when he goes back to California.

With the win, Roberts was also guaranteed of at least one more appearance on the daytime game show that airs at 10 a.m. on cable channel 4 and 11:30 a.m. on channel 27. This second appearance will air today.

Roberts said the story of how he got involved with "Wheel of Fortune" is complicated.

His parents moved to California last year, and at the end of last summer she got Roberts an appointment to audition for the show. Roberts said his parents also auditioned.

To audition, 50 candidates for the show go into a classroom and are given five minutes to solve 15 puzzles in three different categories, he said.

The 50 contestents are then cut to 20. Simulated games are played and the field is reduced to about five, Roberts said.

His mother was cut after the first round, but Roberts and his father made it to the final five. In the end, his father was also cut, he said.

The officials at the audition said that if accepted, the contestant will get a call or a letter from them. Then the contestants must let the officials know when they will be in the Los Angeles area to be on the show.

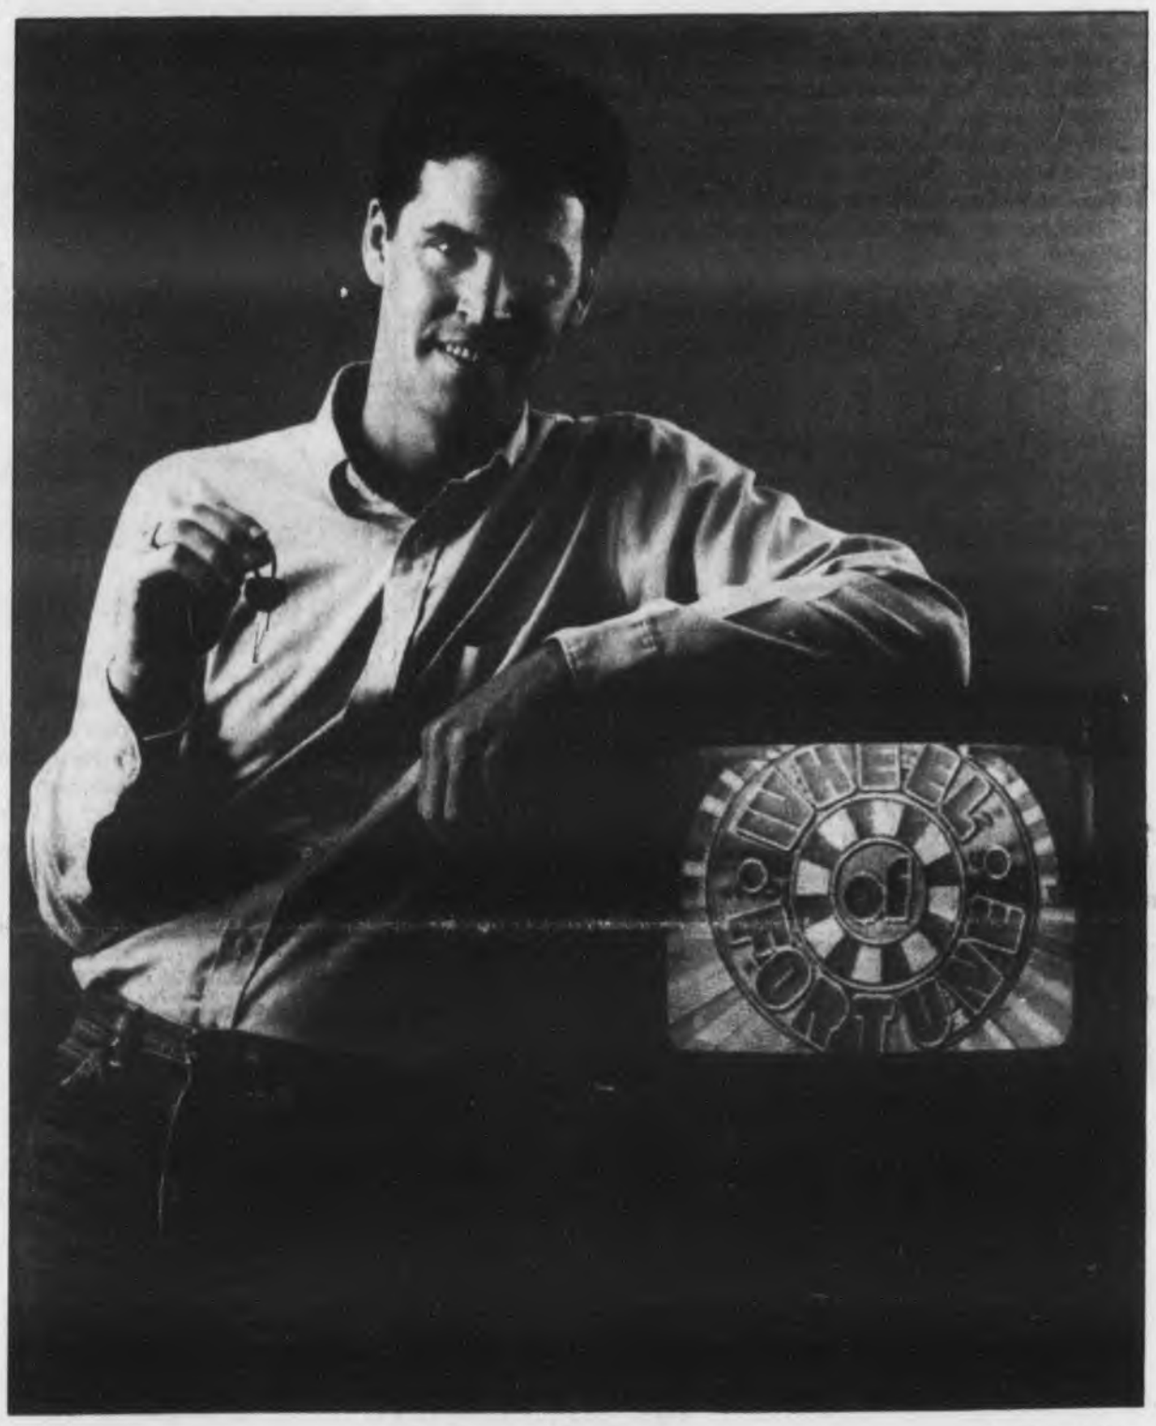
When he got back from California, Roberts said he had received a notification letter informing him that he had been accepted as a contestant.

The letter said that Roberts had one year to appear on the show and to notify the program about when he could appear.

"And the rest is history, as they say," Roberts said.

Roberts was impressed with the "Wheel of Fortune" cast and crew.

"Everyone was so nice and so up," he said."The first day I was really nervous and after I won my car, I figured I've got my car so I can relax now."



There is a rule that contestants can't talk to any of the cast or crew before or during tapings, except in situations when a contestant wins the bonus prize, he said.

But Roberts did run into Vanna White before the show.

"I was out in the hallway of the studio and Vanna came running out of wardrobe," he said. "I whipped around and Vanna caught the back of my shoulder.

"So she almost fell down and it would have been my fault if she would have broken an arm or a leg," Roberts said.

During the daytime version of "Wheel of Fortune", contestants can be on for a maximum of three times, providing they win the first two days.

Staff/Greg Vogel
Jim Roberts, senior in electrical engineering, is now the owner of a new Mazda MX6 that he won on the "Wheel of Fortune." Roberts appeared Tuesday and will compete again on today's broadcast.

Hijacked plane lands in Algeria

By The Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — A hijacked Kuwaiti jumbo jet carrying at least 30 hostages flew from Cyprus to Algeria this morning, but the gunmen denied they would give up the plane.

The aircraft touched down at 3:07 a.m. local time (10:07 p.m. EDT Tuesday).

The Boeing 747 left Larnaca, Cyprus after the Shiite Moslem gunmen freed 12 more passengers in what they called a gesture of goodwill. The hijackers have killed two passengers during the grim nine-day odyssey.

Akis Fantis, a spokesman for the Cyprus government, told reporters "sources in Algiers" gave assurances that the gunmen would give up the hostages and plane there, but one of the hijackers denied it.

He said by radio just before takeoff: "We deny what has been reported by radios and by the media that we are ready to hand the plane to anyone. We refuse to do that, until martyrdom." He did not mention the hostages.

Police surrounded the brightly lit VIP lounge at Algiers' Houari Boumedienne airport. Squads of motorcyle police, normally used as escorts, stood by along with ambulances, fire trucks and police cars.

Algerian Interior Minister El Hadi Khediri and Information Minister Bachir Rouis were at the airport. Three members of the permanent Palestine Liberation Organization mission in Algiers entered the VIP lounge then were spirited into a guarded sideroom.

Senate allocates little to Sports Club Council after extended debate

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate followed its finance committee's recommendation and voted Tuesday to give the Sports Club Council $876.80 of the $11,743.57 it had requested.

Each of the seven sports clubs under the council had its requests evaluated individually. The rugby team was the first considered, and three amendments were proposed to its recommended allocation. All three amendments failed.

The debate focused on the limited amount of money available this year as well as what the role of Sports Club Council should be.

"If we're funding them as a competitive team, that's not our responsibility — it's the administration's," said Todd Johnson, agriculture senator.

"We can't fund them well enough to make them competitive," said

Musical composer to deliver jazz lecture

By The Collegian Staff

Musical composer Gunther Schuller will deliver the final All-University Convocation Series lecture of the semester at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

Schuller, who has composed more than 130 compositions, will deliver an address titled "Jazz: America's Homegrown Contribution to World Music." The lecture is open to the public.

An informal question-and-answer session will be from 8:30 a.m. to 10:20 a.m. in McCain 104.

Schuller is the music director for the New England Ragtime Ensemble, with which he is currently touring. His compositions, which often mix classical and jazz elements, range from symphonies and operas to jazz.

He has edited the music of Bach, Duke Ellington, Charles Ives and Scott Joplin.

Schuller, an author as well as publisher, lecturer and educator, has written three books. His most recent book, "Musings: The Musical World of Gunther Schuller," was published in 1986. He will soon issue part two of his history of jazz.

Air Force ROTC program reinstated

Re-evaluation to occur after 2-year probation

By Janet Swanson
Campus Editor

In January K-State's Air Force ROTC students were told that the program would be closing after the spring 1989 semester, and underclassmen would have to transfer to another university that offers the program to complete it.

But Monday all of that changed.

In an unexpected move, the Secretary of the Air Force reversed a Jan. 27 decision to close 37 universities' Air Force ROTC programs.

"In light of some objections from congressmen and universities, the Secretary suspended the ruling and put the 37 programs on a probationary status for two years. At the end of the two years he asked that the programs be re-examined," said Lt. Col. Richard Brown, professor of aerospace studies.

"The reasons for closure were reasonable reasons. Cost had been a problem," Brown said.

The closures were ordered to reduce the number of Air Force officers being trained and to save the Air Force about $10 million a year.

Although the original order would have closed the Department of Aerospace Science, no visible effort was made by K-State or Kansas congressmen to have the order overturned, Brown said.

"There was not a significant lobbying effort made. It was a low-key effort by choice," he said. "They chose not to create a fuss about it."

The closures were reversed, Brown said, because the program's administrators were not told what they were being evaluated on.

"The primary consideration was cost. But there wasn't any warning on the evaluation. ...We all have the same fixed costs. However, the cost per graduating student is higher here than it would be at universities with larger programs," Brown said.

Universities such as Cornell, Texas A&M Univeristy, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute could have about 75 or 100 students who could qualify to be a junior each year, he said.

Once a cadet qualifies to be a junior academically, they must be selected on a national level and that selection process is getting tougher, Brown said.

The national Air Force ROTC program has been requested to reduce officer production by 15 percent during the 2-year period.

In the past, about 4,300 cadets were approved as juniors each year. The reduction will result in the approval of only about 3,700 cadets yearly.

In addition to improving recruiting, Brown said the department will have to prove that the program is strong during the probation period.

"We have to show that we can survive on a Kansas market. We aren't in a largely populated area, and most of our students are from Kansas. We have to show that we have a strong, viable program," he said.

However, some of the problems that almost brought about the program's closure could still keep it from succeeding during it's probation. And Brown isn't so sure those problems can be overcome.

Brown has scheduled a meeting with Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, and William Feyerharm, assistant dean of arts and sciences and associate professor of English, to discuss changes that should be made during the probationary period.

"Our most serious problem is that since mid-January we have not done any recruiting for cadets. We didn't want to attract them to a program that would lead them somewhere other than K-State. Recruiting is something we should be doing all year," Brown said. "But, we wanted them interested in K-State."

Now, he said, department members will have to get back in touch with all of the high school seniors who had been interested in the Air Force ROTC program, and tell them that the program will be offered. This job will be made tougher by the summer staff reduction that was done in anticipation of the program's closure.

"The department was cut back for the summer. Three officers and one enlisted member of the staff are leaving, and they have already been re-assigned. It's a situation that can't be relieved that easily," Brown said.

That cutback will leave the staff with two officers and one enlisted member.

But Bosco is not certain the U.S. Marine killed in Panama

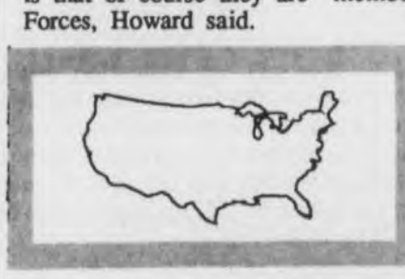
PANAMA CITY, Panama — A Marine sentry was killed at an American military facility, and U.S. officials said he apparently was caught in crossfire between fellow guards on a night search for intruders.



A Pentagon spokesman in Washington said the identity of the intruders was not known, but members of the Panamanian Defense Forces are thought to have slipped into the facility before.

A spokesman for the U.S. Southern Command in Panama said there was "no reason at all at this time to suspect" that the Panamanian military was involved in Monday's shooting. He said it appeared to be an accident.

The disaster was the second to befall U.S. troops in Panama on Monday. Earlier, two helicopters collided on a runway at another base about 50 miles away, injuring eight soldiers.

The Pentagon spokesman, Dan Howard, said there have been a series of intrusions at Howard Air Force Base in the past several weeks by "individuals who were uniformed and camouflaged."

"When one has intruders into the base perimeter, who are in uniform and are camouflaged, the assumption that one comes to is that of course they are" members of the Panamanian Defense Forces, Howard said.

Byrd to resign party position

WASHINGTON — Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd announced Tuesday he will not seek re election to the party post he has held for a dozen years, touching off a wide-open race to succeed him.

The 70-year-old West Virginian said he will run for a sixth Senate term and, if elected and the chamber remains under Democratic control, assume the chairmanship of the Senate Appropriations Committee. He also would likely become Senate president pro tempore, the post reserved for the most senior majority member.

Stock market reaches new high

NEW YORK — The stock market hit a post-crash high Tuesday in its sixth straight advance, helped by a late wave of computerized buying.

The Dow Jones industrial average surged to close firmly above the 2,100 mark for the first time since the stock market collapsed almost six months ago. Computer-triggered buy programs, a firmer dollar and rebounding bond prices all were credited with spurring the advance.

Arizona recall election cancelled

PHOENIX, Ariz. — The Arizona Supreme Court on Tuesday ordered the cancellation of the May 17 gubernatorial recall election because its target, former Gov. Evan Mecham, has already been removed from office.

The high court, in a 4-1 decision, ordered acting Secretary of State Karen Osborne to cancel the election.

Mecham Recall Committee founder Ed Buck, who had favored holding the election anyway, said he felt both disappointment and relief.

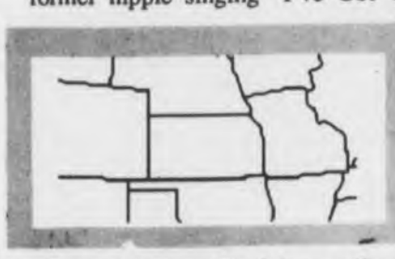
Amtrak collisions kill five

CHICAGO — Amtrak train No. 392 left Carbondale at mid-afternoon as usual, but when it pulled into Chicago's Union Station about seven hours later, five people were dead after two collisions with the locomotive, authorities said Tuesday.

A young Southern Illinois couple and two of their children died Monday when their car turned off a parallel road near Effingham and crossed the track in front of the train about 90 minutes into its run, police and Amtrak officials said.

About 3½ hours later, a 20-year-old woman was killed when her car skirted horizontal crossing gates and struck the train near Kankakee, about 60 miles south of Chicago, officials said.

"You don't forget things like this. ...You get the shakes," said engineer T.B. Parker, who was operating the train when the second crash occurred.



Sonny Bono becomes mayor

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — Sonny Bono, the singer turned restaurateur who rose to fame singing "I've Got You Babe" to ex-wife Cher, was elected mayor of this desert resort Tuesday.

Bono easily won the seven-way race with 4,842 votes, while accountant Lloyd Maryanov was second with 2,498, city spokeswoman Julie Baumer said. Businesswoman Deyna Hodges had 1,934 votes and Vice Mayor Eli Birer, 1,140. Three other active candidates trailed far behind.

"This has just been a very active election. When you get that many people running there's a lot of interest," said Patty Bode, assistant city clerk, who estimated turnout at 55 percent.

Bono, 53, rose to fame as the furry-vested, bell-bottomed former hippie singing "I've Got You Babe" with Cher.

Summer programs planned

Eight summer programs have been designed by the faculty for high school students to offer opportunities to explore career fields, study selected subjects in depth and earn college credit.

"Students can experience the college environment and meet other high school students from around the state," said Valentia Maiewskij-Hay, coordinator of the summer high school programs.

The June and July programs, varying from a few days to five weeks to allow time for other summer activities, cover forensics, computer graphics, apparel and textile marketing, theater, architecture, writing, journalism and music.

Board of Regents to visit campus for 2 days

Tuition increase to be discussed

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

Today and Thursday, the Kansas Board of Regents will discuss increases in tuition and fees during its April meeting at K-State.

For the first time in its 59-year history, the board is going to spend two days at one university, said Charles Reagan, assistant to President Jon Wefald.

The board, which periodically holds business meetings at each university, has never visited a university a day early in order to fully tour its facilities or visit with its faculty and students — until today.

On Thursday, the board will consider raising full-time student activity fees at K-State in fall 1989 from $7.75 per semester to $8 and increasing the recreational services fee from $2.50 per semester to $3.

The fall 1989 increase of 75 cents in fees would be in addition to the proposed 5 percent increase in tuition for Kansas residents, beginning with the fall 1989 semester.

If the increase is adopted by the board, tuition for undergraduate Kansas residents would be $578 and $1,977 for undergraduate non-residents. For resident graduate students, tuition would increase to $728 and to $2,127 for graduate non-residents.

Discussion on the increases will take place at business meetings Thursday, which will be held in the Cats' Pause Lounge of the K-State Union and are open to the public. The morning session runs from 9:30 a.m. to 11:15 a.m., with the afternoon session running from 1:30 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.

While on campus today, the board is scheduled to meet with K-State's Distinguished Regents Professors — David Leith, professor of surgery and medicine, and Ernest Shult, professor of mathematics.

The regents will also tour Durland Hall to look at the general facilities — computing center, classrooms and key laboratories — with a focus on the Center of Excellence, said Don Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering.

The regents have designated three such Centers of Excellence in the state which they fund directly. While in K-State's designated facility — the Center for Computer Controlled Automation — the board will see demonstrations of experiments currently in progress on robots and automated assembly line equipment, Rathbone said.

The regents will also visit some of the research areas in the Division of Biology. These include the Center for Basic Cancer Research and the NASA-funded Bioserve project.

After their tours, the regents will meet in executive session — without the public or the press — to evaluate two university presidents. The day will end with a dinner and reception at President Jon Wefald's home.

Thursday's meetings bracket a two-hour, mid-day break in which the board will tour Weber Arena and Bramlage Coliseum, and meet with student leaders. During their tours, each of the members of the board is assigned a student guide to answer questions about the University, Reagan said.

Thursday afternoon, the board will meet with student leaders to get their input into current board programs.

Members' backgrounds diverse

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

The Kansas Board of Regents, like many institutions in America, is a governing body made up of citizens from backgrounds as diverse as the students who attend the universities they govern.

The nine-member board is responsible for running Kansas' six state universities and the Kansas Technical Institute. It evaluates all requests for new programs and capital improvements. It is also charged with approving tenure and promotions for all faculty and hiring university presidents.

"The board is not in the business of administering university affairs, but is responsible for making sure guidelines and regulations are adhered to. To the extent that it is possible, the board delegates to individuals who can carry out the policy," said Stanley Koplick, executive director of the Board of Regents.

Since 1929, the board has had its present structure, where the members are appointed to serve four-year, overlapping terms by the governor once they are approved by the Kansas Senate. The current board of five Republicans and four Democrats contains three attorneys, an elementary school teacher, a public relations director and a dairy farmer.

With the help of its 17-member staff, which is broken down into areas similar to a university administration — academic affairs, fiscal, planning, etc. — the board is also responsible for requesting state funds from the Legislature for the universities.

The board receives advice from other organizations comprised of individuals from the institutions it oversees, such as the Council of Presidents, the Council of Chief Academic Officers (K-State's representative is Provost James Coffman) and the Student Advisory Committee (made up of the student body presidents from each school).

Among the on-going issues concerning the regents are the inclusion of Washburn University into the regents system, expansion of regents power to include supervision of community colleges, the elimination of duplicated programs, the Margin of Excellence and qualified admissions.

Commentary

WALLY BROCKHOFF
Collegian Columnist

Interviewer: What do you feel have been your most challenging courses during your studies at Kansas State University?

Interviewee: Uh ... uh .... Oh, I know — either Theatre Appreciation or Human Sexuality.

Interviewer: Why did you take those courses?

Interviewee: Uh ... uh .... Because my roommate was taking them with me, enabling us to have a massively synergistic learning experience and help each other to reach the ultimate plateau of learning.

Interviewer: What was the most important thing you learned from the class?

Interviewee: I would be ... um ... um ... embarrassed to take a position on that. (No pun intended!)

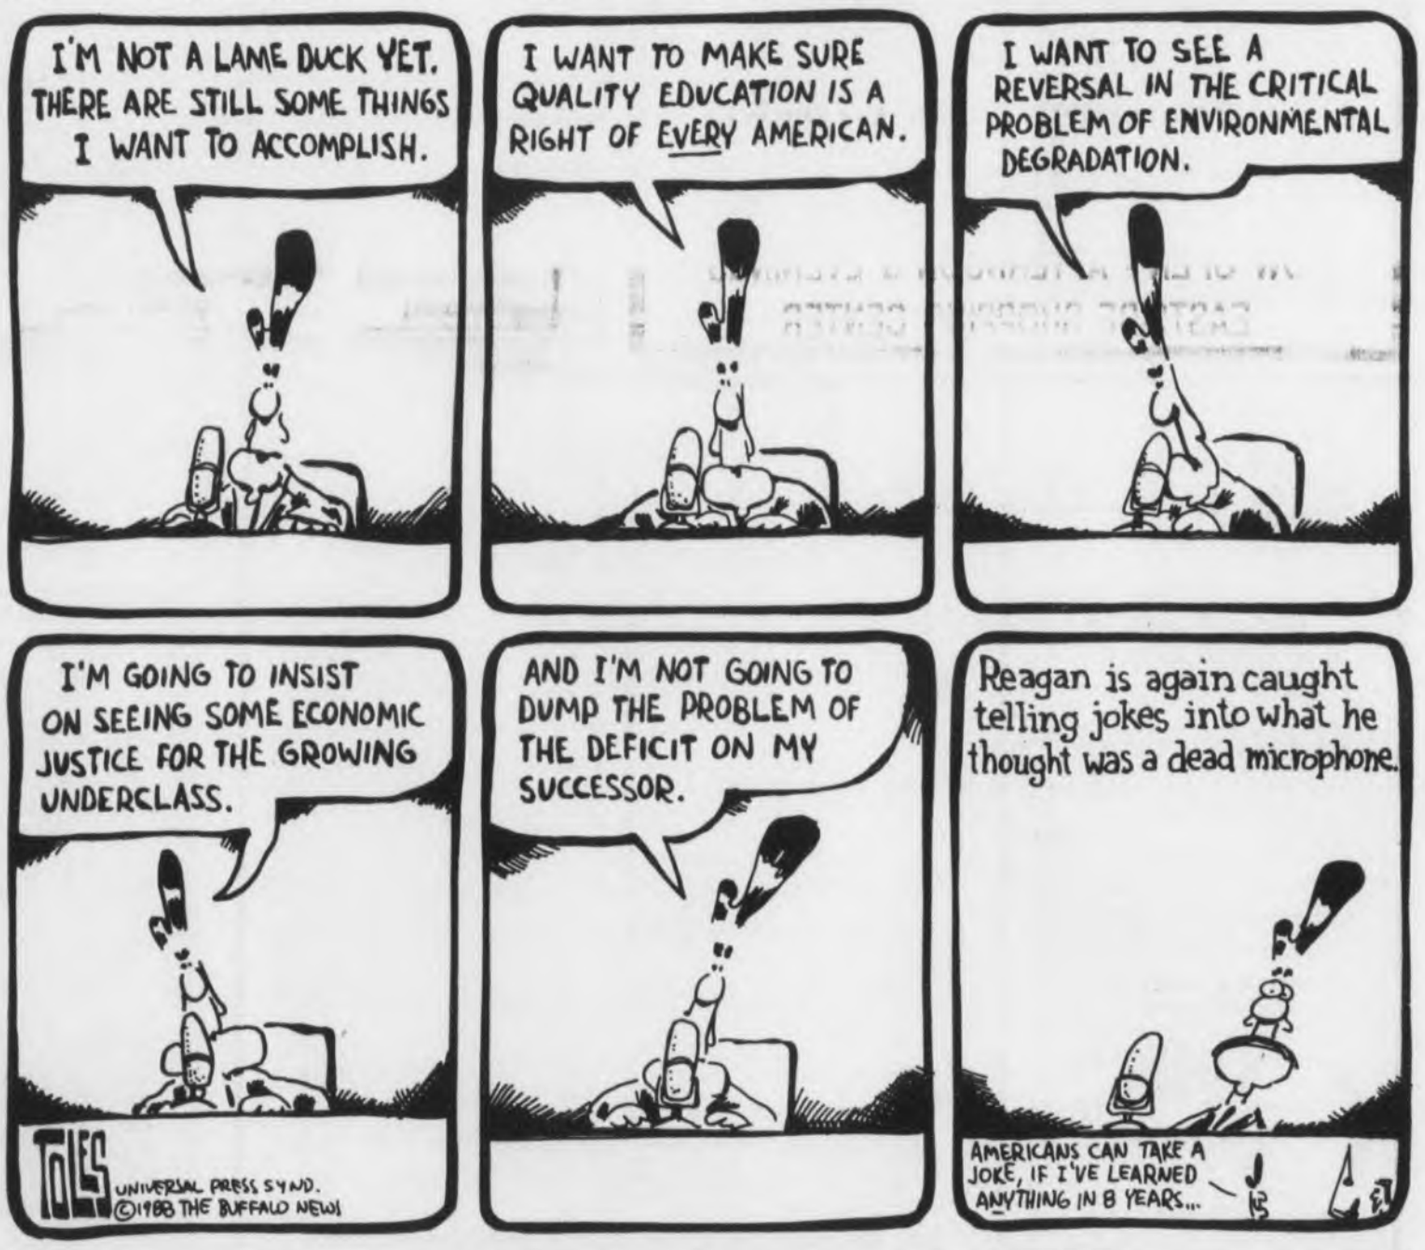
Now, I know this is largely a hypothetical experience, but after going through the interview process this spring, it is really not that inconceivable. I also am not knocking either of the courses mentioned above. There have been a lot of students who have taken Theatre Appreciation in hopes of finding a "pud" humanities elective. However, our theatre department gets the last laugh, because by requiring Theatre Appreciation students to see its productions, it has virtually an assured audience for which to perform. Pretty good deal!

Situations such as this expose some of the weaknesses in some of our curricula. In an effort to expose students to the humanities, they are required to take three or six hours of humanities as part of their degree requirements — this in hopes of the students becoming familiar with the Greek philosophers, Shakespeare and the like. Instead, the students look for a "pud" course that they can take to fulfill their degree requirements and boost their grade point averages.

This is a hot subject today, with such books as "The Closing of the American Mind" by Alan Bloom and "Cultural Literacy" by E.D. Hirsch on the market. Their premises are basically that there is not enough traditional liberal arts studies included in our modern-day college curricula and that there is some "base" of knowledge that should be uniform among all students.

This base of knowledge would work as a kind of "generic" prerequisite system and prevent wasting ours' and instructors' time covering the same topics in four or five different courses because no one is sure how much the students actually know from their previous course work.



Taking these courses would, of course, require time and credit hours. It either would make graduation take five years (six years if you are already on the "squeeze-four-years-into-five" program) or else cut down on the number of technical courses one could take in his or her major. I believe the most potential lies in eliminating some of the technical course requirements for several reasons.

Today's society is a highly complex one, with technological innovations coming almost daily. Given the restrictions of college budgets, I cannot see the logic behind making large financial commitments toward technology that we know will be made obsolete within two or three years. Our only hope is to teach people to think and to give them the skills to grasp new knowledge through reasoning instead of a force-fed diet of information regurgitation.

This is pre-enrollment time for next fall's courses, a headache which I am not missing as a graduating senior. I would challenge all students to take at least one course next semester just for them, something that will be challenging, provocative and interesting.

If you are an accounting major from Johnson County and have always wondered how the "Aggies" learned how to be "cow-tippin'" studs, take an animal sciences course. If thou art an agronomy major from western Kansas, take an English literature course, I beg thee.

We all can learn from each other, as well as from the actual course material. I would venture to say that your quality of life will improve with the diversity of knowledge you will gain. Not only that, but you will be able to answer the interviewer's questions with a lot less fecal material emanating from your oral cavity.

Senators wise to fund humanitarian groups

Small-mindedness lives.

At least in the case of one student senator, it does.

Last Thursday during Student Senate allocations meetings, Bernie Giefer, graduate student in chemical engineering and Graduate School senator, objected to the fact that funds were approved for such "politically motivated" organizations as Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights.

Giefer contended that these groups are more concerned with politics than with providing services to the student body and should not merit the $275.91 that Amnesty International was allotted and the $253.40 that the Coalition for Human Rights was tentatively allocated.

But his objections are in themselves contradictory.

After all, what is the Student Senate, but a politically motivated organization? It would stand to reason, therefore, that Giefer — as a senator — is himself politically motivated and has no basis for objecting to the funding without sounding like a hypocrite.

As for the argument that the two organizations do not provide any service to the student body, it can be contested that any organization in which students are involved is a benefit to those students. Interaction with other people and the exchange of ideas is an integral part of any education, and Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights certainly uphold these ideals — in actions, if not in words.

The organizations are, in fact, very active. Amnesty International, which is concerned with the violations of human rights in other countries, was successful in the past year in helping to free a political prisoner in Yugoslavia.

The Coalition for Human Rights, which seeks to educate the campus on human rights issues, is even more visible on campus and has the potential to involve more than just its own members. Its members use their funds to sponsor movies and speakers dealing with human rights.

Furthermore, the amount of money requested by the organizations is not exhorbitant. But lest that be regarded as a deciding factor, the money is definitely warranted on the basis of principle alone.

Giefer's objections are not well-planned or thought out. More than anything, they reflect the American attitude that anyone whose politics lean distinctly left of right must probably have Communist sympathies or, at the very least, be "bleeding heart" liberals who are not to be taken seriously.

State should adhere to federal wage scale

The premise behind a minimum wage — that some individuals need to be protected from unscrupulous business practices — is good. Few would disagree that the federal minumum wage is inadequate for anyone except teen-agers who are working for spending money.

Probably even fewer are aware that the state of Kansas has its own minumum wage — one so low that it makes the national minumum wage look good.

Until the newly passed minimum wage law goes into effect, the minimum wage of employees in Kansas who are not covered by the federal wage law is $1.60 per hour. The new law will raise it to $2.65 an hour.

While Gov. Mike Hayden's press secretary praised the state for for its "increase in minimum compensation," labor leaders were questioning why the state can't make its minimum wage the same as the federal government's.

None of the employees on the K-State campus operate on the state minimum wage. A representative of the Manhattan Job Placement Center was not aware that the state had a lower minimum wage.

In fact, when one reads the list of positions which are not included in in the state minimum wage, one would wonder who the wage does cover. It exempts agricultural and domestic workers, salespersons, professionals, executives and people who work as volunteers for non-profit organizations.

With so many people excluded, and so many employers who don't use the wage, what is the purpose of having it?

Some would argue that the state needs to have a safety net to stop employers from exploiting certain categories of workers. They would say that the federal government cannot watch every operation, and that the state needs to be there to protect its citizens.

Then why not keep the state minimum wage at the same level as the federal government's, to keep it protected even better?

And wouldn't it be safe to say that a lot of the exploitation takes place in agricultural and domestic employment — especially in Kansas — two areas which are exempt?

Reconsider move

Editor,

I am writing in response to the April 8 Collegian article concerning the allocation of student funds to campus organizations. I object to the use of student funds to support groups like the Coalition for Human Rights and Amnesty International which do not directly benefit the student body. The money allocated to these political groups could be used to benefit handicapped students here at K-State. I hope Student Senate reconsiders its decision.

Oscar West
junior in animal sciences and industry

Slicing the pie

Editor,

How do we allocate student fees? Are we going to support every group that asks for a slice of the pie? If the precedent of doing so becomes obvious to the multitude of clubs, coalitions and committees on campus, then how big will the budget pie need to be next year?

I would have to side with Senator Bernie Giefer in his attempt to establish a principle of fairness in the use of student fees. Funding groups like Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights with student activity fees is not right.

Daryl Reichard
senior in physical science education

Drawing the line

Editor,

A question has been raised on the appropriateness of using student activity fees for funding of politically motivated groups. A political group, in my view, is a group that takes a certain stance on a social issue. Although I think these types of organizations are needed in a university environment, I don't think they provide a service to the student body.

A better way to spend the funds would be to help support the KSU Childcare Cooperative, which is a student service. Support of politically active groups like Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights can only lead to further confusion and problems.

What would happen if the Ku Klux Klan or Nazi Youths would ask for funds? Should they be funded? Who would draw the line? Should the line be drawn? It is best to avoid the problem before it becomes a big issue.

Nicholas C. Rigas graduate student in chemical engineering

Funding risks

Editor,

I read with interest in Friday's Collegian that $275.91 of student service fees has been tentatively allocated for Amnesty International. While I support several of that group's activities, in no way do I feel its activities should be funded with K-State student service money.

As graduate student senator Bernie Giefer cautioned, in supporting groups like Amnesty International we risk funding "gray area groups that construe a political message." What group with political overtones will it be next — The Young Republicans, College Democrats or Libertarians?

Student service and activity fees should be just what their name implies — of service to and for activities of the students of K-State. What kind of services or activities is Amnesty International providing for students? More importantly, how many students truly want their money going to any group of a political nature which is very indirectly related to the needs and services of K-State?

Think about it.

Jackson supporters assemble in Salina to discuss Coalition

By Erwin Seba
Government Editor

Charles McAfee, a Wichita architect and a long-time supporter and friend of the Rev. Jesse Jackson, stood before 81 Jackson delegates from across the state assembled Saturday in the auditorium of the Labor Building in Salina.

McAfee held a microphone in his right hand and looked at the audience as if he was looking over a pair of reading glasses, but he wasn't wearing his reading glasses. He shook his left index finger while speaking in a low voice.

"I've told Jesse, 'the one place you are going to see the Rainbow — truly see the Rainbow — is in Kansas,'" McAfee said.

The rainbow McAfee was referrring to is the Rainbow Coalition, a national political organization founded by Jackson during his 1984 presidential campaign.

Because Coalition does not endorse candidates for office it has not endorsed Jackson in his current race for the Democratic presidential nomination. However, the state leaders of the organization are also the leaders of Jackson's campaign in Kansas.

And as leaders of the Rainbow are focused on getting Jackson elected this year, they are also working on leaving a permanent organization in place for after the election to work on issues of interest to the coaliton.

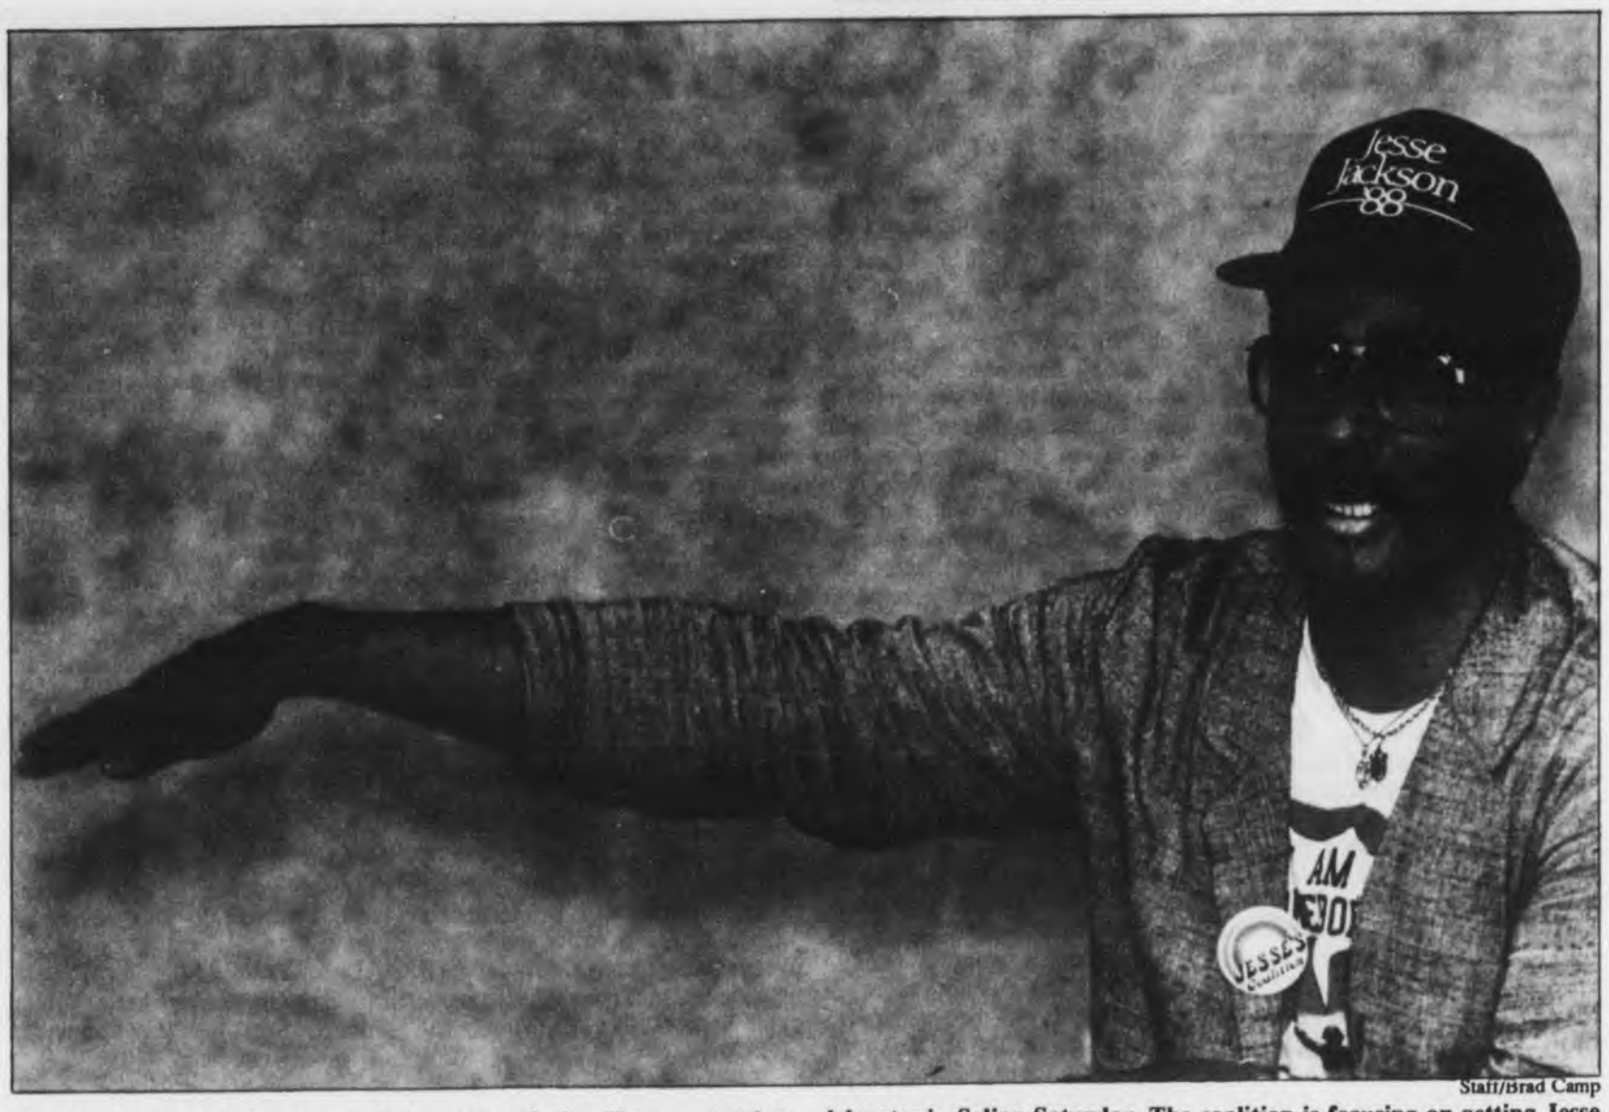
"It's not just about Jesse, it's about us. Jesse is just a symbol," McAfee said.

The work on building the Rainbow Coalition in Kansas began in October 1986 when Louis Carter, a legislative assistant to Jackson, asked Charles Meek to consider leading the coalition in the state.

After examining the coalition's status, Meek became interim state chairperson of the Kansas steering committee of the National Rainbow Coalition in December 1986.

The success of Meek's work and the Rainbow's efforts on behalf of Jackson paid off March 19, when Jackson came in second to Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis in county Democratic caucuses held across the state.

In the delegate count, Jackson won 235 delegates and Dukakis won 278. Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee was third, winning 125 delegates.



The delegates elected at the county caucuses will go on to the congressional district conventions to be held April 23. At those conventions, the delegates will select 23 of their members to go on to the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta this summer. Delegates will also be selected to attend the state convention on May 14.

The delegate meeting Saturday in Salina was conducted to prepare representatives from each county delegation for the April 23 conventions.

Meek, a full-time volunteer with the campaign, came into the Rainbow Coalition after working in such Jackson-led organizations as Operation Breadbasket and Operation Push. Meek, during an interview in his Topeka office following the county caucuses, expressed no surprise at Jackson's showing in Kansas.

"I said we'd sweep the state and we did. To us, a sweep is a strong second place finish in a state like Connecticut or Kansas ... where there

Editors selected for 1988-89

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

Top management positions for the summer and fall Kansas State Collegian and the 1989 Royal Purple yearbook have been named by the Board of Student Publications.

Laura Renfro, sophomore in elementary education, is editor of the 1989 Royal Purple. Renfro, who is assistant editor of this year's Royal Purple and was the 1987 book's housing/index editor, said a few minor changes will be implemented in next year's book.

The book will be expanded due to larger academic and organization sections. In addition, Renfro said she will add the position of a paid staff writer.

"That will help out in tight situations when we need someone to write on the spur of the moment," she said.

Renfro said she hopes the staff members will regard the book as a learning experience.

"I'd like people to have fun and really learn what it's like to do a publication," she said, adding that she plans to have the staff named by April 22.

Becky Lucas, senior in journalism and mass communications, has been selected to head the summer Collegian. Lucas, who served as managing editor of the Collegian last fall and has served on both the advertising and Royal Purple staffs, said she has high goals for the summer staff.

"My goal for the summer is to have the best staff the Collegian has ever seen," Lucas said, adding that the large number of current staff members expected to apply for the summer staff will make that possible. "I'd also like the back-to-school issue to be something of value to students — particularly freshman and transfer students," she added.

She also said she hopes to increase the amount of sports coverage this summer.

Janelle Dennis, senior in marketing, has been chosen to serve as the Collegian's summer advertising manager. Dennis has served two semesters on the Collegian staff, one as a classified advertising sales representative and most recently as advertising representative. Dennis said she plans to focus her energy on increasing advertising sales.

"We're planning on increasing sales by 5 percent each month over last summer's," she said, adding that record monthly ad sales were made last summer.

In addition, she said plans to reduce the number of ad representatives from five to four so that the reps can earn more.

Chad L. Sanborn, junior in journalism and mass communications, will head the fall Collegian. Sanborn, who has served two semesters as staff writer and one as campus editor, said he plans no major changes in next fall's paper.

"Everything's going smoothly," he said. "There's not a lot of improvements to be made. It's basically going to be the same paper."

One change Sanborn said he is considering is changing the Wednesday food page to a more encompassing lifestyle page. Any other changes will be minor in scope, he said.

"It would be more to my disadvantage to shake it up," he said. "It'd be more to my advantage to keep it the same."

Catherine Doud, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, will serve as the Collegian's fall advertising manager. Doud has served two semesters on the ad staff as an advertising representative, and she has also served this semester as a Collegian columnist. Her primary goal is to increase sales.

"I'm shooting for 3 to 4 percent, but I'd sure like it to be more," Doud said. Such an increase would equate to an additional $8,000 to $10,000. In addition, Doud said she hopes to increase national and co-op advertising.

Judy Lundstrom, senior in journalism and mass communications and current Collegian editor, said she was satisfied with the selection of Lucas and Sanborn.

"Becky Lucas was an excellent choice for summer editor," Lundstrom said. "I'm confident she will do the job well."

Similarly, Lundstrom had praise for Sanborn.

"Chad will do a good job as editor," she said. "His two semesters on the staff as a writer and one as campus editor have given him good experience, and his ability to work well with others will be a great asset."

Jada Allerheiligen, senior in journalism and mass communications, said she believes Dennis and Doud will be effective leaders.

"I think Janelle will offer a lot of creativity to the position," Allerheiligen said, adding that Dennis will be willing to be open to new ideas.

"Cathy's a very conscientious, organized and diligent person," she said, citing Doud's experience as one of her most positive assets.

Dave Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and director of Student Publications Inc., noted one change that will be implemented in the summer Collegian. Instead of publishing every Tuesday and Thursday as it did last summer, the Collegian will publish every Monday and Thursday, Adams said.

The change from Tuesday to Monday allows for the presentation of fresher weekend news and also is more attractive to advertisers, he said.

Dennis agreed, saying, "I think Mondays will be better than Tuesdays for businesses running early-week specials."

Lecturer to address small town changes

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

A guest lecturer from Wales will address the development and changes in small towns and local governments at 10:30 a.m. today in Seaton 301.

The speech, titled "Rural Policy and Planning: The Importance of Theories in the State," will be given by Paul Cloke, a visiting professor from St. David's University College — University of Wales.

"Drawing from the British experience, I plan to show that the state and government have a hand in the development of rural areas and small towns," Cloke said. "Governments respond to power. The government is influenced by some very powerful groups, such as builders and developers."

Cloke said the Margaret Thatcher regime in Britain is trying to centralize the powers of the state, which is taking away powers previously left to the smaller governmental groups.

"What this means is a slide of powers," he said. "The rural communities are losing their power to hold back new developments.

"This will lead to two classes of lands. Those that are more protected, such as national parks, and those that developers will have a freer reign with. The second class of land will leave more lands open to development."

Cloke also said the relevancy of his speech to the United States will be difficult to access because it deals mainly with Britain.

"It will show the importance (of developmental leverage) of the central states to the local states," he said.

Cloke is the editor of The Journal of Rural Studies. He has written six books, including "An Introduction to Rural Settlement Planning." He is considered an authority on rural planning policy and rural transport planning.

HOT DOG!

They come in different sizes — from foot-long to 2-inch cocktail length, and they are called by many different names. There are frankfurters, conies, wieners, hot dogs or sausages. But a wienie by any other name would still smell as enticingly delicious, whether roasted on a stick over a campfire or eaten as a business lunch from a vendor on the streets of New York.

Hot dogs are an American tradition. What baseball game or outdoor cookout would be complete without those simple, yet succulent sausages wrapped inside toasted buns and dressed with an array of condiments.

But what Americans have claimed to be strictly of our own origin has actually been around since before the Christian era.

Sausages, which are the ancestors of the modern hot dog, have been enjoyed for centuries. Some historians believe the sausage originated with the ancient Egyptians. An oriental version of the hot dog was eaten by the Chinese before the dawn of the Christian era.

Constantine the Great, Emperor of Rome, considered the sausage to be too good for common people and banned it from the general public. The popularity of the sausage was so intense, however, that people began bootlegging sausages.These sausage "speak easies" continued through the reigns of several more emperors until the ban was repealed.

Sausage making became more of a craft in the Middle Ages when sausage makers began to experiment with meat and spice combinations. This experimentation led to some famous names being given to these special sausages.

The "frankfurter" was created as a small sausage in 1852 by the butchers' guild of Frankfurt, Germany. The "wiener" takes its name from that city where one of the earliest known encased sausage formulas was conceived, Wien (Vienna), Austria.

It was on the streets of St. Louis in 1883 that the frankfurter in a bun was born.

Sausage maker Anton Feuctwanger had a problem in serving his sausages because they were too hot to handle. He started serving the sausages by giving his customers a white glove with which to hold them, but too many of the gloves were lost. Anton's ingenuitive wife, Frau Feuctwanger, suggested the sausages be served on a bun which Anton's brother, a baker, is said to have manufactured.

The term "Hot Dog" was coined in the early 1900s by the late sports cartoonist T.A. Dorgan. The popularity of relating hot dogs to sports has been evident ever since.

All hot dogs are manufactured in the same manner. Most are made of beef and beef combinations, but there also chicken and turkey franks. The meat is first chilled, mixed and chopped. Then the spices are added under refrigeration to preserve flavor.

The batter is transferred to a stuffing machine where air and air pockets are removed. The meat is forced under pressure into cellulose casings. These casings are checked to see that they are completely filled with meat. The tubes, which range from 55 to 110 feet in length, are fed into linking machines which tie the casings at 5- to 5 ½ -inch intervals.

The hot dogs are then smoked to add color and flavor. Since hot dogs are already cooked, they may be eaten with or without being heated. When heating hot dogs, they should not be boiled. Simply bring the water to a boil, add the hot dogs, remove from heat, cover and let stand for a few minutes.

It is also recommended that hot dogs not be frozen, but stored in the coldest part of the refrigerator. Freezing hot dogs makes them lose flavor and texture.

Just about anything can be done with a hot dog. Everything from succotash to stroganoff, from soup to kabobs can include the versatile weiner.

Most people love the hot dog in its traditional "bun and wienie" form, however, due to the variety of personally preferred toppings which can be added. Different combinations can result in different tastes. Chili, cheese, onions, mustard, relish, horseradish, ketchup, sauerkraut and other condiments can be used in combinations or all together to create the perfect hot dog treat.

8 frankfurters
½ cup chili sauce

Combine biscuit mix and milk in a medium-size bowl. Turn out onto lightly-floured board. Knead for about 30 seconds, adding more flour to keep dough from sticking.

Roll dough into a 16-by-8 inch rectangle. Cut the dough to make 8 squares.

Spread about 1½ teaspoons of the relish down the middle of each square. Place a frank on top of the dough and wrap the dough around it. Pinch a seam in the dough and place seam side down on an ungreased cookie sheet.

Bake 10-15 minutes at 450 degrees. Makes four servings.

Hot Dog Casserole

2 pounds franks, cut in ½ -inch pieces
2 tablespoons butter
2 8-ounce cans tomato sauce
1 clove garlic
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon salt
8 ounces medium-size noodles
8 ounces cream cheese
1 cup thick sour cream
6 green onions with tops, thinly sliced
1 cup grated sharp cheddar cheese

Grease a 2-quart casserole dish. Heat butter in a large skillet at medium heat. Stir in tomato sauce, garlic, sugar, salt and pepper. Mix in franks. Cover and simmer 20 minutes.

Cook noodles, drain and rinse. Beat cream cheese until smooth. Add sour cream, blending gradually. Mix in sliced green onions. Spoon noodles into casserole. Cover with cream cheese mixture. Spoon tomatoes and franks mixture over cheese and top evenly with grated cheese. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Makes eight servings.

Hot Dog Cheese Soup

1 package (10 ounces) frozen peas
½ cup diced celery
2 teaspoons instant minced onion
½ -pound package hot dogs, cut into bite-size pieces
1 can (11 ounces) condensed cheddar cheese soup
1 soup can of water

Cook peas according to package directions, adding celery and instant onion. Drain. Add hot dogs, soup and water. Simmer for about five minutes. Makes four servings.

Coney De Luxe

½ cup chopped onion
½ cup chopped green pepper
4 tablespoons vegetable oil
1 pound ground beef
1 ½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cayenne pepper
½ teaspoon chili pepper
1 teaspoon paprika
1 8-ounce can tomato sauce
1 can water
¼ cup wheat germ
1 pound package of hot dogs, cooked
10 hot dog buns toasted

Fry onion and green pepper in vegetable oil until transparent and add ground beef and seasonings. Cook until meat is well browned, turning frequently. Add tomato sauce and water and simmer 25 minutes.

Add wheat germ and allow to boil up once. Place a cooked hot dog on a roll. Put on plate and top with meat sauce. Makes 10 servings.

Broiled Stuffed Wieners with Beans

4 wieners
1 tablespoon prepared mustard
2 dill pickles, sliced lengthwise
2 4-inch by 4-inch pieces of sharp cheese, cut into halves
4 strips of bacon
2 8-ounce cans of baked beans

Split wieners lengthwise; spread with mustard. Insert one slice of pickle and one slice of cheese into each wiener. Wrap one strip of bacon around each wiener, fasten with toothpicks. Broil until brown on all sides.

Heat beans; add juices in bottom of broiler pan to beans. Pile beans in center of platter. Surround with wieners. Makes 4 servings.

Panelists examine convocation speaker's life

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

Four panelists highlighted the life of Gunther Schuller, a successful composer, conductor and performer of many kinds of music, in a Pre-Convocation Forum Tuesday night.

"On an interview I heard on (the radio) this morning, Mr. Schuller said he doesn't like to think in terms of classical music or other forms such as jazz ... 'there are only two kinds of music — good and bad,'" said Jack Carpenter, panelist and associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Carpenter said Schuller completed his early compositions at the ages of 14 and 16 while enrolled at the St. Thomas Choir School.

"Over the years' time that elapsed between (the two pieces) one can see an awful lot of changes (in his work.) Those changes are fairly important in understanding his relationship to classical forms of music," Carpenter said. The second piece was influenced by French impressionism.

Schuller then went to the Manhattan School of Music to study theory and the French horn. Shortly after that, he became a professional French horn player and joined the Ballet Theater Orchestra in 1943, he said.

"Remember (Schuller) was born in 1925, so he was just a kid," Carpenter said.

In about 1945 Schuller first began to think beyond traditional forms of music and impressionism, he said.

Schuller returned to New York, became a principle French horn player and taught horn and composition at the Manhattan School of Music, he said.

Many of Schuller's works have been commissioned by major orchestras and ballet companies, including pieces commissioned by the Ford Foundation and the Library of Congress, Carpenter said.

"(Schuller) currently has 16 commissions for works to be written over the next four years. He's a busy fellow," he said.

Harriet Ottenheimer, panelist and professor of anthropology, discussed blues' contributions to jazz.

Ottenheimer shared some of Schuller's views on blues' influence on jazz that he discussed in his book "Early Jazz," published in 1968.

Jazz developed differently in New York than it did in the Midwest due to the difference in how each area made use of blues music, she said.

"Jazz in this region got off to a somewhat later start in popularity than it did in New Orleans or in New York.

"Schuller says although the earliest forms of proto-jazz were known in the Southwest, local interest in the new music did not become intense until the second decade of the century, because ragtime stayed popular for a much longer time than in New Orleans or New York," Ottenheimer said.

In the mid-1920s when jazz became popular in this area, blues were already established as a popular style of music, she said.

Before the '20s, blues existed on a separate cultural, social and musical level from what orchestras chose to perform, Ottenheimer said.

"Once blues broke through into the neo-classical, urban realm, the Southwestern orchestras quickly adopted (the blues) ... Audiences throughout the area insisted on a large diet of blues.

"Due to Schuller ... (musicians) certainly must have gained an understanding of blues — if not on the musical level, on the emotional level," she said.

Schuller wrote that if jazz had not made contact with blues, it would not have survived the 1930s as a distinct musical form, Ottenheimer said.

Bill McFarlin, panelist and executive director of the National Association of Jazz Educators, said Schuller was first exposed to jazz at the age of 18 during his tenure at the Cincinnati Symphony.

As a young working musician in New York, Schuller "participated in the birth of the 'cool album,' which would have an important influence on jazz in the '50s," he said.

Schuller's reputation as a composer in the classical arena was growing, and he began fusing classical music with jazz in the 1950s. This fusion was not a new concept at that time.

But, his work was unique because he was accepted in the classical world embracing jazz, but not vice versa. He was able to break down many barriers that classical enthusiasts had toward jazz, he said.

Speaker to address aging

By The Collegian Staff

Patricia Washington, chairwoman of the department of minority studies at Wichita State University, will present "Factors that Affect Service Delivery for Minority Elders" at 11:30 a.m. today in Union 206.

The speech is sponsored by K-State's Student Gerontology Club (Alpha Gamma Epsilon), Minority Affairs and the Center for Aging.

Marilyn Legg, administrative assistant at the Center for Aging, said she thinks Washington will be able to provide some insights into the special needs that elderly minorities face. Often, students being trained in that area are unaware of those needs.

"Minority groups have different frailty issues as well as different systems of values and financial resources," Legg said.

Frailty issues, Legg said, consist of disability and illness patterns, while values are determined by the amount of interaction with support systems such as the individual's family, neighbors and church.

"Our students being trained for working with the elderly don't have enough emphasis on the minority aspects," Legg said. "Pat Washington can give a feel for what it's like — this will be most beneficial in the training of future professionals.

"I hope K-State faculty will be able to develop a course dealing with this subject."

Legg said she chose Washington as the speaker because of Washington's speaking effectiveness at the Governors Conference on Aging last May.

Alumni sponsors Worlds of Fun trip; ticket price reduced for special day

By The Collegian Staff

The study blues are here. Escape seems impossible. Tuttle's getting old, and Padre's just a little too far away for a weekend escape.

The K-State Alumni Association has an idea: Spend a day at Worlds of Fun in Kansas City, Mo.

April 24 has been designated K-State Day at Worlds of Fun.

Amy Button Renz, director of membership for the Alumni Association, hopes to see about 1,000 K-State students, faculty, administrators, alumni and prospective students at the event.

Tickets will cost $9.50 if they are purchased on or before April 22. Renz said this is a savings of $8.51 over the regular cost of Worlds of Fun passports.

The tickets will be available in the activities center on the third floor of the Union and the recreation center in the Union basement.

The Union Programming Council will be sponsoring transportation to Worlds of Fun, which will cost $20 including the price of the passport.

Renz said scheduled performers include the K-State Singers, Men's Glee Club and the K-State Pep Band.

More than 5,000 prospective K-State students have been invited.

Women encounter college leadership roles

Speaker: Provide equal opportunity for all

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

It could be the year 2070 before the ratio of women leaders at institutions of higher learning equals that of the enrollment.

Judith Ramaley, executive vice chancellor for the University of Kansas and chairwoman of the Commission on Women in Higher Education, spoke Tuesday to a group of about 40 members of the Faculty Women's Caucus.

"At the rate we are going, it will be the year 2070 before half of the senior leadership in higher education are women. Recognizing that women represent about one-half of the student population who participate in higher education," said Ramaley.

Ramaley focused her discussion on a report generated by the Commission on Women in Higher Education titled "The New Agenda of Women for Higher Education."

"The idea behind the new agenda is that we must reshape our institutions and examine the assumptions upon which they are built. (We must) continue to be organized and provide equal opportunity for all," she said.

In 1973, 95 percent of the college presidents were men, Ramaley said. Not only were women presidents in the minority, but the majority were hired by women's or church-related colleges.

"In the past 10 years ... we have doubled the participation of women in leadership roles in higher education in this country," she said. "Doubling from 5 percent to 10 percent still leaves us in the minority ... but the range of colleges with women in leadership roles has grown considerably."

Women are currently presidents of major research institutions, arts and sciences colleges, community colleges and the traditional women's colleges, Ramaley said.

In recognition of the small number of women in leadership roles at higher education institutions, the American Council on Education developed a program to identify women qualified to undertake senior administration posts.

The National Identification Program for the Advancement of Women in Higher Education evolved from the program and has chapters in all 50 states, she said.

There have been 38 national forums in the last 10 years, involving about 800 emerging women leaders and about 200 men and women institution presidents, she said.

"The first forum involved 20 women, of which seven are now presidents for a batting average of 350. That is eight points better than Babe Ruth," she said.

Educational institutions are in need of a major overhaul, she said. The participation of minorities, especially blacks, in higher education is dropping alarmingly.

"We need women and minorities in leadership roles not to keep down criticisms, or to dodge the efforts of pressure groups or just to be in compliance with federal and state regulations, but to challenge assumptions and open up the way for change," she said.

"To produce leaders we need colleges and universities that include, rather than exclude, and that's why we need to encourage men and women of all races to work together to make the institutions better," she said.

American view of Russians 'twisted,' speaker claims

Lecturer looks at realities of Soviet life

By Mary Strafuss
Collegian Reporter

"Although the Russians have twisted ideas about us, I am ashamed to say we have more twisted ideas about them," George Feifer said at his lecture, "Love, Vodka, Laughter, Tears; A Look at Soviet Life Under the Surface."

Feifer referred to a New York Times survey that reported Russians were less patriotic, cared for their children less and worked less than Americans. "(We) are pretty wacko about the whole Russian system," Feifer said.

The Americans continue to fight communism but, " ... don't have a bloody goddamn idea what they are like," Feifer said.

Feifer said he was "shocked" when he went to study in Russia after his extensive schooling at prestigious universities. His schooling was "100 percent right 12 percent of the time," Feifer said.

One correspondent from the New York Times reported that "there was no prostitution in Russia," Feifer said. The Russians stand by this because they say prostitution derives from the illness of capitalism, Feifer said. The Soviets also contend that there is no masturbation for the same reasons.

"All Russians lead two different lives; their private and personal," Feifer said. He related this to the job of shopping. "Department stores are like rugby matches ... fighting to get in."

Asking the clerk for help can be associated with talking to a witch, said Feifer. But if you "merge to the person and get the human contact, out leaps the friendship and generosity. You are recognized as a fellow human being."

Russians have a vast reservoir of good feelings, Feifer said. "Why don't we have the equivalent? There is more talk of literature, love and the meaning of life in Russia."

He continued to stress the personal contact that is prevalent in Russia, saying that one can get around regulations by establishing the contact.

"Russian life has a million stupid regulations and 10 million ways to get around them," Feifer said, adding that "Yankee ingenuity flourishes in Russia."

The weather has much to do with the heaviness of Russian life, Feifer said. "The sky is one heavy low gunmetal color cloud, horizon to horizon, pressing down on your shoulders like martial law."

With the sun making an appearance for an average of 15 minutes from October to February, the psyche gets down, Feifer said.

"All of Russian life is one long Russian winter," Feifer said. "Russians live with the sense that they got a raw deal. They see their life as a tragic experience. They do have their flings and orgies, but it is an escape," Feifer said.

Russians' beliefs in socialism have collapsed, Feifer said. "They want to believe it is something, to which they can link themselves to."

The Russian dream was that socialism would lead man to a higher level of civilization, Feifer said. But, he said, that belief has crashed.

Spokesman admits creating Reagan's quotes for reporters

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House said Tuesday that President Reagan was upset and it was an "outrage" that former presidential spokesman Larry Speakes had made up quotes and given them to reporters as Reagan's words.

"Everyone is appalled that he made up quotes," said spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, who replaced Speakes 14 months ago.

In a kiss-and-tell book that has roiled White House officials, Speakes disclosed that he made up a widely reported statement that was attributed to Reagan during his first summit with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in 1985.

In another instance, when a Korean Air Lines passenger jet was shot down by the Soviets in 1983, the president "had almost nothing to say" during meetings with the Cabinet and congressional leaders, Speakes said. So, he said, he took statements made by Secretary of State George P. Shultz and attributed them to Reagan.

Fitzwater, at a news briefing dominated by questions about Speakes' revelation, blasted his predecessor, who in his six years as White House spokesman had boasted that he never lied to the press.

"It's a damned outrage, that's what it is," Fitzwater said.

"I resent it so much. It casts asperions on the presidency and on my position ... It's wrong.... He shouldn't have done it and ... I won't do it," Fitzwater said.

He said he had not talked to the president, "but I'm sure he would be upset about it. I'm sure he is."

Conservative leaders who met with Reagan on Tuesday also were angry. "I think Larry Speakes has done a disservice to the president," said Peter Flaherty, chairman of Citizens for Reagan.

Paul Weyrich, head of the Free Congress Foundation, said, "The president is ill-served by all of these people who are in public service and then write books the minute they get out and reveal things that ought not to be revealed.

"All they're in it for is making a buck ... and frankly, they ought to be ashamed of themselves," Weyrich said.

Speakes had no reaction to the White House statements. "I'd be better off not to comment," he said in a telephone interview from New York, where he is vice president for communications at Merrill Lynch Corp.

However, he offered no apologies, saying "It's an honest book."

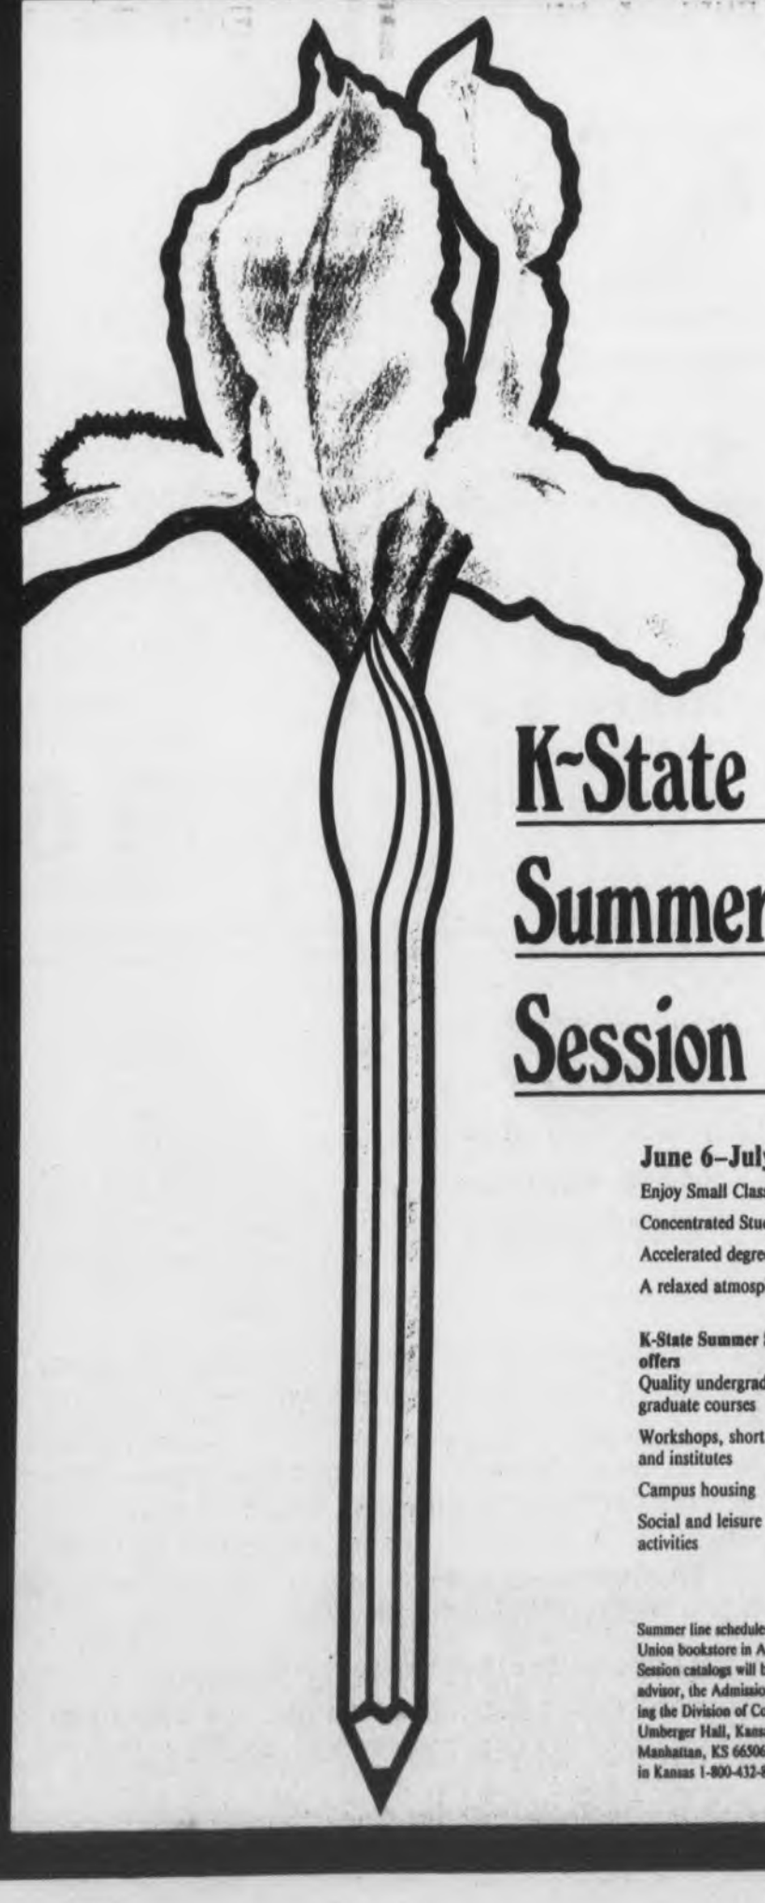
Grad students receive awards

By The Collegian Staff

Five graduate students from the Department of Chemical Engineering received awards at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science

The students won awards for their outstanding presentations of technical papers.

Three of the students, Sujeet Shenoi, Nicholas Rigas and Jean Waters were awarded certificates of merit and given $50 cash prizes. The remaining two, Yinlun Huang and Rizwan Mithani were each given certificates of award.



When the awards were announced the students' advisors, Liang Fan, professor of chemical engineering, and John Schlup, assistant professor of chemical engineering, were praised for their enthusiasm and the department's excellence, Mithani said.

About 40 students competed for the eight awards given in the Southwestern and Rocky Mountain Division. The division includes Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico and Wyoming.

Local school district faces overcrowding

Class size may increase at MHS

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

Faced with unexpected student overcrowding in U.S.D. 383 schools, members of the Manhattan Board of Education are considering initiating plans to deal with an increasing student population without lowering quality of education in the district schools.

"The high school is full, and it will remain full. We are scheduled to capacity at a little more than 1,700, but I do not expect to see (new construction) in the near future," said Hal Rowe, superintendent of schools.

The immediate solution to overcrowding is going to be increasing class sizes at Manhattan High School, Rowe said. Although it has been suggested that oversized classrooms may affect the quality of student teacher interaction on the primary and secondary levels, Rowe said this will not be the case here.

The Board of Education has discussed a number of options for dealing with the overcrowding problem at Manhattan High School. Adding classroom space can be accomplished by either building a new facility or reworking the day schedule to accommodate additional students.

At a February board meeting, Rowe said the school district can buy, build or rent additional space that could easily handle the overcrowding.

Although Manhattan High School is currently operating to capacity, Rowe said there appears to be no compelling reason for immediate changes in the physical structure of the high school due to overcrowding. Enrollment pressure can be eased with creative scheduling until approximately 1995, he said.

Rowe was asked by the other board members in early February to present proposals for dealing with the overcrowding problem. At the board's Feb. 17 meeting, Rowe presented a complete packet of informatiom outlining several options to the school district.

Less costly solutions proposed by Rowe to avoid new construction include a reorganization of the current schedule into a split-shift extended day system that would be nine periods long, instead of the current seven.

According to the proposed split-shift plan, seniors and juniors would attend periods one through seven, sophomores would attend periods two through eight and freshmen would not start classes until period three.

Rowe said he would also like to look into the feasibility of a year-round school year. One advantage to the year-round system is that it improves the retention by students of the material they learn when the three-month summer break between classes is shortened, he said.

A disadvantage of alternatives to traditional scheduling plans is an increased inconvenience for people accustomed to the standard school year, Rowe said.

At an intergovernmental meeting in February, Rowe told city and county officials he was surprised to see student population become a problem for area schools in this decade. He attributed the increases in enrollment to unforeseeable changes in the general population of this area and the entire country.

"We have 700 more students than four years ago. Nearly 500 of those come from residents or employees from Fort Riley, military and civilian. The other 200 come from growth in the community," Rowe said.

"The baby boomers of this country are of child-bearing age. A drop-off in the (youth population) should occur around the turn of the century."

Elementaries need additions

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan area elementary schools will reach capacity when the 1988-89 school year enrollment begins next fall, according to a report on classroom space submitted to the Manhattan Board of Education this spring.

Elementary school enrollment is expected to increase by 600 students in the next four years. Current enrollment in Manhattan elementary schools is 3,343.

"Eight of the nine elementary schools in the Manhattan area are full. We are now busing students to Lee Elementary School because ... it is the only school that can handle students," said Hal Rowe, superintendent of schools.

Four elementary schools in the southeastern corner of Manhattan report the worst problem with overcrowding. Rowe said he expects Manhattan to continue to grow to the west and north and intends to focus his attention there.

Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School already sends one section of its kindergarten to Lee Elementary School, and Bluemont Elementary School has moved some of its activities to stage and basement areas.

It is very probable that the school district will request the transfer of up to 150 students from the concentrated areas to Lee Elementary School to alleviate part of the overcrowding problem, Rowe said.

Rowe has suggested a temporary redrawing of attendance lines to relieve pressure on the more burdened areas. Although this has given the district some immediate relief in the past, it is not a long-range solution to the problem, he said.

One proposed solution to overcrowding for the elementary schools has been the construction of a new facility, or an addition to an existing structure. Two of the elementary schools, Lee and Marlatt, now have annexes.

Rowe said Manhattan residents should expect to see a new elementary school built every four to six years, taking into consideration the present rate of growth for the area.

"Three of our present schools could easily handle additions of at least six classrooms. These would include Amanda Arnold, Marlatt and Northview (elementary schools). All of these schools serve growing areas," Rowe said.

A tentative bid by a local architect firm, Brent Bowman and Associates, described a new three-section elementary school of medium to good quality for the Manhattan area. Cost for the facility would be about $3.5 million and would accommodate 525 students.

It takes about three years to plan and construct a high school, Rowe said. A plan for additions onto several schools would probably take less time, he said.

Although Marlatt and Northview elementary schools currently report to be at capacity, redistricting already increased enrollment by 70 students. Both schools would receive additional students if rezoning was again implemented.

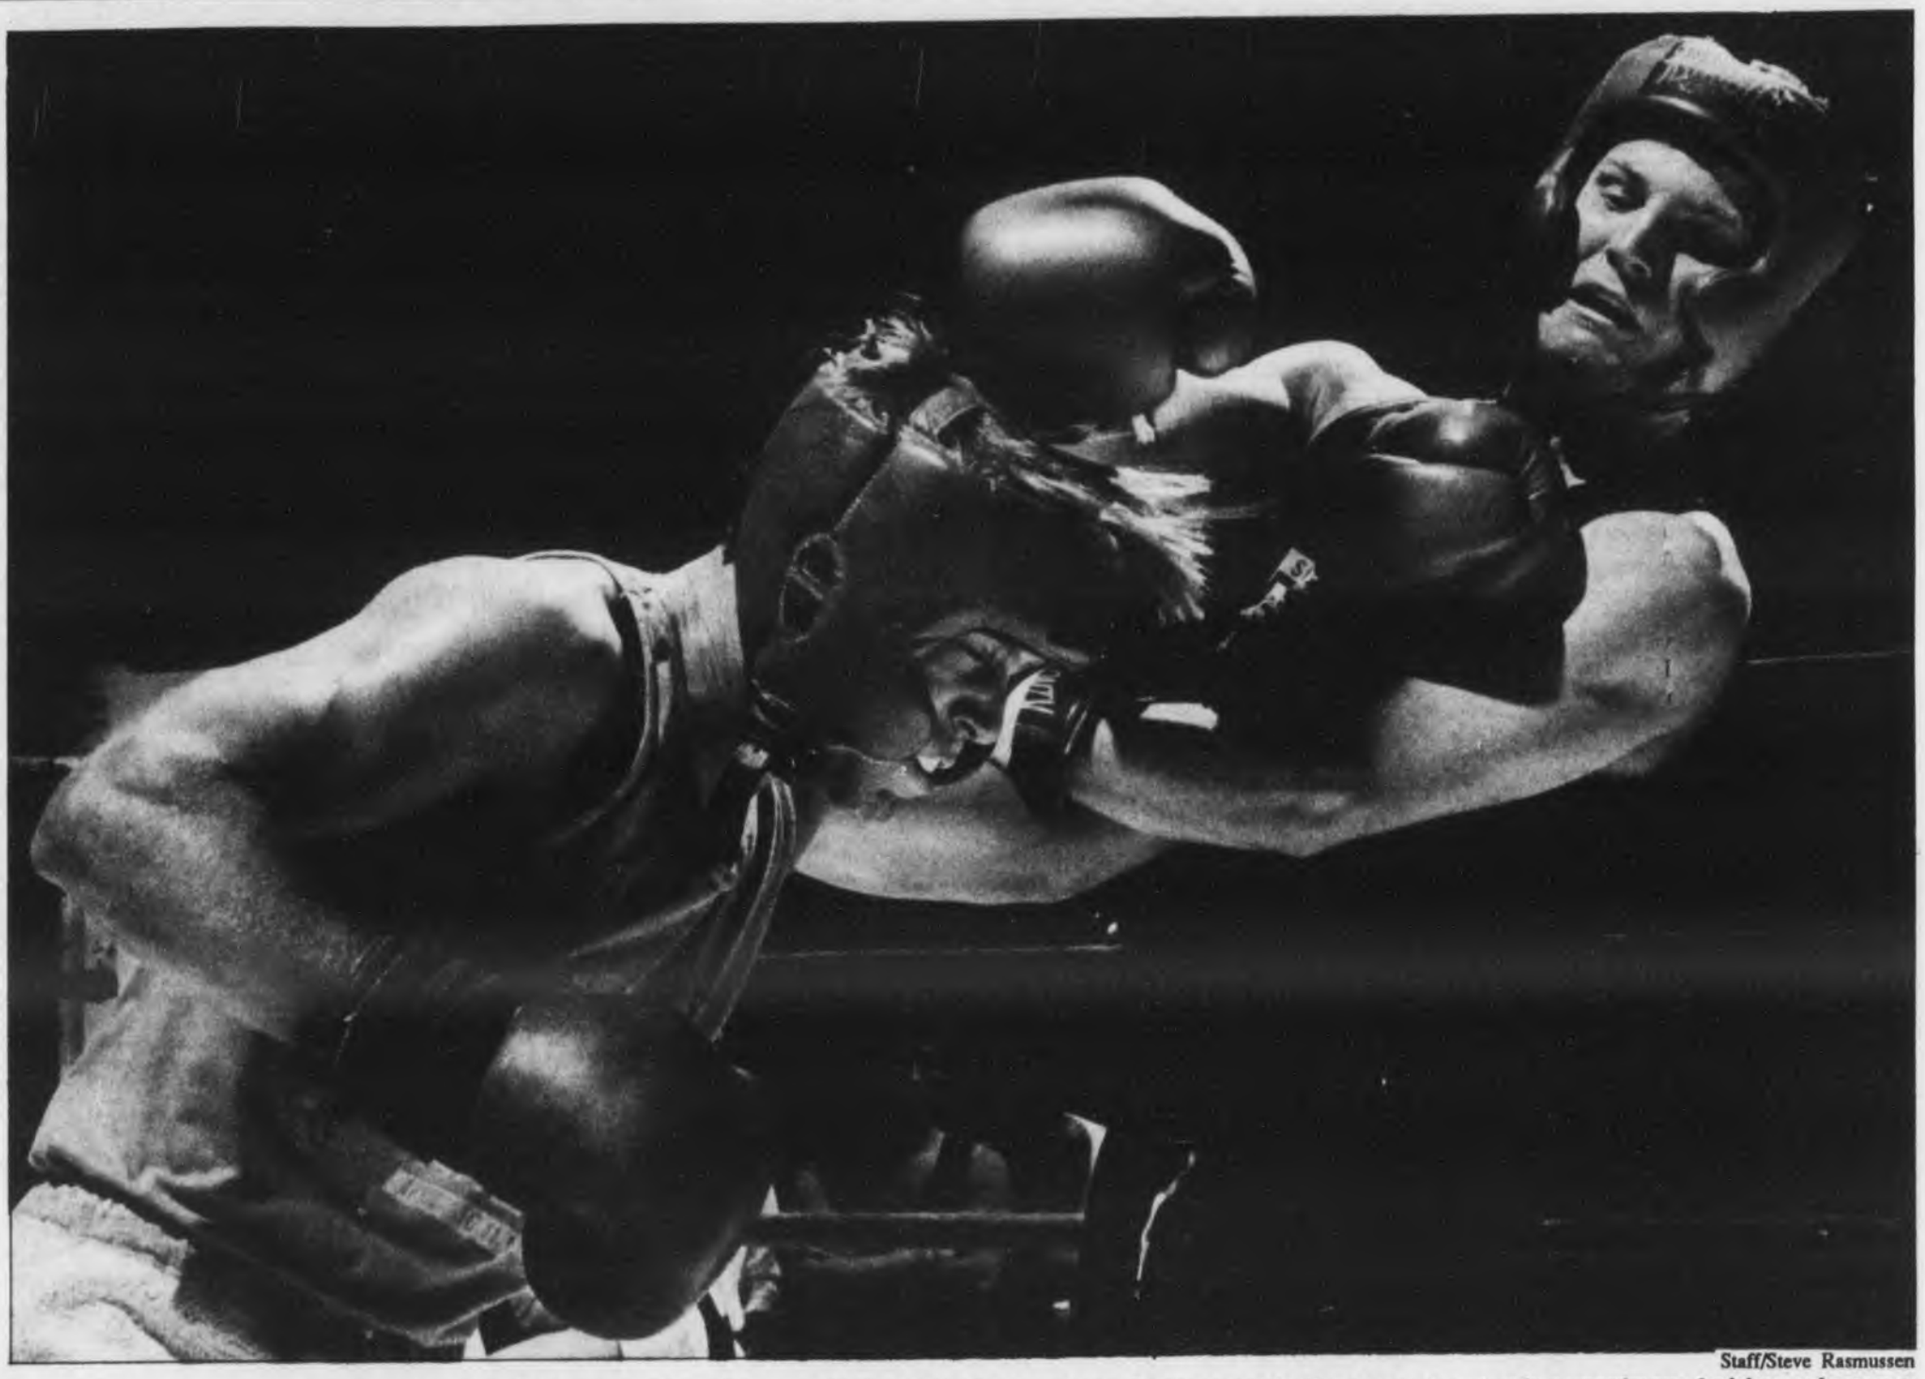
Final night of Fite Nite competitive

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

The boxing action Tuesday night at Weber Arena was as fierce as ever as finalists pummeled their ways through the championship round of the 9th Annual Sigma Phi Epsilon Fite Nite.

In an evening featuring 10 championship bouts, just one was decided by a knockout. That bout took place in the welterweight division as John Khoury, sophomore in bakery science from the Sigma Nu fraternity, disposed of his opponent in the third round. The referee stopped the bout at the 1:22 mark.



"I had a great time tonight and every night," Khoury said. "Last year, I trained hard and didn't win and then this year I didn't train hard and won. I think I just put (winning) out of my mind."

In a bout that presented some outstanding action, a crowd of more than 500 people saw Larry Forsythe, freshman in pre-physical therapy, and Allen Clouse, junior in business administration, stand toe-to-toe for almost the entire three rounds. Forsythe captured the unanimous decision and admitted afterward he enjoys that kind of action.

"I'm just a fiesty little wrestler," Forsythe said. "We have a lot of (wrestlers) in our house (Delta Tau Delta) and we just love those contact sports."

The bouts were refereed by the Golden Gloves clubs from Hutchinson and Topeka. Proceeds from the event go to help the American Heart Association. Danny Green, senior in marketing and chairman of Fite Nite for the Sig Eps, was very pleased with the three-night turnout of more than 1,500 people.

Chris Palmer, Sigma Nu fighter, lands a punch to the head of Scott Darger of Sigma Chi, during the light welterweight championship of the Sig-Ep Fite Nite Tuesday evening in Weber Arena. Darger won the three-round contest in a unanimous decision and was one of 10 champions crowned on the night.

Sports Briefly

Peterson pitcher of week

K-State junior pitcher Jeff Peterson has been named the Big Eight Conference's pitcher of the week for his performances against Oklahoma and Tarkio College.

Peterson threw a pair of complete-game wins over the two schools to improve his record to 5-1 on the season and lower his earned run average to 3.50.

For the week, the Birmingham, Mich., native pitched 14 innings and allowed only two earned runs. He picked up nine strikeouts and walked five hitters while allowing eight hits.

Peterson led K-State to its first win over Oklahoma since 1982 when he went the distance in the Wildcats' 3-2 victory over the Sooners Sunday. Against OU, Peterson gave up just four hits in completing his fourth game of the season. The victory was the 11th in his K-State career, placing him seventh on the school's career victory chart.

Golfers finish sixth at invite

K-State's women's golf team finished sixth among a nine-team field in the Husker Women's Golf Invitational, hosted by Nebraska, which concluded in Lincoln, Nebr. at the Par 71, 5,818-yard Mahoney Golf Course.

After entering the final round in the sixth position, the Wildcats tallied a final round of 341 today to go along with earlier rounds of 352 and 336 for a 54-hole score of 1,029. Winning the team title was Big Eight Conference foe Iowa State with a 54-hole score of 933.

Freshman Chris Adams topped the K-State individual scoring charts with rounds of 84-83-82 for a 249 total. Fellow freshman teammate Keli Blake notched rounds of 89-80-85 for a 254 score. Other K-State totals included Jill Zientara 85-85-89—259, Beth Holmberg 94-88-85—267 and Cory Harlow 97-93-96—286.

Iowa State's Kim Kessler claimed medalist honors for the tournament. She fired 18-hole rounds of 80-75-74 for a 229 total. Kessler had the low individual score in the final round with her two-over par 74.

"We didn't lose any ground in the final round. We did all right," K-State coach Rob Sedorcek said. "I was pleased to see Cory play well and for Chris and Beth to improve each round."

The women Wildcats' next action will be April 18-19 when they take part in the Kansas State Classic which will be contested at the Manhattan Country Club.

K-State Crew Day today

K-State's annual Crew Day will be today from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the courtyard between the Union and Seaton.

Troy Kolb, member of the crew team, said Crew Day gives students and faculty a chance to see what the team is like. The day is also a morale booster for the team, who will be competing in the President's Regatta this weekend in Topeka.

Kolb said racing shells and oars will be on display. A crew member will also be available throughout the day to answer questions.

He said that some members of the team will also be taking their oars to class.

Kruger 'positive' about signing day

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

See Lady Cats' signings story Thursday

While there will be much excitement nationwide concerning the initial day high school and junior college athletes can sign national basketball letters of intent, K-State coach Lon Kruger isn't overly excited about today.

As a matter of fact, the Wildcats "have a chance" to sign one athlete. That's about it.

But it doesn't mean Kruger has a negative outlook about next season.

"We're still visiting a couple of kids this weekend. With the way our season went, it's positive, but its backed up our chance to have kids come in for on-campus visits," Kruger said.

K-State's appearance in the NCAA's "Great Eight" this past season, and the All-Big Eight Conference final between Kansas and Oklahoma has sparked recruits' interest, Kruger said.

"We've noticed a little change in the recruits' tone, but I think the conference will realize more from what we did this year next fall," he said. "I think it will really help with the early-signing period (next year)."

The 'Cats, who finished 25-9 overall, ended up in eighth place in the final USA Today men's basketball poll and 10th in the Dunkel rankings.

K-State has three scholarships to offer, and will look to shore up the perimeter and inside games. Kruger will lose second team All-American Mitch Richmond, Will Scott, Charles Bledsoe, Ron Meyer — all starters — and reserves Mark Nelson and Walter Wright.

The loss of these players equals 50 of K-State's 75 points per game scoring average, and more than 20 of the Wildcats' average of 34 rebounds per game.

"You take a look at what we lose in Mitch and Will and we're looking to sign a perimeter scorer. And in losing Ron and Charles, we'd like to shore up the inside a little bit," Kruger said. "That would be the ideal scenario."

Since he had so much success from the junior college ranks with Richmond, Bledsoe, Scott, Fred McCoy, Buster Glover and Carlos Diggins, Kruger is once against concentrating his efforts in that area.

K-State has already signed Reggie Britt from Coffeyville Community College and Jeff Malham of Broken Arrow (Okla.) High School during the early-signing period.

Some players believed to be recruited by Kruger and his staff are Billy Ray Smith, a 6-foot-5, 225-pound forward from Midland, Texas; and Freeman West of Paris (Texas) Junior College.

Under NCAA rules, a coach is not allowed to comment on possible recruits.

Also believed to be recruited heavily by the 'Cats is Chris Morris of Independence Community College who signed with K-State two years ago but failed to make his grades. Morris averaged 24.9 points and 11.5 rebounds per game for Independence this past season.

From the high school ranks, K-State is reportedly hitting the St. Louis area hard. Possible recruits include Corney Warner and Sean

Ripken fired because of poor start

Robinson assumes Orioles' helm

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Frank Robinson became baseball's first black manager in four years on Tuesday when he was named to replace Cal Ripken on the Baltimore Orioles in a move made in an attempt to rescue the club from its worst start in 33 years.

"I don't profess to be a superman."
—Frank Robinson

Under Ripken, the Orioles opened the 1988 season by losing their first six games after finishing the 1987 season with a 67-95 record, the third-worst mark in the franchise's history.

Robinson, the first black to manage at the major league level, was also the last black to manage in the big leagues. He was fired by the San Francisco Giants in 1984.

"I don't profess to be a superman. But I do have ideas," Robinson said at a hastily called news conference at Memorial Stadium.

Baltimore General Manager Roland Hemond said had Robinson decided not to take job, Ripken would have stayed on as manager.

Robinson, elected to baseball's Hall of Fame in 1982, was six games into his first season in a front-office position as a special assistant to the president. He has been a member of the Orioles' organization as player, coach or in the front office for 13 years.

Robinson begins his third stint as a major league manager. His first assignment was with the Cleveland Indians from 1974-77, and then he was with the Giants from 1981-84.

"I don't think I ever felt the pressure of being in the position of being a black manager," Robinson said. "I am aware of the pressure of the position, but I don't let it bother me."

Only two other blacks have managed in the major leagues, Larry Doby with the Chicago White Sox in 1978 and Maury Wills managed Seattle in 1980-81.

Ripken, who has been in the Orioles' organization for 32 years, had no forewarning a move was going to be made.

"I'm disappointed, no question," Ripken said by telephone. "There was no indication that it was coming. I was in uniform. I was at my desk getting ready to write the lineup. Roland called me to come up to his office and he told me I was being relieved."

Earlier in the day, Ripken pleaded guilty to a drunk driving charge stemming from a Feb. 3 incident and agreed to continue treatment for alcohol abuse. Baltimore County District Court Judge Barbara Howe gave Ripken probation before judgment, fined him $750 and placed him on three years of probation.

Ripken had succeeded Earl Weaver as Orioles manager following the 1986 season, becoming the first man ever to manage two sons — Cal Ripken Jr. and Billy — simultaneously in major league baseball history. He had a 67-101 record as the Orioles manager over one season plus six games.

Hemond said Ripken will stay on with the Orioles in a front-office capacity.

Ripken, however, said he had not made up his mind about taking the new position.

Royals ruin Robinson's debut, beat Orioles, 6-1

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Frank White drove in four runs and Mark Gubicza gave up two infield hits in seven innings as the Kansas City Royals spoiled the Baltimore managing debut of Frank Robinson with a 6-1 win over the Orioles Tuesday night.

Robinson replaced Cal Ripken Sr., who was fired earlier in the day.

The Orioles are 0-7, the worst start in club history. In those seven games, Baltimore has been outscored 49-8.

Baltimore grabbed a 1-0 lead in the first inning on a sacrifice fly by Cal Ripken Jr. — one of two Ripken sons in the Orioles' starting lineup.

But the Royals roared back for three runs in the fourth on consecutive home runs by White and Bo Jackson. Danny Tartabull led off the inning with a walk and White hit his first homer of the season over the left-field fence. Jackson followed with his second homer, a line shot that carried more than 400 feet into the left-field bleachers.

White, who was 3-for-4, triggered a three-run Royals fifth with a two-run single. Kevin Seitzer opened with a single and consecutive walks to George Brett and Tartabull loaded the bases. Jim Eisenreich drove in a run with a sacrifice fly and White followed with a two-run single.

Gubicza, 2-0, allowed just three balls out of the infield before yielding to Dan Quisenberry in the eighth.

Robinson's first decision as Orioles manager was to give Oswald Peraza, 0-1, his first major league start.

Jason Miles, arts and sciences senator. "So we should concentrate on funding them to publicize their services, like we have done for the other clubs."

Dave Whetstone, agriculture senator, said the sports clubs are open only to students who can afford to pay the high dues and expenses for equipment and travel.

"If we could fund Sports Club Council enough to make it fully accessible, I would be in favor of this," Whetstone said, "but this is like the (KSU) Childcare Cooperative — increasing funding won't make it more accessible to K-State students."

Senate also debated whether or not sports clubs benefit students other than those directly involved.

Chris Kern, architecture and design senator, said the clubs promote K-State and are open to all K-State students.

Sports benefit all students as much as speakers do, said Matt Queen, Sports Club Council chairman.

Queen told senators that if they fund honorariums for speakers, they should also fund sports clubs.

"I don't see myself getting benefits from the services of the sports," Johnson said.

Senate debated the Sports Club Council budget 4½ hours before approving the finance committee's recommendation.

The Senate meeting opened with comments from President Jon Wefald, who commended senators for their "long hours, hard work and professionalism."

"This is the finest student body I've ever seen," Wefald said. "You are the ultimate in professionalism."

Wefald commended Senate for its vision and its ability to communicate and make decisions. He also mentioned the goals he has set and reached while at K-State, including increasing enrollment and improving K-State's image.

The recommended budgets for the International Coordinating Council, the Black Student Union, the college councils and the Fine Arts Council passed with little debate.

Tuesday night was the last night for tentative allocations. Appeals for allocations are due in the Student Government office by noon today and will be heard in Senate Thursday night.

"Students that have inquired about the program have been routinely directed toward Army ROTC and the National Guard," he said. "K-State offers a variety of options and a lot of viable opportunities.

"You can rest assured that we have had a full-court press on high school seniors. But, this is great news for high school seniors and their families."

The program had 101 participants when the announcement was made in January, but that number has since dropped to about 80.

Part of the reduction, Brown said, can be attributed to the number of freshman who believed they would have a difficult time transferring to another university and succeeding in the program.

"It's a natural tendency not to be excited about a program that is closing," Brown said.

However, Bosco said as soon as the announcement was made that the program would be closing, President Jon Wefald instructed Bosco's office to organize scholarships for the cadets on Air Force scholarship. The scholarships would enable students who wished to remain at K-State to do so, instead of transferring to another university to finish the ROTC program.

"The Air Force program year in and year out has made significant contributions to the University. We said at the beginning that it would be a loss if the program closed," he said.

Tom Townsend, sophomore in computer science, dropped out of the program in late February.

"I didn't want to have to go somewhere else to finish my program," he said.

Townsend said he was surprised when it was announced the program was closing and even more so now that the decision has been reversed. But now that the program is remaining open, he said Townsend would reconsider his decision.

(is no large black population)," Meek said.

Jackson won in urban counties such as Sedgwick and Wyandotte, where the Rainbow Coalition had been organized for some time, yet he also did surprisingly well in rural areas of the state.

Meek said Jackson's ablity to build a coalition between his urban supporters and farmers was the reason for his success in rural areas.

"...Rev. Jackson has been able to reach down and touch (farmers) and make them understand that, as he says, 'You cannot win without us and we cannot win without you,'" he said.

Jackson was able to empathize with farmers because of his experience of racism, Meek said.

"They relate to Jesse because he relates to their problems very clearly. Being male, black, having been displaced in the home, knowing what oppression is, knowing what it is to be disrespected and to get no help anywhere, it is very easy for him to relate to their problems."

Meek made it clear at a March delegate meeting in Topeka that the Rainbow will be a new force in Kansas politics after this election.

"The new power is the Rainbow Coalition. It's obvious. ...We saw it with the farm groups, we saw it in counties like Lyons County, Franklin County, Riley County. The people there thought they could win. Other people ignored them. The new power is the people," Meek said.

Speaker says jazz neglected by public due to rock music

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Jazz has become a misunderstood and neglected musical genre, composer Gunther Schuller said during a convocation address Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

"We live in a time when jazz is neglected and is now hanging on in an area which is largely being occupied by rock music," Schuller said. He delivered the last All-University Convocation for this year, and his appearance coincides with this week's activities associated with the 1988 Panorama of American Music, sponsored by the Department of Music.

"Jazz is a music whose heart and soul is improvisation. It contains an element of swing that makes us want to move and tap our foot."
—Gunther Schuller, composer

Part of the problem, he said, is that the public does not know the precise definition of jazz.

"Jazz is a music whose heart and soul is improvisation," he said. "It contains an element of swing that makes us want to move and tap our foot."

The evolution of jazz started in Europe and African countries, then made its way to America.

"Its harmony and form were created by the black people of the United States. All of its stylist thrusts were initiated by blacks," Schuller said.

"Today, it has become a world music, one that is played by people of all colors and nations," he said.

Although jazz music originated in this country, Schuller said most Americans do not take a serious interest in jazz.

"It is a musical ambassador, yet it is more appreciated in other countries than in the place it was born," he said.

All of today's popular music initially began as jazz, Schuller said.

Before jazz, it was rhythm and blues and after jazz it became swing, bebop and finally rock 'n' roll, he said.

Another factor Schuller attributes to the development of jazz is the advances made in instruments.

"When Louis Armstrong began playing the trumpet, his highest note was B flat," Schuller said.

As Armstrong's ability improved, so did his range, he said.

"Great musicians showed us it can be done," Schuller said. "Now, some musicians play in ranges where only dogs can hear."

Schuller said he believes jazz music brings innovative ideas to classical music by infusing elements of swing and a certain refinement.

Schuller played three selections of music which illustrated the vastness of the field of jazz.

"Jazz is a creative music with a long history," Schuller said. "It brought us improvisation, which added a new dimension to jazz that hadn't been there before."

Schuller, music director of the New England Ragtime Ensemble, has written more than 130 compositions, ranging from symphonies to operas to jazz.

Hijacking continues
Negotiations hit deadlock

By The Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — An Algerian official said Wednesday that Kuwait's "intransigence" had created a deadlock in negotiations with Shiite Moslem hijackers for the release of 32 hostages on a Kuwaiti jumbo jet.

Food and water were taken in the afternoon to the blue-and-white Boeing 747, which the hijackers call the "plane of martyrdom." It baked under the North African sun on an isolated patch of tarmac at Houari Boumedienne airport.

A delegation from Kuwait arrived Wednesday afternoon to help in efforts to free the remaining hostages and the plane, which was hijacked April 5 on a flight from Bangkok to Kuwait with 112 people aboard.

It spent three days on the ground in Mashhad, Iran, flew to Cyprus on Friday and arrived here early Wednesday.

The six to eight gunmen, who have killed two passengers, demand that Kuwait free 17 pro-Iranian extremists convicted in the 1983 bombings of the U.S. and French embassies there. The hostages included three members of the Kuwaiti royal family.

Sheik Nawaf al-Ahmed al-Sabah, Kuwait's defense Minister, affirmed Wednesday his country's "unwavering and principled stance of rejecting blackmail," the Persian Gulf sheikdom's official news agency KUNA reported. "We would not change our attitude."

A ranking Algerian official told The Associated Press privately: "If they merely wanted to restate their known position, there was no need for them to send their high-level delegation to Algiers."

Board approves treatment plant's expansion

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

The Manhattan Board of Zoning Appeals debated the definition of a water treatment plant in a two-hour public hearing Wednesday night as area residents continued their fight to save Goodnow Park, which is in the direct line of the proposed plant expansion.

The debate ended in a 3-2 decision in favor of the plant expansion, thus denying the residents' appeal of the Zoning Administrator's interpretation that the expansion of the Manhattan Water Treatment Facility is a conditional use in the residential districts.

Goodnow Park is located on Thurston Street, between 4th and 5th streets.

The main issue in the debate centered on the definition of a pumping station.

Under the city's current ordinance of conditional uses in a residential district, only the words "pumping station" are included, and area residents were adamant that if the city had wanted to include water treatment plants under the definition of pumping stations, then the ordinance would have so stated.

"We feel that allowing an expansion to the water treatment facility under the umbrella of pumping station is analogous to allowing a dog kennel in a neighborhood because a dog house is permitted," said Brenda Oppert, area resident.

Oppert cited three locations in Manhattan where water pumping stations are located. One is located near Memorial Hospital, a second is adjacent to Sunset Cemetery and a third is situated immediately to the east of the current water treatment plant.

"The term 'pumping stations' is clearly stated within the R1/R2 (residential districts) conditional use allowed list and can in no way be construed to encompass use as a public utility plant," Oppert said.

But City Attorney William Frost disagreed

State of emergency lifted in Honduras

By The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — The government on Wednesday lifted a state of emergency aimed at quelling anti-American violence, but two schools where the protests broke out remained closed and guarded by troops.

The emergency was imposed after 2,000 protesters enraged over the forced extradition of a suspected drug baron to the United States burned the U.S. Consulate and U.S. Information Service office on April 7.

"The causes for which the situation was decreed have disappeared and normality has returned," presidential spokesman Lisandro Quesada told reporters.

He said President Jose Azcona Hoyo had gotten no further death threats since the weekend, when he received three. "Nevertheless, we are continuing with an investigation to identify these people" who made the telephoned threats.

Quesada said full constitutional guarantees were restored at 6 a.m. Wednesday in Tegucigalpa and San Pedro Sula, 125 miles to the north. The decree was imposed Friday on the cities, the largest in the country.

Business, commerce and transportation were operating normally Wednesday.

Only the National Autonomous University and the National Teachers' School, whose students led the rioting, remained closed temporarily by government order.

Over the weekend, thousands of soldiers and police patrolled the streets of Tegucigalpa and San Pedro Sula. No incidents were reported and the troops returned to their quarters Monday.

Five Hondurans died in the rioting last week. The U.S. Embassy, located in the same complex as the burned offices, was not damaged.

Budget process challenging
Universities compete for limited funds

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

Spending K-State's $200 million-a-year-budget is no problem. The challenge lies in getting the money.

In the past, the focus was "give us what we had last year, but more of everything," said Don Hoyt, director of planning and evaluative services.

Regents tour campus/ Page 9

"Back then, the growth of institutions seemed endless, but when the honeymoon ended and the era of automatic support was over, we were forced to compete for limited state funds," Hoyt said.

"Instead of thinking bigger, we had to start thinking better."

At K-State, the process of "thinking better" is called strategic planning.

"We try to respond to the state's needs, while taking advantage of our unique strengths," Hoyt said. "(First, we look at) what it takes to run an institution with the core (of programs) we have now — this includes accounting for inflation."

Then each of the college deans prepares a list of program improvements and problem areas they would like adjusted for their college. These are called targeted investments.

This is added to the list of targeted investments in areas which are not covered by the college structure, such as the Telecommunications Center, said Provost James Coffman.

Once the programs are identified, the decision process begins.

Not all of the options are always available for solving all of the problems. For example, the College of Business Administration has difficulty securing research grants.

"Our work is not research oriented. The sciences have the National Science Foundation to fund projects. It is harder for us to identify sources of revenue," said Robert Hollinger, associate dean of the College of Business Administration.

Eventually, the part of the final University budget which K-State is requesting from the Legislature goes to the Board of Regents.

Members of the regents staff examine the budget and make recommendations to the board. The board has the final power to approve, amend or reject the budget requests before going to the Legislature, said John Struve, K-State budget director.

One of the regents' current emphases is reducing the duplication of programs offered within the system.

"It is a big priority every year during budget requests," said Stanley Koplick, regents executive director.

Once the regents have approved a budget request, it goes to the governor and eventually to the Legislature for consideration.

According to information from the budget office, 42 percent of K-State's money comes to the University through this process. The rest comes from gifts, grants and research contracts; student fees and interest; the federal government and other sources.

Regents are currently looking at a proposal which will add revenue

15 men killed in goat raid

NAIROBI, Kenya — Nine men were accused of sweeping into a nomadic camp, tying up 15 men and hacking them to death in a goat-rustling raid, a newspaper reported Wednesday.

Wielding spears, rifles and machetes, the rustlers killed the nomads and stole 2,500 goats in a March 30 raid near Garbatulla about 320 miles north of Nairobi, according to the independent Daily Nation.

Police tracked down the nine suspects, all Kenyans of Somali origin, earlier this month. The suspects denied the charges in court Tuesday, and another hearing was set for April 26, the newspaper said.

Rustling of cattle and other animals is common among eastern Africa's nomadic people.

FAA fines Eastern Airlines

WASHINGTON — The Transportation Department, worried about the financial health of Texas Air Corp., launched an investigation Wednesday into the finances and management of the nation's largest airline company.

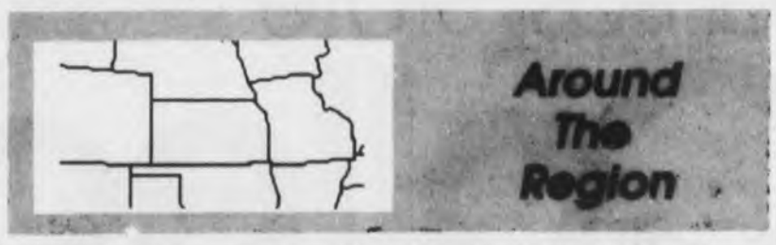
In a separate action, the Federal Aviation Administration imposed $823,000 in fines against a Texas Air subsidiary, Eastern Airlines, for violating safety regulations and said it has begun a new round of safety inspections of the Miami-based air carrier.

In announcing the two-pronged action against the Houston-based airline company, Transportation Secretary Jim Burnley said the department's concerns were raised by evidence that Eastern and Continental Airlines, also owned by Texas Air, "are under substantial, increasing financial pressure."

New substance kills bacteria

BATON ROUGE, La. — Scientists have developed three protein-based substances that can destroy certain bacteria, cancerous cells and virus-infected cells, Louisiana State University announced Wednesday.

However, the researchers said the tests have been limited to mostly test-tube experiments, and the substances are very expensive to produce and far from being ready for testing on humans.



Jesse Jaynes, a biochemist looking for ways to make food plants more resistant to bacteria, found the three compounds killed cells from mammals that were infected with any of about 30 disease-causing viruses, the university said.

Payton involved in shooting

SCHAUMBURG, Ill. — Former Chicago Bears running back Walter Payton was involved in the accidental shooting of the manager of his suburban restaurant Wednesday, police said.

The victim, identified as Elmer Hudson, was wounded about 3 p.m. when a third man handed the gun to Payton, 33, and the weapon discharged, Schaumburg Police Chief Kenneth Alley said at a news conference.

Payton was questioned and released and no charges are expected, Alley said.

Two human skulls identified

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Two human skulls found on the property of a Kansas City man charged with sodomy and torture have been identified as those of males, police said Wednesday.

Police added, however, that the skulls were not those of two missing men who have been linked by their families to Robert Berdella.

Police spokeswoman Sgt. Laura Mulloy said one skull was believed to be of a 44-year-old man and the other of a 27-year-old man. But, she said, those ages could be off by up to 12 years in either direction.

One of the skulls was found in Berdella's house April 2, and the other was unearthed the next day in his back yard. The search came after a man told police he had been held captive, tortured and sexually assaulted for days in Berdella's home.

Police have been investigating whether Berdella is involved in the disappearances of at least two men. Police will not say how many missing-person cases they are investigating in connection with Berdella.

The families of Gerald D. Howell, who was 19 when he disappeared in 1984, and Walter Ferris, who was 25 when he was last seen in 1985, told police Berdella was among the last persons seen with the men.

Police said neither skull matched the dental records of Howell or Ferris.

Mulloy said police also have positively identified five people and tentatively identified eight others shown in more than 200 photographs taken from Berdella's house.

Singing telegram turns violent

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A man who called bank employees together on the pretext of delivering a singing telegram produced an unexpected instrument — a sawed-off shotgun.

Police said the casually dressed man carried a vase of flowers and a balloon into the Savings of America bank Tuesday afternoon, announced his intentions somewhat nervously, and waited until the drive-up teller had finished with a customer.

Then, with the tellers all gathered behind the counter, he opened his jacket to reveal a gun held in a sling and announced the robbery. Tellers emptied three cash drawers into a bag carried by the man, who fled with an undisclosed amount of money.

Tests evaluate foreign GTAs' English skills

Passage required for teaching contract

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

Foreign students who want to become graduate teaching assistants at K-State must be concerned with more than their academic records.

Two years ago, K-State made passing the Test for Spoken English mandatory for all foreign GTAs.

The test is devised by the Educational Testing Service in Princeton, N.J., and consists of six parts. The prospective GTA must read a paragraph aloud, complete a sentence grammatically, create a story from pictures, answer questions about a picture, answer a general question or discuss an issue and explain a class syllabus as would be done on the first day of class.

Enid Cocke, director of sponsored projects in Continuing Education, administers the test and records on tape the students' answers. Two graders then grade the tape, giving a score of 0-3 to each of the six sections. The scores are then averaged and multiplied by 100. A score of 220 is considered passing at K-State.

If discrepancies occur between the graders, an additional grader is called in and the three scores are averaged. On the scale, a 2 is considered to be comprehensible English with grammar and pronunciation errrors, and a 3 is completely comprehensible English with few grammar and pronunciation errors.

Last fall, 39 students passed the test and 26 failed it, Cocke said.

Although the requirements differ by department, most students must take other tests as well as the TSE to determine their grasp of the English language.

Kenneth Klabunde, head of the chemistry department, said his department has about 45 GTA positions, of which 15 to 20 are filled by foreign students.

The GTAs in chemistry must have passed the Test of English as a Foreign Language before they can take the TSE, he said. The student must score at least 550 out of 650 on the TOEFL, which is part written and part oral and tests basic English skills.

"For some people it's not possible to come in and take the (TSE), so after reviewing their academic record and the TOEFL results, we ask them to send an audio tape," Klabunde said. "If we think they can pass the Test for Spoken English then we will offer a contract."

The student must then pass the TSE.

Klabunde said department officials are getting better at choosing students they think can pass the test.

"We are taking a risk if they fail the test because they have already been offered a contract," he said. "In those rare cases of failing, we put the students to work in the storeroom or grading."

Klabunde said the students have the academic background to teach, but because they talk too fast or with an accent, they are often hard to understand.

"The TSE requirement does eliminate quite a number of applicants who are very good students," Klabunde said. "These students are the cream of the crop from their countries, but even though they understand English they must be able to enunciate and communicate."

The number of complaints by students being taught by foreign GTAs has decreased since the test requirement, Klabunde said, adding that he has received no serious complaints for more than a year. When complaints were received they normally concerned the GTAs accent and rapid speech.

He said his department is trying to increase the number of American GTAs.

"We would prefer to have domestic GTAs, but there just aren't a whole lot of American students doing graduate work in our field," Klabunde said.

Speaker: Money controls planning

Britain's development plagued by difficulties

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

Picture the population of Kansas expanding to 60 million overnight.

Then add to that the expansion and development that is currently happening in small to mid-size Kansas towns.

That's the planning problem Britain is facing.

Although Britain is about the same size as Kansas, Kansans probably aren't as concerned with the planning of their rural areas as the British, said Paul Cloke, professor of geography at St. David's University-University of Wales.

This is because there are 60 million people living on the island of Britain, while there are only two million people living in Kansas.

"To understand planning, you must understand the context in which it takes place," Cloke said. "Capital accumulation is the driving force for change and economic restructuring."

On Wednesday, Cloke addressed rural planning and development and the factors involved in reaching planning decisions in his lecture "Rural Policy and Planning: The Importance of Theories in the State."

Cloke used theories to explain the planning problems Britain is facing as a result of its disappearing recreation lands.

Most counties in Britain award contracts to developers on the merit of building gains, Cloke said. Building gains are considered bribes in the United States.

"If a housing area developer wants to build on an area, he might tell the county commissioners that he will also build a hospital worth one million pounds," he said. "He will usually be allowed to build, because the county officials know that they won't get a chance to receive something for nothing very often."

Contributing to the idea that money controls the development situation in Britain, Cloke said that 40 percent of the development is done by one-half of 1 percent of the developers.

Distribution is the key to succeeding in the planning stages, he said. The government often bases its planning decisions on how much of the economic redistribution the lower classes and welfare groups will receive from the development, but often these groups never receive the supposed benefits.

One factor in the change of the planning procedures for rural areas in Britain is a new governmental policy that takes power from the rural areas and centralizes it.

The Prime Minister "Margaret Thatcher regime" has shifted the government policy from one of localized government to one with an emphasis on centralized government, Cloke said. This government has seen a shift from emphasis on the public sector to the private sector over the last eight years.

"If you ever want to get a change through, call it modernization," Cloke said. "That's what the Thatcher government does."

"They say that they aren't changing anything and that there won't be any major differences — they are just modernizing the policy," he said.

These policies let the central government assume more power and exert more control over local development, Cloke said. Public participation allows people to feel like they have a part in the decisions made, but they are not as effective as they might think.

"In Britain, public participation is like wall paper," Cloke said. "It's up there, it looks good, but there is still a wall behind it."

The governmental groups with large amounts of capital are the ones that decide how land will be developed, he said.

Elderly minorities face lack of services

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

Elderly minorities have unique problems that cannot be dealt with by conventional means, said Patricia Washington, chairwoman of the department of minority studies at Wichita State University.

Washington presented "Factors that Affect Service Delivery for Minority Elders" Wednesday at the Union. The speech was sponsored by K-State's Student Gerontology Club (Alpha Gamma Epsilon), Minority Affairs and the Center for Aging.

One of the biggest problems facing minority elders now and which she perceives to be the biggest problem in the future is the amount of resources available to service programs, Washington said.

"The number of minority elders who qualify for the services is increasing while the resources are being reduced," she said. "This affects the health, housing, quality of life and quality of services provided to the elderly."

Despite a significant increase in service programs to elders in the past 20 years, some senior citizens are not being helped, Washington said. A variety of factors can be attributed to this, including transportation, suspicion of government programs and some people's pride prohibiting them from participating in welfare programs.

"The best way to increase minority participation in these programs is to hire minority staff," she said.

Another way to reach the elderly in Kansas is through ministers and churches, Washington said.

"Something that may surprise people is the number of well-educated, well-qualified professionals in Kansas," she said. "Kansas sometimes undersells itself."

Another problem facing minority elders is the physiological and biological toll their bodies take, Washington said.

"There are gaps in income, unemployment and low wages between minority and Anglo elders — things that began 20, 30, 40, 50 years ago," Washington said. "These things make minority elders tend to age much faster than Anglo elders."

Minorities' jobs are often more strenuous and life threatening, she said. Also, the minority elders of today lived in a time of rigid segregation which cause their bodies to deteriorate much more quickly.

Forensics team completes season

By The Collegian Staff

The forensics team ended its season Monday at the national tournament by finishing in the top half of competition.

"K-State probably finished in the top half of the 112 schools competing," said Lynne Ross, coach of the team.

Brad Atchison, senior in speech, made the best showing at the event making it into the quarterfinals of the Prose and Dramatic Interpretation, Ross said. The team's other seven members failed to pass the first round.

Despite this, she said having eight students qualify for the national meet is an accomplishment.

The team has won about 150 awards this year, Ross said.

K-State's district includes Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, she said, and from that district, only six events made it to quarterfinals, and two of those were from K-State.

"That makes K-State's accomplishment sound a little better because our particular district just did not have a good national tournament," Ross said.

Jason Brown, team member and freshman in speech, said he was happy that Atchison competed so well.

"I was really happy for Brad. He did a really good job," he said.

Although Brown said the team didn't have its best showing of the year, he expects the team members to improve because of the experience they have gained.

"In a few years it will be a potentially powerful squad," he said.

Take time today to see Board of Regents work

They'rrreeee heerrrreee!

No, the Kansas Jayhawks are not in town to thank their many adoring fans, but the Kansas Board of Regents is on campus today to discuss tuition and fees for the 1989-1990 school year.

During their two business meetings today, the regents will also consider requests for improvement projects at the seven regents schools as well as the response of the six universities under their authority to a regents' staff proposal on undergraduate education assessment.

But the biggest issue of concern to students — the proposed increase of tuition and fees for the 1989-1990 school year — is scheduled for discussion during the afternoon business meeting at 1:30 in the Cat's Pause Lounge of the Union.

This meeting, as well as the 9:30 a.m. session in the Cat's Pause Lounge, is open to the public.

By visiting K-State to conduct their April meetings, the regents are offering everyone at K-State a unique opportunity to observe the policy-making process for regents schools. All those affected by actions taken by the regents should take time to stop by and see them in action.

Iran-Contra players mustn't be pardoned

The talk of presidential pardons in the Iran-Contra affair has once again been stirred up. And the person doing the stirring, surprisingly enough, is former President Richard M. Nixon, who was granted a pardon by Gerald Ford for his part in the Watergate scandal.

In an interview that was taped Saturday and broadcast Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," the former president said that Ronald Reagan should consider pardoning John Poindexter and Oliver North if Reagan believes they took part in the affair to serve his presidency.

Nixon said Reagan must ask himself "Did these two men do what they did, believing, whether mistakenly or not, that they had the approval of the president or were acting in order to serve his interests and would get that approval?"

Also, Nixon said that he should have pardoned his former aides John Ehrlichman and H.R. Haldeman, who served time in prison after being convicted of conspiracy and obstruction of justice.

The idea of Reagan pardoning members of his administration who have been convicted of crimes is a very serious issue. By pardoning these men, Reagan would, in effect, be saying that it is acceptable to violate the laws of this country if it is in service of the president.

This attitude that the president and the people serving him are beyond the scope of the law is dangerous. One of the principal constraints on the president are the laws passed by Congress detailing what actions he can and cannot take. Once the president thinks these laws may be disregarded, the potential for the president to abuse his powers would greatly increase.

If Poindexter or North broke the law, it is unimportant whether or not they were serving the president's interests at the time. If the two men broke the laws of this country and are found guilty, they should be punished and should not receive a pardon.

The same reasoning applies to the presidency. Ford should not have pardoned Nixon. And if it is found that Reagan violated the law, he too should be held accountable for those actions.

The president cannot be above the law. Not only would it be unfair to the rest of the people who must obey the law, it would be perilous to have someone in charge with such extensive powers who was not bound by the laws of this country.

Encouraging mediocrity

Minimum competency tests useless

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

The room is silent. Thirty-four industrious students work over their desks, diligently answering questions with their little Husky pencils. A person raises his hand to go to the bathroom. The tension breaks. Finally, the instructor calls time. The group immediately becomes animated. They stretch, they yawn, a few get up and go out for a drink of water. The first section of the test is done. Only seven more to go. No, they're not being tested to get their CPA — it's only a group of 4th graders taking the minimum competency examinations

If you went to grade school or high school in Kansas, you probably remember taking those long, boring competency tests at one time or another. You know, the ones that got you out of regular classes for about 1½ days while you sat in a stifling room silently filling in the little oval marks in the answer booklet with a No. 2 lead pencil.

They seemed to last forever. There were only a few things worse than taking the actual tests. One was sitting there listening to the teacher repeat the same old instructions over and over again each time you did a different section of a test. The other was wondering how you actually did on the test and what they did with the scores when you were finished with it.

We talked about it a lot back then. I mean, it was called a minimum competency test; what if we weren't minimally competent? Would they call our parents? Would we flunk out of school? Would they announce it in front of the entire class, even that cute blonde in the second row? Would we have to go back a grade and take special classes until we could pass?

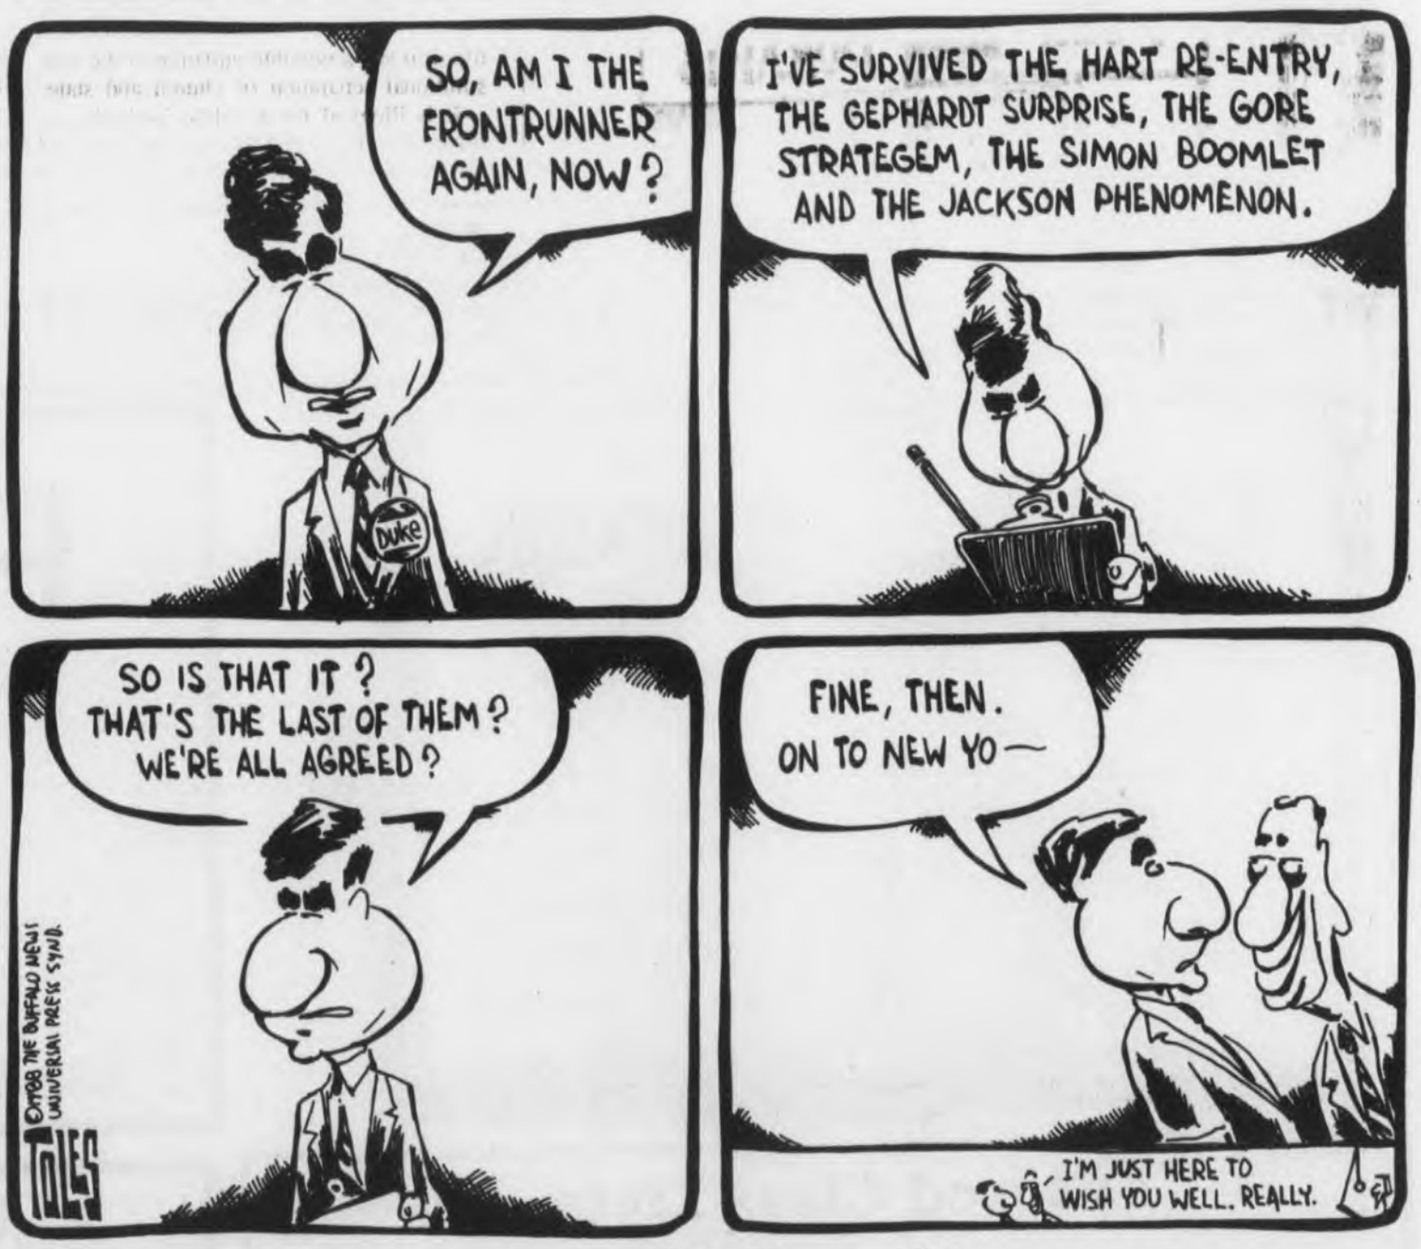
Actually the real use of the results was even worse. Nobody really did anything with them. Apparently, ever since the testing program was started in Kansas in 1979, the results haven't been used for anything useful at all. They were set up to be used as information for principals and parents of students. And that's it. In fact, according to state board of education member Kathleen White of Prairie Village, only 44 percent of school principals were even concerned if their students did poorly on the tests.

Just think, all those years we sat through those tests, and they haven't really been used, except maybe to compare your school district to the neighboring one. You could have been tested as minimally competent and no one would have done anything about it. There are no laws requiring remedial training for those who do not meet the minimal standards of the state.

However, that is all about to change. The 1988 Legislature passed a bill that was signed into law last Friday that requires school districts to identify students who fail the tests. It also encourages schools to set up remedial education programs to help the weaker students out.

Gee, that's great. Our school districts are being encouraged. Our same old underpaid, overworked teachers are being encouraged to set up remedial classes to help the weak students, as if they don't have enough to do. Gosh, the Legislature can't use much stronger language than that, can it? I bet the school districts around the state will be instantly galvanized into action on this issue.

The Legislature is waffling. If it wants something to be done, why doesn't it mandate it instead of vaguely encouraging it?



In fact, this new mandate sounds sort of familiar. Kind of like when two years ago the state board of education adopted a resolution to urge local school districts to establish remedial programs to help those who fail the tests. It sounds so familiar that you may well be wondering if this original appeal from the board worked.

It didn't. Granted, some school districts do it, but then again, some districts don't. In fact, some school districts ignore the mandate and the test results almost completely.

So what's the point? These tests aren't cheap. Not only in terms of money but in terms of the time it takes students and educators away from class. If there are superintendents and school boards which choose to completely ignore the tests, why should they be mandatory? They aren't going to utilize the test results anyway, so it is just a big waste of time only for the purpose of meeting the state board of education's minimal requirements.

I'm not suggesting that we scrap the system. I think we need the test as a safety check to make sure that our students are getting a quality education, and to prevent students who are not fully competent from leaving the system until they are. What I am suggesting is that either the Legislature or the state board of education needs to take a stand on the issue.

Enough of these wimpy encouragement acts. If we are going to have the test, make schools use it for the good of the students. The tests were originally hoped to target students for remedial education, but apparently that is not happening. We've waited nine years for the school boards to take the hint, by giving them these nicely phrased encouragements. Now it's time to be serious and mandate them into action.

Senate must separate funds, 'political' groups

Deciding who's good, bad not easy task

The manner in which Student Senate allocates receipts generated from student activity fees should be a matter of interest for the entire student body. In this regard, I pose this question: Are you willing to pay student activity fees to support student groups that do not provide a tangible service to the student body and that primarily exist to promulgate their own ideologies and philosophies?

This very question was asked of Senate last Thursday during debate on the 1988-89 allocations bill. The question was tentatively answered when Senate voted to grant the K-State chapter of Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights $275.91 and $253.40, respectively.

Not much money you say? Quite right, and as a point of fact it represents only about 0.2 percent of the projected budget for fiscal year 1988-89. So what's the point? The point is that issues such as these are very significant when one views this budget as a statement of values that Senate imposes on the student body.

Amnesty International is a private, secular organization funded by its 500,000 dues-paying members and various fund-raising activities. (So why does it even need public money?) It is, ostensibly, a non-political organization, but by whose rules and whose definitions? At its south London international headquarters, the organization maintains tightly guarded archives on people it considers political dissidents.

In 1986, on the 25th anniversary of the group's inception, the newsmagazine L'Espresso of Rome noted that Amnesty International was "pointing the finger at 123 nations judged to be insufficient guarantors of human rights, ... including the United States." Now, I am not arguing that the United States is faultless (because it is not), but can it be possible that, regardless of the intent, one can legitimately claim to be (by definition) non-political, yet decide what constitutes political dissension and an inadequate political system? It seems like a supreme contradiction.

Since by now you might think that I am a displaced totalitarian bent on silencing groups that support human rights, let me assure you that nothing is further from the truth. To me, Amnesty International and (from what I can tell) the Coalition for Human Rights are worthwhile, honorable organizations. I fully believe that knowledge is power and that the uninhibited flow of information and ideas is the bulwark of an enlightened society.

But we should not use public funds to support groups that espouse any ideology or philosophy that may be even remotely construed as political, because where is the line drawn? Are we truly prepared or properly equipped to start deciding which groups are right or wrong, which are good or bad? Can we, in good conscience, review on a case-by-case basis (as some senators suggest) the politics of every group that requests funding?

Some senators argue that we should support Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights because they "do a good thing." But that completely misses my point, which is that the wall erected between public funds and groups of this nature should be so stout that nary a wisp of philosophical sentiment or purpose may penetrate. Perhaps, since my line of reason and logic has been roundly likened to "laboring under a misconception," I shall defer to Thomas Jefferson.

Since by now you might think that I am a displaced totalitarian bent on silencing groups that support human rights, let me assure you that nothing is further from the truth. To me, Amnesty and (from what I can tell) the Coalition are worthwhile organizations.

Jefferson, understand, was often cited for similar evil transgressions, but he was much more eloquent than I. He wrote that "government under no circumstances should interfere with the conscience of the people."

Good advice, even for Student Senate.

Commentary

Guest Columnist

The recent commotion over the success of the K-State basketball team, and the attendant rewards offered those involved with the program, emphasize once again the differences between the way athletics and academics are viewed both inside and outside most universities.

The widespread coverage of the team and its coaches is in sharp contrast to the attention garnered by most of the academic programs at K-State.

The purpose of a university is to educate those who seek knowledge, to promote an atmosphere that yields the best in original thought, and to provide services to the citizens who support the institution. Athletics are often a part of the overall milieu, but even the sanctioning bodies of collegiate athletics profess that team members are student-athletes, putting the emphasis on the academic role.

It is clear that athletics and academics approach and achieve their goals differently. Athletic programs — especially for the big, money-making spots — are public by nature, drawing their sustenance from fans (although many of the individual athletes are no doubt sustained by their own drive to succeed).

The budgets for these programs are separate to some degree from the academic budgets, and better teams stimulate more ticket sales and alumni donations.

It was impossible to miss the rush to renegotiate the salaries of the basketball coaches after their recent success — an option made feasible, in part, by the relatively small size of coaching staffs compared to most academic units.

This is not to demean the substantial efforts and good will generated by teams and coaches. Furthermore, it must be recognized that most coaches do not have tenure and, hence, can be dismissed for reasons that are not inherent to the academic tradition.

It is possible, however, to miss the fact that there is no such rush to renegotiate the contracts of faculty members who attract funds and bring a high degree of scholarship to K-State.

For example, several members of the Department of Physics were responsible for obtaining support for a unique facility where important research will be conducted; the director of the Division of Biology has brought in several large grants in the last several years for research and teaching; and the K-State debate team has been rated as high as No. 2 in the country (during which time it had to hold a concert to raise money to attend national debates).

As far as I know, none of these "victors" were met with banners at the airport nor were their salaries urgently renegotiated in a show of appreciation or as a pre-emptive effort to keep those involved from going to other universities.

Unlike athletics, academic honors tend to be subtle, with the participants neither seeking nor expecting public ceremonies. Very few of the seminal achievements in science or the humanities were accompanied by cheering and public kudos. Instead, academic efforts are appreciated by a small crowd of people who understand the importance of the contribution (this is a critical difference, too, between academics and athletics, where a win or a record is instantly recognizable as an important event).

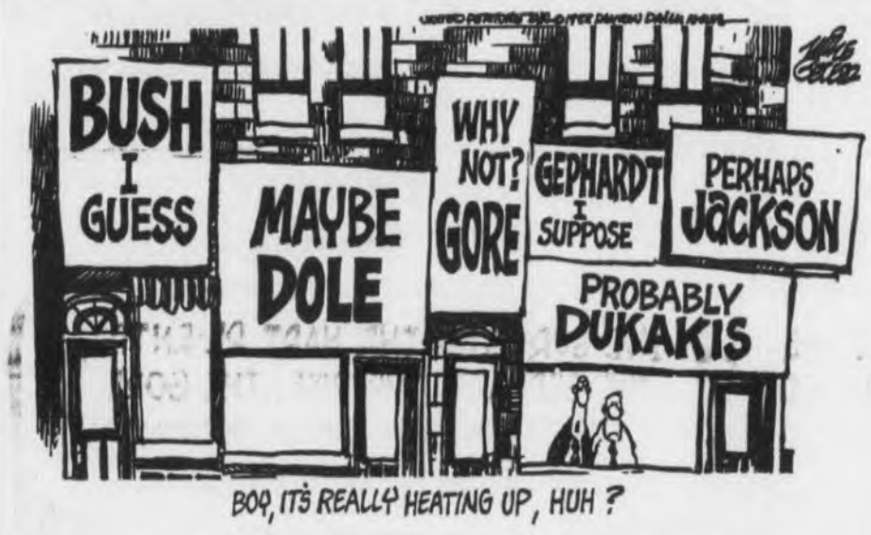
Granted, athletic and academic systems are historically different in their approach to rewarding recent success. As we have just witnessed, the value of a successful coach who is actively and publicly recruited by another institution is quite high, generating tremendous pressure to match the offerings of other interested universities.

Top scholars can also visit other campuses, receive offers, and negotiate for raises and other benefits, but it is a buyer's market in academics, with many young, capable and relatively inexpensive professors waiting to move in when tenure-track vacancies occur.

Furthermore, if such negotiations do take place, they occur out of view; rarely is there any public pressure to retain the best and most successful faculty members.

While coaches may receive raises in excess of 10 percent when they have a successful year, faculty members who "have a good season" during a year when the Legislature appropriates only modest salary increases may receive one-fifth that amount.

Efforts are made at K-State — through such programs as Celebrate the Arts and Celebrate the Sciences — to honor the purpose of and participants in important academic achievements, but it is very unusual for salaries to be sugared simply as a reward for doing an excellent job in the primary role of the University.



The differences in attention paid to athletics and academics are neither new nor unique to K-State, but they help explain why K-State has had three basketball arenas and no art gallery, why the public rushes to support a coach who may depart while not knowing or caring about a library sinking in standing as a research facility, and why a 6-5 football team and a trip to an undistinguished bowl game is considered a great success while prominent scholars are insulted by low salaries or are allowed to leave for more rewarding positions.

All of the reasons why academics and athletics are perceived and appreciated differently are proximate reasons, however. The ultimate reasons lie with a society that places a higher value on short-term success on the field rather than on the stated objectives of academic institutions.

That is not to say that academics and athletics can't cohabit the university scene; for while some universities are known for their scholarship and others for athletics, some universities are renowned for both.

Holiday choice

Editor,

This is in response to Cindy Bogue's letter in the April 1 Collegian concerning the decision of the University to "trade" the Easter holiday break for Martin Luther King Jr.'s holiday.

In my opinion, her response favoring an Easter holiday break completely missed the point. To celebrate such a holiday is both illogical and a possible violation of the constitutional separation of church and state.

It is illogical for a public institution to select one holy day of any religion and observe it as an official holiday. Christianity is one of many religions in the world today. Indeed, if a religion's antiquity is a criterion for its importance and validity, then Christianity's 2,000-year history pales in significance to more ancient religions such as Hinduism, Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, Judaism, Confucianism and Taoism.

Furthermore, the ancient religions of Mesopotamia and Egypt — which influenced world religions — were and are just as valid and true to those who believe as Christianity is to its adherents. If the alleged resurrection of a religion's prophet or founder is a criterion for its importance and validity, then the ancient Egyptian religion is on a par with Christianity.

Osiris, who was believed to have been an historical king in ancient Egypt and also to have risen from the dead, was worshiped for thousands of years by those who believed that eternal life would be attained through him.

The point is this: If a Christian holy day is made an official holiday, then it is only logical and fair to celebrate other religions' holy days. This is obviously not only unfeasible but also, for a public institution, inappropriate.

My second point is the guarantee by the U.S. Constitution's First Amendment for the separation of church and state. "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Briefly stated, it is unconstitutional for the government to favor any particular religion. This guarantee was further illustrated and interpreted by Thomas Jefferson, who used the phrase "a wall of separation between church and state."

This guarantee has been extended to both federal and state government and to all public institutions. The result is a very positive one: The freedom of all religions is guaranteed. In my opinion, since K-State is a public institution and receives state funding, it would be inappropriate to single out a Christian holy day as an official holiday.

Wrong priorities

Editor,

I can't tell you how encouraging it is to attend college in a system where the controlling body has its priorities set straight. That's because I have never had that experience. Nothing is greater evidence of this confusion of priorities than the class scheduling of this past week.

Our beloved Board of Regents in its infinite wisdom declared that we do not need a day off to celebrate Easter. The resurrection of Christ is not a sufficiently important day to merit a long weekend to allow students to return home and celebrate it with their families. On the other hand, a victory in a basketball game is. Following the April 4 NCAA championship game, classes at the University of Kansas were canceled on April 5. KU's victory over Oklahoma is obviously a much more significant event in history than the death and resurrection of Jesus, the cornerstone of the most important religion in man's history.

I consider it quite tragic that a day in honor of Jesus should be taken away and given to Martin Luther King Jr. Dr. King is obviously a much more important man than Jesus Christ. After all, Christ merely set the cornerstone of the philosophy King preached. It took King to proclaim this philosophy again and make people listen to it.

Don't misunderstand what I am saying. I am in no way denigrating or belittling Dr. King's work. I don't even question whether he is deserving of a day in his honor. He was a great man and, most importantly, a man of God. But I am sure that even Dr. King would be outraged to see the regents of this state placing him in a position higher than his savior. Doing so is contrary to everything that King most deeply believed, and is a disgrace to his legacy. Elevating a basketball team to a position of higher honor is utterly beneath contempt.

Funds questioned

Editor,

I would like to question the decision made at the last Student Senate meeting to provide funds for such groups as Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights. Although I am not in any way against these groups, that is not the point. Money supplied through student fees should be allocated to groups that provide a service in some way to the University. What Student Senate is now doing is setting a precedent to fund virtually any group on campus based on political decisions as to whether we believe in what the group stands for.

My question is, where will it stop?

Thanks, Senate

Editor,

This is a letter to "thank" Student Senate for its decision not to pass the bill for a $1 fee increase for the KSU Childcare Cooperative. Because of this decision, I and other K-State students are being forced to find alternative day care for our children. The co-op is eliminating its low-income students by increasing fees and not accepting provider payments from Social and Rehabilitative Services.

Well, let's chalk another one up for the low-income student! Just when they feel like they're getting ahead, someone pulls the plug (namely Senate). I will never use the Fred Bramlage Coliseum, and yet $8.25 a semester comes out of my pocket to help pay for it.

I will never use the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, and yet I fork out $2.50 a semester for it. Most of the special fees I pay are for things I do not use.

So what's the big deal about $1 for the co-op? Don't you think that the students who need it deserve it? Do you think they would ask for it if they didn't need it? According to a poll on campus, a substantial majority of students approved of the $1 fee increase. Aren't you supposed to be representing these students?

"Thanks" again, Senate, for all you've done. I only hope that none of you ever has to face the dilemma these people are going through (nor the sleepless nights)! I also hope that my 4-year-old daughter will understand when I try to explain to her that she will have to leave all her friends and a class she loves because of a lousy $1 fee (that would have been for a very worthy cause). Now Juli Kramer has what she wants: child care that only the elite can afford.

Keep funding

Editor,

Bernie Giefer brought out the point that marginal funding for campus groups like Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights is a politically motivated decision that should be rescinded. This funding was considered in Student Senate and overwhelmingly voted in its present form. Since it fast seems to be turning into an issue, I will state some of the reasons behind the decision. I cannot find anything amiss either in the rationale of the argument or in consistency with similar requests or past precedents.

Human rights are not an issue on which the Constitution of the country maintains a silence. We are too close to the bicentennial to forget that. It has been argued that the Declaration of Independence be considered as the first manifesto on human rights.

The foreign policy of the nation is run on the notion that this country believes in human rights. When this country fails in observing its commitment, at home or abroad, it is something that is played down and not boasted about. The Department of Defense does not celebrate the Mai Lai massacre in Vietnam but apologizes for it.

Further, the nation is supposed to be trying to eradicate bigotry, racism and other social ills. Respect for human rights is part of that. Organizations on campus that raise the consciousness about such issues and help round off our education are a service to all students. The funding is by no means extravagant, but this is a clear statement of where the mainstream stands.

This right-wing attack is like sawing off the very branch supporting it all. If they do not like these basic values, maybe they should consider emigration to the Soviet Union.

Collegian threat

Editor,

We select our student senators under the ideal of a representative democracy in hopes that our representatives will voice what they believe so that all sides may be discussed. To criticize intelligent viewpoints and discourage dissention is to undermine the foundations of that democracy.

Add my name to the growing list who support Bernie Giefer's move to question the funding of politically motivated groups. The Collegian's weak analysis and shallow assertions in an unsigned editorial Wednesday did little to sway me from this belief. All the Collegian managed to do was seek to stifle debate on a popular Senate issue — a threat to any democratic society.

Play to feature vaudeville comedy

By Carrie A. Miller
Contributing Writer

Gather together two very revolutionary women, their gullible, yet well-meaning husbands, a maoist cop, a Keystone cop and the patron saint of pregnancy. Govern them all in true Italian comedic tradition, and they combine to form a well-conceived and finely executed farce.

Play Preview

Written by the Anarchist playwright Dario Fo and directed by Jim Hamilton, associate professor of philosophy, "We Can't Pay, We Won't Pay" will be presented by The Manhattan Civic Theatre at 8 p.m. today, Friday and Saturday.

The play is set in a working class neighborhood in Milan, in the present (give or take 10 years). It is a pure political farce, raising questions of gravity surrounded by hilarious fast-paced dialogue and all the physical humor of the Commedia d'el Arte.

In fact, this comedy is presented in vaudeville style, complete with runway and footlights, and delightful Italian songs leading into each of the two acts.

In true Italian tradition, the action revolves around food and hunger. The women of this neighborhood, disgusted at the seemingly arbitrary raising of food prices, decide to set their own, refusing to pay more than last year's prices, or simply refusing to pay.

In an attempt to hide the new abundance of food from their "law-abiding," "Eurocommunist" husbands, and from the police, they shove the food under their clothes, inventing a new saint, the patron saint of pregnancy. With much reverie and confusion, involving infant transplants and miracles, this is a comedy which is intent on opening a few eyes.

Namely, the eyes of Giovanni, one of the gullible husbands, so that he can see clearly the graft in the government he is so loyal to, and in a broader sense, it is intent on raising questions in the minds of the audience.

While discussing her son's moving out, Antonia warns that he can never escape "the compound," which is symbolic of the government.

Fo is the author of 32 plays, which have been produced in 14 countries. While linked to the far left of Italian politics and often considered alternately an anarchist and a Marxist, he is a modern-day example of the true Renaissance man.

He was a student of architecture and painting when he founded an acting company with his wife in 1959. In much the same spirit, two of K-State's faculty members are involved in this production.

Hamilton has taught in the philosophy department for 17 years. In answer to a query from the Manhattan Civic Theatre for play suggestions, he recommended this play. Although he has not directed a play for several years, he agreed to direct this one.

He attributes his return to directing to an interest in the satirical statements made by Fo in this piece. He does an excellent job of bringing these messages out, without flouting the audience with them or disturbing the natural comedic tone of the play.

David Cox, professor of biochemistry and head of the department, gives a similar reason for his involvement.

When asked what the play's main political statement was, Cox said, "Little guys, by and large get the short end of the stick and they can fight back."

Cox gives a funny, well-timed protrayal of Giovanni, who manages to be gullible and stubborn at the same time.

His crafty wife is played well by Nancy Wuertz. Playing Margherita, a "southern" Italian, is Mary Williams. She is complemented by her husband, Luigi, played by Gale Fulte. Wuertz, Williams and Fulte are Manhattan residents.

Also appearing and appearing and reappearing is J.C. Harmen, senior in theater, who graces not one, but five roles. Each is delightfully distinct with his own clever personality.

The difficulty of Harmen's quick change is made light of in several comments to the audience, but this only serves to punctuate her style and talent. Her favorite character is the Carabiniere Lieutenant, modeled after a Keystone cop, because as she puts it, "He's just so dumb."

This weekend are the final performances. Ticket prices are $4 for students, $5 for adults.

MAKING DECISIONS

Student weds, starts new life

Last October, Jennifer (Whisker) Hoss was pretty sure what the outcome of the test she took at Lafemme Clinic in Lafene Student Health Center would be before she received the results.

"I basically knew I was pregnant when I had the test done. All the signs were there," she said. "It was funny because the people at the clinic were so careful in preparing me for the news. It was as if they expected me to break down and cry. I am guessing that has happened a lot before. But it didn't happen with me. I was pretty calm."

"The news does hit you though, even though you're sure," she said.

"I would never advise anyone to get married just because of a pregnancy. It puts a strain on a relationship."
—Jennifer Hoss

Jennifer discovered she was pregnant while living in Moore Hall. She was unmarried at the time, but she and her boyfriend, Dan Hoss, had been thinking about getting married. The two married in January.

"When I called Dan to tell him I was pregnant, he already seemed to know," she said. "He said, 'So, are we going to have a baby?'"

"When we told our parents I was pregnant, they were surprised, but supportive. They really wanted us to get married," she said.

Hoss said she received mixed reactions about her pregnancy from people she knew.

"There were people who were against me having the baby and thought I should have an abortion. But those were people I wasn't very close to," she said. "All of my close friends and family were very supportive of me and my decision. My roommate even wanted to make an addition to our dorm room for the baby."

"You can really tell the people who are going to stick by you."

Hoss is currently a junior in secondary education. She is now a student at Manhattan Christian College because the only way she could break her housing contract to move out of Moore Hall was to drop out of K-State.

"My husband and I wanted to get an apartment, but the housing department said they wouldn't break my contract unless we lived in Jardine or I dropped out of K-State."

Hoss said she knew she wanted to keep the baby, even if she hadn't gotten married and had to face the pregnancy alone.

"I never doubted that I wanted the baby. I could never have had an abortion."

After making the decision to marry, Hoss said that on one occasion she asked her boyfriend whether or not he was just marrying her because of the baby.

"He just laughed because he thought I was being ridiculous," Hoss said. "But I would never advise anyone to get married because of a pregnancy. It really puts strain on a relationship. If two people don't love each other, their marriage won't last."

When she began attending MCC this semester, Hoss said that as she began to show her pregnancy, rumours about her circulated around the school. One day a student confronted Hoss and asked her if she was pregnant. When she told her yes, some students' attitudes toward Hoss changed.

"People wouldn't sit by me, they were shocked. I guess people didn't want to associate with someone they felt had 'fallen from grace,'" she said. "I guess it's just the way people are brought up."

Hoss said her teachers and friends at MCC have been very supportive of her, however.

"Everyone has been really nice and positive about what is happening," she said.

Hoss' husband is in the army and is currently in basic training in New Jersey. She receives medical care and benefits through Irwin Army Hospital in Fort Riley.

"I attend Lamaze classes sponsored by the health department, but just about everything is covered through army benefits," she said. "Having a baby is expensive, so I am really lucky."

Hoss, who is expecting her baby in June, said there are many stages and changes during a pregnancy.

"I've decided that there are three turning points in a pregnancy. The first is finding out you are pregnant. The second is when you buy your first maternity dress. And the third is being able to set a glass on your stomach," she said.

"I also go to baby stores a lot now," she said. "And I always wind up going to the baby sections in stores.

"Both of our families are excited about the baby. As I get bigger, the anticipation also grows."

Jennifer Hoss, former K-State student and and a junior at Manhattan Christian College, married in January after she learned she was pregnant in October.

Unwed student shares thoughts during pregnancy

It is a story that is retold thousands of times each year. Boy meets girl. Girl becomes pregnant. Boy disappears. The following are excerpts from a diary of one such girl. She is a senior at K-State who is trying to graduate despite the unexpected turn of events in her life. She is not special, she is another statistic.

ENTRY

I am feeling so many feelings now I can't even begin to think straight. When the doctor told me I was pregnant, it was as though my world stopped while everyone around me continued to go on with their uncomplicated lives.

ENTRY

There are so many decisions to make. Should I finish school or find a full-time job. God, what about my parents, my friends ... what about me? How's father going to react. I have a distinct feeling this will be a solo act. The way I look at it I have three choices. I could have an abortion, carry the child to term and give up my child for adoption, or I could keep the child. Well, abortion is out. I think everyone deserves a choice but the decision is something you have to live with and I can't live with that.

ENTRY

I went to the health department today. I asked them what resources I have available. Actually they were quite helpful and understanding. I also went to my parent's house and for two hours I tried to tell my mom. I just don't want to hurt her. The way I look at it, if I tell her now, then she will be there if I need her. If I tell her at the last possible moment, I probably won't be able to talk to her much. My dad is a different story. Dads are always scary, no matter what you say.

ENTRY

I am so tired, just getting up to go to classes wears me down. I seem to sleep all the time, no energy to study and no energy to relax. You know, when I used to see a young person pregnant that I knew wasn't married, I thought what a slut, doesn't she know about birth control. Boy is her life over. I just want to stand up and say, "I am not a bad person, I didn't mean to get pregnant."

ENTRY

I told my mom. What a relief. I couldn't believe her reaction. I was crying and she was calm. She told me I had to make a decision that I could live with for the rest of my life. It did hurt when she said it didn't surprise her. I am a responsible person and it's not like I didn't use birth control. Nothing is 100 percent safe. She said she would tell Dad at the right time. I want my father's respect so much, but I always fall short of being something he could be proud of.
